Following the busy Spring season this firm is preparing an extensive and varied line for Fall. Their new factory facilities, corner Montcalm and St. Catherine streets, Montreal, ensure prompt deliveries. They show a strong range of high-class lace waists and jumpers in all popular models in silk materials. As an example of their output their selling organization has been strengthened, and the following eight men will show the range: H. S. Arnold, Harvey Shepherd, F. W. Irwin, G. A. Whelpley, W. Magnard, E. S. Wadsworth, S. R. Weir and J. C. Abell. They will cover all Canada.

Old Bleach.

The way in which the trade is growing on this make of linen is very gratifying to the manufacturers. Old Bleach linens are rapidly becoming a standard article in the trade, and a retailer who places a trial order is sure to repeat. Customers now recognize the trademark and the salesman has only to show Old Bleach stamped on the article to silence all comment as to quality and wear. A feature of the Spring business has been the number of duplicate orders received—that is, the order given for Spring delivery has been repeated item by item for the Summer trade. The Old Bleach embroidery linens have been in specially great demand. Ladies who embroider household articles, and also articles of dress, such as blouses, parasol covers, children's dresses, etc., are very partial to Old Bleach. It contains no dressing or chemical, and the needle slips easily through. The linen is woven with the warp and weft threads of equal size, making a perfectly square stitch. Also because of its gloss and silkiness this linen is a big favorite. Towels are a special line, and never before in the history of the trade have so many, or such high priced, towels been sold.

A New Belt Line.

The Review was shown the other day a very extensive sample line of high-class belts that was thoroughly up to standard in design, workmanship, and in the fabrics employed, and that was at the same time—value considered—strictly moderate as to price. The line was most complete in all prices, and just as complete and in as good values in the cheaper grades to retail at popular prices as in the expensive lines to retail at $5 and over. These belts are of French design and of British workmanship, and show the very latest ideas for the early Fall and the holiday trade. Elastics are a marked feature of the line, and the latest effects shown are jet studded. The majority of the belts are built up of narrow silk elastic studded with jet points, and manipulated into handsome belts with cut jet and beaded ornaments and buckles. The jet is absolutely fast, as each bead is sewn on separately. Many models shown are in the new girdle effect, and are high in the back and pointed in front. A novelty line in wide silk elastics in pretty Dresdens and in a big range of colors, and with handsome backpieces and buckles are shown. These belts can be laid down in Canada and sold at a very moderate price. There is a splendid line of tinsel elastics that should be an extremely good seller for the Fall and the holiday trade. The elastics are of dull, rich gold and silver grey, and are of various widths, worked up into many handsome models with new designs in back ornaments and buckles. Many of the buckles are of the new high pattern, and the majority of the belts in this line can be retailed at good profit at popular prices. Some beautiful belts in velvet elastics in high-priced goods are shown, the back mounts, ornaments and buckles being chiefly of polished silver, jewel-studded and are veritable works of art. If any retailer is adding a jewelry section to his departments he will be specially interested in these belts. Dodd Bros., Colborne street, are the Canadian agents for this line.

Greenshields, Limited.

The various departments of Greenshields, Limited, Montreal, are showing great activity in turning out Spring orders. Orders have never been better. Travelers report satisfactory conditions throughout the Dominion, and are enthusiastic over their fine display of Fall samples.

In the ready-to-wear departments there is a strong demand for white shirt waists, in combination embroidery and lace effects. These lines have had a tremendous sale, bringing in many large repeats from all sections. This clearly indicates that the demand will increase as the season advances. They (Greenshields) are in a position to look after the wants of their customers. They also have a complete range of whitewear. Special values are shown in all lines in demand. They strongly advise their customers to place repeat orders early, as the market is bound to be depleted in all lines of goods. White cambrics, lawns, etc., (also where embroidery and lace is used for trimmings) should be looked after at once. It is impossible, even with an advance of as high as 25 per cent., to get deliveries before Fall of 1907.

Now that the retail carpet trade is in full swing this firm would draw attention of the trade to the fact, that anything in the carpet and house furnishing lines can be had from them at the shortest notice. Their large and varied stock affords the best selection in the trade. Carpets, oilcloths, linoleums, curtains, squares of all grades, mattings, cretonnes, art muslins, pillows and cushions are shown in the latest designs. Merchants would do well to inspect this stock, as there is everything to please and prices are right.

The silk department reports splendid conditions at present, with demand strong for taffetas, Jap. silks, especially Shantungs, in the natural shades. English tussores in blacks and various colorings are all selling well. Inquiry is made for velveteens and they are doing well on advance order business. In colors grey, navy and brown are selling better than ever. English silks have advanced one-third in price and the other various lines from 20 pet cent to 25 per cent.

In department E, the hosiery stock is now complete, consisting of plain and ribbed cotton effects. Lace ankle and all-over lace styles are doing well in blacks, whites and tans. They also have a full range of plain and embroidered lisles. Prices range from $2.25 to $12.50.

The dress goods department will furnish electros of the special Priestley fabrics illustrated. These cuts are a decided aid in retail advertising.

L. Hirshson & Co.

This firm has secured the sole agency for Canada for the Parisian Novelty Company, manufacturers of hair ornaments, New York. As an example of the value of this agency their range of fancy back and side combs may be cited. As opposed to the ordinary fancy comb with brass strips and settings liable to come out, they make gilt engraved goods and the settings are put in the comb. In this way it is impossible for the hair, veil, or hands to disturb the setting as it is in the comb. This is a feature of all their goods, and across the line they have been appreciated by the trade. The Canadian agents look for a large business. This firm is now carrying a full range of ladies', men's and children's hose, in black, tan and white. The range comprises full lines of cottons, lisles, cashmeres and silks in plain rib, openwork and embroidered goods. They are also showing for immediate delivery, lines of ladies' and men's underwear. As usual, their stock of Jap silk printed handkerchiefs is the largest in the trade. Manufacturers who have jobs to offer should always communicate with this firm. They are arranging their Montreal headquarters, 4 Dollard street, opposite St. Helen street, so as to accommodate a larger stock.

The Montreal Waterproof Clothing Co.

Almost imperceptibly the Montreal Waterproof Clothing Co., Montreal, the largest and oldest manufacturers of ladies' and men's raincoats in the Dominion, have been drifting into the clothing business. The result has been a decided change in the policy of this firm and besides their usual strong range of raincoats they are showing for the Fall season a specialty line in men's suits and overcoats. This firm have unusual manufacturing facilities and have taken an adjoining factory on Papineau avenue, to guarantee prompt and efficient deliveries. Their organization is complete in every detail.

In men's suits they confine their attention to popular priced garments from $5 to $10, and overcoats from $5 to $15. At these prices they invite competition. One of their salesmen will be glad to call upon request.

The Japan Trading Co.

The feeling in favor of Japanese goods in Canada is exemplified by the presence of a new specialty firm in this line. The Japan Trading Co., is the style of the new firm, with Canadian headquarters at 301 St. James St., Montreal, and home office and buying headquarters in Kobe, Japan. K. Harrima, formerly with K. Ishikawa & Co., Toronto, for nearly seven years, is the proprietor of the new firm. The house is organized to deal exclusively in Japanese fancy goods. Their buying facilities place them in a position to supply many exclusive novelties, and, judging from the import samples now on view, they should secure a share of this trade. Their lines include all varieties of antimony, lacquered and bronze wares, as well as baskets of every description and Japanese curios. They invite inspection of their samples at the Montreal offices.

John Macdonald & Co.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, Toronto, report an advance of 20 per cent. on all lines of British printed linoleums and floor oilcloths and beg to state they are well prepared to meet this very heavy advance and that they are still selling all their well known lines at old prices. They report the arrival of seventeen new designs in C inlaid linoleums, two of them being 2-inch block designs in blue and white and green and white, for hall and bathroom use. They have received three large shipments this month of 16-4 linoleums and floor oilcloths, and are in a position to fill the largest demands. They have passed into stock two clearing lines of 8-4 linoleums, one at 30c. sq. yd., and the other at 35c. sq. yd., which they say are exceptional values. They have a line of 12 designs of 2-yd. wide British floor oilcloth, at 17½c. sq. yd. They have in stock "plank" pattern floor oilcloths and linoleums in five qualities. They report an active demand for these novelties. Their new lines of heavy cork carpets, in brown and green shades, have arrived. They report the hemp carpet market an impossible one to buy in, but state that they still have a few pieces of new goods to sell at old prices.. The Review found their carpet department literally filled with new Spring carpets, carpet squares and rugs, and they report an active demand for these lines. They are showing Moquette carpet squares in large sizes, goods that are new to this market. They have a beautiful range of seamless velvet carpet squares in six sizes, in stock. They state that their tapestry square trade has been much larger this season than in former years and that they are showing five ranges of these goods, in forty-four designs and in seven sizes. They are showing the largest and best range of these useful carpets in the trade. They are controlling the sale of each line of "Medallion pattern" Brussels squares, which are the most handsome goods of this class seen, and should prove ready sellers. They state they have one thousand "Alberta" Axminster rugs in two sizes, in stock, which they are selling at old prices. The new designs in Crossley's Dag-Dag Wilton rugs have been passed into stock, and this firm also report a good demand for seamless Wilton hall runners, 1 yd. wide by 3 yds. long, and 1 yd. wide by 4 yds. long.

They say they have passed into stock this week 3,000 pairs of lace curtains, from 37½c. per pair to $2.50, which they are selling at old prices. These goods are being picked up rapidly on account of the advances on all cotton goods. Their new tapestry curtains are in stock and include lines from $1.85 per pair to magnificent velour portieres at $25 per pair. They are showing three leading lines in Swiss curtains at $2.25, $2.50 and $3.00 per pair.

W. Liddell & Co.

Wm. Liddell & Co.'s new illustrated catalogue and price list is now to hand, and a copy has been sent to each buyer of Liddell's linens in Canada. Should, through any inadvertance, any buyer have been omitted, or should any retailer desire one of these catalogues, he should make application to R. Cosbie, the Irish Linen Agency. Considering the state of the linen market, advances in this firm's line have been very moderate, and a strongly marked tendency of their trade is the increasing business done in high-class goods. These, in Liddell's goods, come at a high figure,

PLEASE MENTION
THE DRY GOODS REVIEW

but are freely taken now in Canada. Many buyers, when placing their Spring orders, wisely duplicated them in every item for May delivery, making sure of their goods, and also getting the benefit of the later advances that have taken place since their orders were given.

Corset Shields.

The corset shield advertised this month by Daniel Hone, of Chiswell street, E.C., London, merits the attention of buyers. Compared with the ordinary corset shield with steel supports, it has many advantages, inasmuch as the real whalebone, from which it derives its strength and flexibility, secures the wearer against rust, breakage and injury. The manufacturer of this shield being a whalebone specialist, and one of the largest London buyers of this product, has been able to place this article on the market at a very favorable price considering its quality and durability.

Debenhams (Canada) Limited, Toronto.

Retailers who buy silks from Debenhams are probably hardly aware of the many difficulties of the present situation, for it is only at present that their customers are beginning to feel the effects of the rise. Up to the present this firm has had old contracts to help them and manufacturers have had old purchases of silk at their disposal. Now an increase of 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. is most usual. Debenhams report that there seems no sign of the market weakening, but, on the contrary, each day brings higher prices, and the present high level will be fully maintained. The demand is so strong for raw silk that the manufacturers, though willing to pay the price, cannot get deliveries, and the next trouble will be with deliveries of goods.

This firm finds silk fabrics in high demand with fashion favoring soft makes, and they would specially draw attention to their paillette ideal, armure princesse, merv. supreme, satin supreme, ondoyant. Ideal taffeta continues to have an enormous sale, and in spite of the state of the market they are determined to maintain its standard of quality, and to be right up to date in the matter of shades. It is early to give a final expression as to the high novelty in fancy silks, but the following articles will be certainly sought after: Pekin taffetas, check taffetas, tartan taffetas, louisines, tartan messalines, Pekin satin and taffeta, louisine and taffeta chines in light and dark shades, shot effects in striped, checked and figured taffetas, gris-aille louisines and white and black mixtures.

Debenhams have a full representation in the leading makes of white silks. In taffetas they would point to taffeta ideal, eclipse, unrivalled, taffeta charmant, SS. perfecta, and to all silk duchesse for gowns and to stripes and small figures in fancies. Blacks are in good demand in all the leading makes, and there is an excellent trade in taffeta chiffon, and a growing enquiry for double width soft satins. Taffeta supreme and taffeta splendour in three widths, are two special fabrics that this firm have great confidence in.

In British-made laces shown by Debenhams, net all-overs are particularly good value. Point d'esprit laces, with all-over to match, are a line largely ordered for blouse making. The leading laces, they find, are filet guipure, nets with filet border, Irish, Cluny, vals. and malines, net all-overs and Irish all-overs being particularly good. Retailers must note that all laces are net.

This firm warns the trade that ribbon manufacturers are full of orders, and that prices are high, and delivery time for goods very long. The demand for colored failletine and firm taffeta ribbons is greater than the supply, and it will take some time to get level with orders in hand. For the Winter trade failletines remain good, shots will be in demand, and velvet ribbons are improving. The leading ribbon colors will be, taupe bois de rose, reseda, gobelin, chinchilla, ivy green, navy, brown, myrtle, helio, and a new Bordeaux.

This firm, in presenting their Fall range of samples, state that the wool market continues very firm, and, according to the best information, there is very little sign of any fall in price, at any rate their year. Plain cloths, Debenhams believe, will make a good showing, and would call attention again to their most popular number, drap superb. This cloth is unsurpassed in its class, when price is considered, for range of color, clearness of dye, and permanency of finish. The only change this season is due to the fact that the firm's shrinker has instructions to shrink the cloth regardless of width, and it now comes up narrower in consequence. There has been nothing taken out of it. There is also a small advance in price, but considering the fact that this is the first advance made on drap superb during the whole of the continued serious rise, it is still quite as cheap as last year. Drap chiffon is another of their standard cloths, and owing to advantageous contracts they are still able to maintain it at the old price. They anticipate a bigger demand than ever this Autumn, as there is no doubt that amazons in all colorings will be a big feature. The range of shades has also been considerably increased.

Drap de Paris is a new French cloth this firm is introducing. It is guaranteed shrunk and unspottable, and should find a ready sale in Canada. The 301 Venetian, shrunk and unspottable is shown in several new colors, and as this firm have placed a big contract, they hope to keep it at the same price all through the season. Serges are very strong in London, and Debenhams "Atlantic" series are doubling trade in the home market this season, and the ranges SG 150, 199, 375 and 397 are unique and unbeatable. In selling this cloth always remember that the dye is pure indigo, which enhances the value 6 cents per yard over ordinary fast blues. The collection of tweeds this firm are showing, both of English and Scotch makes, is greater than ever and contains some very fine designs. In blacks there is a much stronger feeling for the silky class of goods, and Debenhams' Fall range is extensive in this direction.

The W. R. Brock Co., Toronto.

In Her Ladyship department one is surprised to see the stock carried of scarce goods, and here the merchants are daily getting the goods they have been waiting for from other sources for the last few months. In whitewear especially the W. R. Brock Co. are daily passing lines into stock, and by the 15th of this month their stock will again be fairly complete. Merchants in need of these goods can get a full line, at prices of nine months ago. They are rapidly being sold for delivery from now till the 1st of June, and as they are sold are laid aside for shipment. It therefore behooves anyone wanting these goods to act quickly. In white waists, ranging from $9 to $36 per dozen, they will be in a position to give delivery on or about the 15th of April, and as their line will be, without exception, the most up-to-date in the trade, there will also be a scramble for these after the orders have all been filled. Her Ladyship line of over-skirts and mantles will be on the road for Fall in the course of a week or two, and judging from the way the advance styles are taken up the season will be a heavy one in these goods. Deliveries of ready-to-wear goods have not been what they should have been the past season, owing to the state of the market, and the manager of this department for the W. R. Brock Company takes this opportunity of thanking the many customers for their patience and friendly spirit.

In laces the assortment, the values, the novelties, make the buyer who visits Brock's warehouse feel that he is in the right place to buy his laces. Fine vals., edgings, insertions, all-overs, torchons, chantillys, maltese, orientals, etc., can be secured in endless variety and at all prices. They also show some special carton lots which are just the thing for a merchant requiring a good assortment of vals. or torchons for a very small outlay. In long, undressed kid gloves they have in stock black, white and greys at popular prices. Rainproof mantles are shown in the latest styles and patterns, all made first-class. In men's rainproof coats their "Torpedo," to retail at $6, is very active on account of its being such A1 value. Umbrellas for the rainy season you must have. Send to Brock's for sample dozen of them. Men's self-openers to retail at $1.

The embroidery section of the W.

R Brock Co. is unusually attractive this season. Although embroideries are scarce, Brock's never had a larger assortment of cambric, nainsook and Swiss muslin edgings, insertions, all-overs and matched sets. Their buyer visited St. Gall early and was able to get prompt deliveries, and values which cannot now be secured without paying from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. higher. In addition to their regular stock lines they have on sale about fifty cartons of special imports, a surplus lot after their import orders were filled, which they are offering at very special prices and are choice, "up-to-the-second" goods. Write for a carton of : BF2, corset cover embroidery and strapping to match ; BF5, nainsook and batiste wide novelty insertions ; BF9, 18 and 22 inch all-over embroideries ; BF10, nainsook baby matched sets ; BF15, novel and fashionable effects in cambric and muslin embroideries, 33 styles ; BF17, matched sets, comprising broderie Anglaise, semi-blind and baby Irish and all the latest effects—32 styles.

The men's furnishings department has just opened up a large shipment of men's negligee shirts. These are very scarce goods and are special values to retail at 50c., 75c. and $1. They are also showing three special lines of men's tweed pants to retail at $1, $1.25 and $1.50, which are much below regular prices. A very large range of fancy half-hose in embroidered and fancy stripes, prices of which are much below the present market are now in stock. All sizes in Bunson tan kid gloves are now in stock again. This line is extra value to retail at $1.

The Wise Dry Goods Man.

He pushes business, of course, and keeps well stocked in new lines. But he does more. He keeps close tab of stocks on hand and sees that these do not become unsalable nor obsolete. If, perchance, he finds a line, where the shade has not caught the popular fancy, he sends such fabrics to these works to be re-dyed and finished in some popular or always staple shade.

—So he does with soiled, shelf-worn or faded lines, and he has probably learned with what success we re-dye and clean fine plumes and feathers of his Millinery Stock.

MEN AND METHODS

Bargain Sales are Frequent in Owen Sound — Some Merchants Stick to Steady Methods — A Wiarton Merchant Who Issues a Catalogue and Does a Good Mail Order Business - Other Interesting Notes.

OWEN SOUND'S GOOD STORES.

Owen Sound has a population of about 12,000, and a suburb, Brook, about 2,000. It has not yet been incorporated as a city. The town supports eight dry goods stores, which, taken as a whole, are among the most up-to-date that we have visited. They would do credit to a much larger place. With so many merchants in the one line of business, competition is naturally very keen. About a year ago the ratepayers carried a local option by-law. One of the leading hotels was purchased by a syndicate of temperance men, who are demonstrating that a first-class service can be profitably given the traveling public at reasonable rates, without the aid of a bar. We have been told that local option has hurt business in the town, but we were unable to discover in what way this might be so. If a certain class of men cannot spend money over a bar they and their families must have more of it for other purposes, and merchants will get the benefit. However, feeling favorable and unfavorable to present conditions runs so high that it would not be fair to expect any of the drygoodsmen to speak for publication.

STOOD PAT ON REGULAR PRICES.

McKay Bros., Owen Sound, have only been in business for about eighteen months, but they seem to be well satisfied with the trade which they have attracted, and they speak optimistically of the prospects for development. They have attempted no bargain sales but those necessary to clear out stock at the end of a season, and they state their intention of sticking closely to the steady method of merchandising. "Last year, all during what we called 'the dry goods war' we stood pat, and the results were very satisfactory," said one member of the firm. "While other stores sold ten-cent Crum's prints at ten cents, we maintained our price at twelve and a half cents, and did good business in the face of bargain competition. Our principle is to sell all seasonable goods at a reasonable profit."

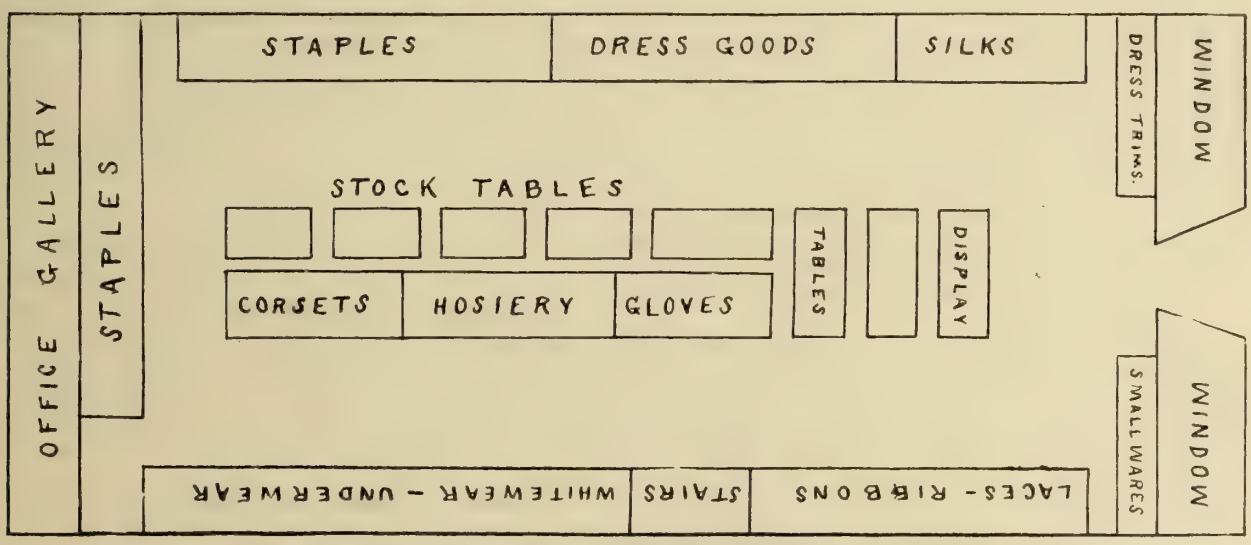

Diagram Showing Main Floor Arrangement of Ryan Bros. Store, Owen Sound.

A STORE PUBLICATION.

W. W. Mann & Co., of Stittsville, Ont., issue a little paper, which they call "The Home Economist." Its object, of course, is to advertise the general store business of the publishers, who, along with a lot of good ads. devoted to their various departments, run a number of interesting local items and selected paragraphs. The last number that we have received is dated April 8. It is printed on good paper and contains a number of up-to-date fashion cuts. During last Winter this firm offered prizes to farmers bringing to their store the largest sleigh-loads of ladies from the surrounding district. Three photo engravings in the latest number show loads of seventy-one, forty-eight and thirty-one. W. W. Mann & Co. must have offered pretty substantial prizes to arouse such enthusiasm. The paper is published "Now and again, in the interests of better business and closer acquaintance. Subscription price, your attention, payable by reading fifteen minutes."

LOCAL STORE ISSUES CATALOGUE

D. D. Stewart & Co., of Wiarton, are the only firm in that town closing at ten o'clock Saturday night. Formerly they kept open for business until about twelve o'clock. "One Saturday," said Mr. Stewart to The Review, "a lady, wheeling a baby carriage, came in at 11.20 p.m. to make some purchases. That was too much, and I at once stated that a change would be made the following week. We announced our intention of closing at ten o'clock sharp, in the next issue of the local paper. Credits are watched very closely. In the ready-to-wear department no suits are carried, and as few alterations have to be made no charge is exacted for them.

Some other merchants said we were foolish ; that we would lose business ; that the same thing had been attempted before and could not be continued. We closed at ten the next week and have done so ever since. A little business may have been lost at the start, but it was not long before all of our customers found it convenient to do all their buying in the shorter hours. Now, I hope before very long to be able to close at nine o'clock every Saturday night. I think it can be done without injuring business."

Stewart & Co. have a thoroughly up-to-date store in which their clientele should find it a pleasure to make their purchases. The windows are well trimmed and the lighting is excellent. Table counters are used all through. Mr. Stewart likes these because there is no place about them for rubbish to accumulate.

Ready-to-wear trade is expanding nicely. There is a fitting room in connection with the department. For all but minor alterations a charge is made. Millinery pays a profit.

Mr. Stewart looks upon the operations of catalogue houses as legitimate competition, and he combats them in the same spirit as he would any other legitimate competition. He feels that every local merchant doing business on the right lines should be able to keep his trade at home. Of course, there are a certain number of people who will always send away for quantities of goods no matter what attractions the local market holds out to them.

Stewart & Co. are working up a splendid mail order business of their own. In the first place, circulars were sent all through the surrounding district, explaining the plan, and Mr. Stewart spent a good deal of time calling personally on a large number of people. "Yes, we send to Toronto, but would much rather buy from you," he was told in many cases. Then he got out a catalogue giving a full list of all the lines that he carries, with prices. Its size is twenty-four pages, 8x6 inches. Not only does he bid for patronage on dry goods lines, but he offers to accept and execute orders for any class of goods—groceries, boots and shoes, etc.—that can be purchased in the town, and he guarantees that everything shall be satisfactory. Any article not up to the mark may be returned. Only once has anything been sent back.

"A good many merchants do not look after their customers closely enough," said Mr. Stewart. "I have a map of the town, know where everyone lives and study their requirements. As a result I am able to occasionally send them special advertising matter, with very good effect. I believe in good advertising, and anything that I get out in the shape of catalogues, circulars, etc., must be well printed on good paper, and, altogether, of such a nature that they will do credit to the store."

This firm is thinking of going into the manufacture, in a small way, of ready-to-wear garments. A staff of dressmakers could be employed and when not busy on orders they could work on garments to be put in stock. Mr. Stewart thinks this a good way to make a dressmaking department profitable.

A SIXTEEN-DAY SALE.

R. H. Benson & Co., Owen Sound, are located in the new Kilbourn block, which is 120 feet deep and 34 feet wide, interior measurement. The floor of the main section is of concrete.

The firm does a cash business, and would not care to go back to the credit system, with which it formerly had considerable experience.

The lines handled are general dry goods, boots and shoes, ready-to-wear garments, house-furnishings, and men's and boys' clothing.

The day The Review visited this store preparations were being made for a sixteen-day sale to begin the following morning. Following are some extracts from the announcement which appeared in the local papers : "Our sixteen-day sale starts on the morning of April 12, and will continue until the end of the month, April 30. Every department will be represented. All lines of goods will be sold regardless of what they cost. Thousands of dollars worth of merchandise will be simply slaughtered. Hundreds of dollars worth to be sold at half the original cost. Never mind our reasons for doing this. Read every item on this sheet, then come in and look at the bargains. You will say there has been nothing like it in Owen Sound before. Below we give you a few of the lines that will be sacrificed. * * * This sale will be conducted on honest principles. We want all purchasers to be satisfied. We are here to stay in this town, and we are looking for future business. No goods allowed out on approval. Our terms will be strictly cash and one price to all."

STEADY METHODS BEST.

H. C. Moore & Co., Owen Sound, occupy one floor of a corner block, the second and third floors accommodating the Wolfe Mfg. Co., carpets, rugs and house-furnishings. Entrance to the premises of the latter is gained through the dry goods store.

H. C. Moore & Co. do a cash and credit business. Accounts are rendered monthly. In speaking of the prevalence of cut-price sales in Owen Sound, Mr. Smith said that some lines were sold for considerable periods at actual cost. This has a very bad effect on the trade in general, and he believed every merchant would be better off if steadier methods of merchandising were followed.

The Wolfe Co. carries a stock of about $20,000.

WOULD LIKE EARLIER CLOSING.

Ryan Bros., of Owen Sound, put up a new store building in 1905. It is three storeys high and exceeding-well appointed throughout. The general appearance is one of roominess and up-to-dateness, and, altogether, this firm may well be proud of the premises in which they have housed their business. The accompanying diagram shows the arrangement of departments on the ground floor.

A noticeable feature is the liberal use of show-cases and tables. To made room for some of the latter one whole section of counter shelving near the entrance was removed, and the counter down one side of the centre row of departments has been dispensed with for the same purpose. This indicates a firm belief in getting as many goods as possible out where customers can see and examine them readily. The top of the counter shelving is used to good advantage for display, and the trims are well done.

A drinking tap in a handy location is a great convenience, especially in the hot weather.

This business is practically on a cash basis, credit being granted only to customers who are known to be perfectly good. As a result there is no loss through bad debts.

Stock boxes are used for both hosiery and gloves. Parcels are sent out through a local delivery service, which is held responsible for any goods which may go astray. The store closes at 6 o'clock ordinarily, and 10 o'clock Saturday nights. Mr. Ryan would like to see an earlier closing hour on Saturdays, and has advocated the carrying out of this idea.

A charge is made for all alterations in ready-to-wear garments. Millinery is a good department, as also is housefurnishings.

In discussing advertising methods with The Review, Mr. Ryan stated that goods should be described in as much comprehensive detail as possible, prices should be given; and when people call for the goods they should be found exactly as advertised.

For some weeks several lines have been put out as leaders at this store every Friday.

"We do what we say" is the motto of Ryan Bros., and it appears in all of their advertising matter.

WON'T COMPETE IN CUTTING PRICES.

W. T. Lee, of Owen Sound, has a neat, well-appointed store, and he does not believe in cutting prices, except on goods that it is advisable to clear out. "When some of the other stores engaged in a bargain war last year, we went right ahead and sold at regular figures, and we did not find that our usual steady trade was interfered with in the slightest."

Millinery is an important line with this store. It pays a good profit.

WILL IMPORT NO MORE GOODS.

W. Symon & Sons, of Wiarton, have two adjoining stores, in one of which they carry men's wear, boots and shoes, and a small stock of groceries, with house-furnishings upstairs, and in the other general dry goods, with millinery, ready-to-wear garments and dressmaking upstairs. The store throughout has a neat appearance. A good deal of attention is given to window displays.

In discussing market conditions, Mr. Symon, Jr., stated that the firm would import no more goods.

Millinery does not pay a profit, but it is a good drawing card. The department is in competent hands and the buying is watched very closely. The dressmaker is not employed by the store; she receives work-rooms, light and heat free, and whatever profit she can make is her own. The firm is well satisfied with this arrangement.

Tables are used quite extensively for display.

The catalogue houses do not send so much stuff into Wiarton as they formerly did, so we were told by Mr. Symon. He went on to speak of the prices which these concerns get and those received by local merchants. Their competition need not be feared by a merchant who does business on up-to-date principles. He saw some linoleum in a Toronto department store some time ago, marked, "90 cents, reduced from $1.10." He sells the same article at 90 cents regular price.

A SALE OF NECESSITY.

T. E. Vanstone, of Owen Sound, held a big bargain sale, lasting from April 17 to 27. Two pages in each of the local papers were required to accommodate his announcement, which was also made through half-sheet circulars printed in a flaming red. It was one of the most extraordinary that we have ever seen. Following are some extracts: "$10,000 must be raised in ten days. Beginning Wednesday, April 17, up to Saturday night, April 27, we hold a Sale of Necessity. This sale is not one of our own choice, but an absolute Sale of Necessity. When we opened up our new big store a year ago we added $20,000 to our stock and arranged our credit at the bank to pay for this in cash, which places us at all times in the very closest market with the best makers. We intended keeping within this limit, but with the prices going up on everything with leaps and bounds, we placed on order three to six months ago immense blocks of goods, which we find, on the first of April, amounted to over $75,000. This gigantic stock could not be purchased to-day by any retail house for less than ten to twenty-five per cent. more than we bought it at. But this does not satisfy the bank, which must be paid by the first of May or Vanstone's Credit Goes. You see our position in a nutshell. It is Sink or Swim. We were not long in determining what to do. We have the largest stock ever brought into Owen Sound by any one house. $10,000 will be but a flea bite out of it. Ten days of Slaughter Prices. Ten days of hustle, with a big crowd of anxious buyers. Ten days of great opportunity for your every Spring need, and Vanstone's Credit is Saved, and the big store will continue better than ever to fill your needs. Don't forget the sale starts Wednesday, April 17, at nine o'clock sharp.

"Store closed Monday and Tuesday, April 15 and 16, to mark down and prepare this gigantic stock for the big sale.

"Our reputation is back of this great sale and every article will be sold on its merits. Don't let bad weather keep you away. We are making it worth your while to surmount any obstacle. A month later you will pay twenty-five to fifty per cent more for most articles.

"Let nothing keep you away from the sale. It will pay you to drive twenty-five miles rather than miss it. The crowds may jostle you, but the stock is large, and if you are patient you will have your needs supplied. Remember, nothing will be reserved—every article—every yard—every stick and pin will be offered. A large force of extra salespeople will be engaged to enable quick buying. Look out for the large red cards.

"We will gladly hand back your money for anything you buy if you are not perfectly satisfied. This sale is not our choice. We could save money by locking up the goods for six months, but the bank must be paid."

A copy of Vanstone's ad. has been handed over to our advertising critic.

Last year Mr. Vanstone added two storeys to the rear of his building, which formerly was three storeys high, to a depth of fifty feet, the first storey extending back one hundred and twenty feet. He occupies all three floors. In the main section are hosiery, underwear, corsets, ribbons, neckwear, belts, dress goods, silks, staples, a case of fancy china and a ladies' rest room; on the first floor, millinery and ready-to-wear garments, and on the second, carpets, rugs, curtains, wall paper and fancy china.

Millinery is profitable, and a big trade is done in ready-to-wear garments. In connection with the latter department there are two fitting rooms. The first floor fixtures are all new and of a high order.

Mr. Vanstone told The Review that he handles about ten tons of wall paper in a year. The department is a large one and some very fine lines are carried. He has the manufacturers cut quantities of paper into samples, upon which he stamps the prices, and they are sent out with circulars announcing special sales. This is found to be a splendid plan for drawing trade. Considerable space is given to this department in newspaper advertising.

Each department of the store is charged with the goods which it receives at the selling, not the cost, price. All goods were formerly charged at cost, but the new system is found to be much better, for the reason that sales can be checked more closely. Once every month Mr. Vanstone knows exactly the condition of his business.

Only the top half of the show cases used for ribbons, neckwear, belts, etc., is of glass, the bottom section being devoted to stocks of the articles displayed above.

Mr. Vanstone believes in getting as great a quantity of goods as possible out on display.

A YOUNG FIRM.

Dunbar & Chester, of Owen Sound, have been in business only since Easter. They are making a specialty of the better class of dress goods and ready-to-wear garments, and seem to be doing a nice trade. In the ready-to-wear department we noticed a good display feature in the shape of a platform about a foot high and five or six feet square, on which were four figures clothed in high-class suits.

NOTES.

Robinson & McClure, Wiarton, carry general dry goods, groceries, millinery and housefurnishings.

Hunter & Trout, of Wiarton, carry staple dry goods, boots and shoes, groceries, flour and feed, and also conduct a butcher shop.

W. F. Gray & Co., of Owen Sound, have quite a large boot and shoe department. For Friday and Saturday, April 12 and 13, they advertised a big bargain sale. The goods offered were shown on tables. Terms were cash, and no goods were allowed out on approbation.

THIS ORDER CANNOT BE CANCELLED.

A retailer writes to us stating that a traveler called upon him with certain samples. Business was agreed upon, and an order-form was signed. At the foot of the form was this notice—"This order cannot be cancelled." When looking over the copy of the order-form later, the retailer dicovered that he had misunderstood the prices quoted. He was under the impression that he had ordered 500 articles at, let us say, £5 for the lot ; instead, he found that he had ordered 500 articles at £5 per 100. He writes straight away to the firm, stating that he had made a mistake, and asking them to cancel the order. Now, he has not any legal right to compel them to cancel the order, as the law rightly presumes that an intelligent man will only put his signature to an order which he has previously read carefully. If fraud or misrepresentation were alleged, the case is different. In this incident, the retailer does not allege any misrepresentation ; he merely states that a mistake was made, and, therefore, he should have the right of cancelling the order. The firm to whom the order had been given offered a compromise. The retailer, they said, had been prepared to spend £5 with them, let him buy from them goods to that amount, and they would consider the matter at an end. This, in our opinion, was a very fair offer. The notice, "This order cannot be cancelled," may seem to some of our readers to be rather drastic. We cannot, however, think that it is altogether uncalled for. We have heard of travelers who have spent considerable time and trouble with a retailer, and have secured an order, only to find subsequently that the retailer, on second thoughts, has written to headquarters a letter cancelling the order on some inadequate excuse. This is not cricket. A retailer, having once made up his mind to give an order, should abide by it like a man of decision.—Draper's Record.

THE WABASSO COTTON CO.

A Dominion charter has been granted the Wabasso Cotton Company, Limited, Montreal, with a capital of $750,000, divided into shares of $100 apiece. The incorporators were Leslie Gault Craig, manager, Montmorency, and James M. Greenshields ; William J. Henderson, manager ; Joseph Jenkins, student ; Alexander C. Calder, accountant, all of Montreal. The object of the company is "to construct, purchase, sell, lease and operate cotton and woolen manufactories of any and every kind in Canada ; to acquire and dispose of raw cotton, wool and cotton waste of every description ; manufacture cottons, woolens, shoddy and waste, yarns and fabrics of every description, and bleach and dye the raw product, yarn, or manufactured goods, etc."

A SPLENDID NEW STORE.

Smyth Bros., of Berlin, have opened a splendid new store, 36x148 feet, five storeys in height, with an available floor space of 26,000 square feet, all of which will be utilized by the firm. The front, on the second, as well as the first floor, is of plate glass. The roof is of the hopper style, constructed to slope towards the centre, where all water collects and is conveyed direct to the sewer main.

THE ALLIANCE MFG. CO.

A Dominion charter has been granted the Alliance Manufacturing Co., Limited, St. Louis de Mile End, Que., with a capital of $140,000, divided into $100 shares. The incorporators were James A. McGill, manufacturer ; William York, manufacturer ; John A. Fisher, manufacturer ; James A. Patton, accountant, and Melita J. McGee, married woman, all of Montreal. The object of the company is "to buy, sell and deal in all kinds of linen, woolen, cotton, silk and other textile fabrics, to be used as wearing apparel ; to purchase or otherwise acquire all or any part of the assets, business, property, contracts, rights, obligations and liabilities of James A. McGee, now carrying on business as a shirt manufacturer in St. Louis de Mile End, and of William York and John G. Fisher, now carrying on business as manufacturers of underskirts and skirts in Valleyfield, and to pay for same in cash or by the allotment and issue of fully paid-up shares in the capital stock of the company."

A SILK MERGER.

A silk mill merger, with a capital of $22,500,000, was announced at York, Pa., a few days ago. The merger thus far includes the York and Monarch mills in York and mills at Carlisle, Fleetwood, Kutztown, and Reynoldsville. The purchaser is the American Silk Manufacturing Co., of New York. Plans are under way for the merging of a total of thirty mills, principally in Pennsylvania. No bond issue will be made by the new corporation. It will have $10,500,000 seven per cent. preferred stock, and $12,000,000 common stock.

A COMMERCIAL COMMISSION.

It is stated that the Retail Merchants' Association will ask the Dominion Government to form a commercial commission, to be under control of the Department of Trade and Commerce, to deal with internal questions of trade. Last year the merchants asked that the Criminal Code be so amended that wholesalers and retailers could meet and discuss prices. The function of the commission would be the protection of the public against combines.

ANNOUNCEMENT

By the time this reaches the hands of the retail trade, we shall have removed into our new warehouse at the corner of Victoria Square and Craig Street.

The rapid expansion of our business within the last few years, had made the question of enlarged premises a pressing problem, and the opportunity having presented itself of acquiring the aforesaid desirable location, we decided to make the move.

With the increased floor space at our command, we shall be enabled not only to carry a larger stock than formerly, and thus the more easily to sustain our reputation as quick shippers, but also one very much more varied, and as comprehensive, in fact, as it is possible to conceive of as coming under the general term of Dry Goods.

Our preparations for the Fall trade have been proportionately augmented, and at the present writing our ability to fill assorting orders with promptitude will be found eminently satisfactory both by our customers and by the trade as a whole throughout the Dominion.

Good Advertising

How to Produce It

Brief Talks Given Monthly
By T. Johnson Stewart

"How can I judge the value of an ad. to me in dollars and cents, before having it printed ?"

There are numberless questions flung at an advertising critic in the course of a month, and, as a general rule, they have as little to do with advertising as the late John Bunyan had to do with the destruction of San Francisco. The majority of mortals retain the inquisitive talent of childhood until long after the appearance of their last wisdom tooth. It comes natural to most men to ask irrelevant questions, and I am thankful that at least one of my hecklers has seen fit to ask me a question which every shrewd retailer must have asked himself. How can we judge the pulling power of an ad. before we allow it to occupy valuable space in the newspapers ? It might clarify the atmosphere a little if I were to tell you how I size up my copy. Here goes. The first question I ask myself, after writing an ad. and considering it carefully, is—Will it sell goods ? I do not ask if it is pretty, or well balanced, or attractive ; I merely ask myself—Will this copy sell goods ? If I am convinced that it will, then, I attend to the minor points. If I can make it pretty and attractive—there are lots of pretty things that are not attractive—I do so. But if I cannot add the touches which will make my copy eye-catching, then I leave it just as it is in all the rugged strength of the original conception.

But, this revelation of my methods might be continued indefinitely without answering our friend's question. Because no man can tell the cash value of an ad. before it is published. If he is convinced that his copy will sell enough goods to warrant its publication he is safe in rushing into print. If he is not sure on this point, I'd advise him to wait until he is. All advertising should be looked on as a business investment pure and simple. It should pay well. When it does not pay there is something wrong with the copy or the medium or both. If you have an ad. on hand which you think would cause the ladies of your town to make a raid on the treasury print it. If you wait until you are able to figure out the exact returns in dollars and cents you are going to wait a long time. While this is so, there should be nothing speculative about your advertising, You should have a pretty fair knowledge of the pulling powers of any ad. you produce—when placed in the publicity columns of a paper you know something about. That point is important, because circular advertising will fool the best judges of copy nine times out of every ten. A circular may look well and fall flat—it may even be a master stroke of originality and yet fail to pay the printer's bill , because there's no surety that a certain percentage of your circulars will be read, while it is about morally certain that a percentage of your probable customers will read your ad. in any approved newspaper. The only way to answer our friend's question is by putting another. After producing your copy, lay it aside for a day or so, when possible. When you read it over ask yourself the question : "Will it sell goods ?" If you are reasonably certain that it will, then print it.

We reproduce two ads. on the opposite page which we would like you to consider for a few moments. Both ads. have been reduced greatly, but not sufficiently to destroy their original power. And it is hardly necessary to say that both are good ads.—just as attractive as any published in the newspapers of this country. There is one difference which most merchants will note. Ryan Bros. tell the women of Owen Sound a good deal about the values in their store and they also state the price where it is at all possible. Currie Bros. talk as effectively to the women of Saskatoon, but seem to be a bit bashful in using figures. There are some items, of course, in Currie Bros.' ad. where it would be practically impossible to state price, but speaving generally, price never fails to add to the effectiveness of good advertising matter, and should be used when at all possible. Despite this omission it would be hard to tell which ad. sold most goods. Personally, I prefer the Ryan Bros.' ad., and for no other reason than that price talks all through it. It is safe to say that most advertising men would agree with me. Of course, conditions in Saskatoon may warrant the omission of prices in the Currie Bros.' advertising. Apart from this single criticism I've no more to offer. Both ads. are good enough to be effective, and many retailers may find them useful models

A very pretty folder, announcing his Spring millinery opening, has been sent us by R. L. Corlett, of Cannington. On the face of the folder is a fashion cut which was run in a recent issue of The Review. The printer has taken pains and the wording is effective. I am convinced that the ladies of Cannington appreciated that kind of reminder. This folder is unique—that being the only thing which can make either a folder or a circular effective.

We promised to say a few words in this issue about a circular forwarded by the Playfair, Preston Co. some time ago. Just imagine that you see a full-page ad. before you in a metropolitan daily exploiting the goods of the Simpson or the Eaton Company, and doing that exceptionally well, and you have a pretty fair idea of what this circular ad. looks like. It would be hard to say whether the Playfair Company or the printer, deserves the most credit. The arrangement is perfect and prices are displayed just enough to be catching. The ad. sells goods on a "money back" guarantee, and if the Playfair Company didn't do a rushing Spring trade it certainly was not their fault.

The most peculiar ad. I have seen for a long time comes from Owen Sound. There is nothing startling about the arrangement or the style; but the wording is unique. The merchant who produced the ad. required ready money.

"$10,000 must be raised in ten days."

That's the rather startling heading. Then the merchant continues gravely: "This sale is not one of our own choice, but an absolute sale of necessity. When we opened up our big store a year ago we added $20,000 to our stock and arranged our credit at the bank to pay for this in cash, which places us at all times in the very closest market with the best makers. We intended keeping within this limit, but with the prices going up on everything with leaps and bounds, we placed on order three to six months ago immense blocks of goods, which we find amounting to over $75,000. This gigantic stock could not be purchased to-day by any retail house for less than ten to twenty-five per cent. more than we bought it at. But this does not satisfy the bank. They must be paid by the first of May or Vanstone's credit goes. * * * Ten days of great opportunity for your every Spring need, and Vanstone's credit is saved, and the big store will continue better than ever to fill your needs."

An open confession is—good business. I am inclined to call Mr. Vanstone one of the shrewdest and most daring of merchants doing business in Ontario. Let's hope that his keen insight into human nature has saved the big store. We would like to know the bank's opinion of that brand of advertising.

"Underskirts in outside sizes for large women."—C. M. Young & Co., Brantford.

"Our new carpets are all here, and we are ready to show you scores of attractive patterns and new color blendings in our complete assortment of reliable makes of Wiltons, Axminsters, Brussels, tapestries and wools. In selecting a carpet you are choosing something that will stare you in the face morning, afternoon and evening, day after day, for a good many years to come * * * Much depends on whether you discard inferior goods, with their apparent saving in price, and pay a trifle more for the best of the kind that you are going to use."

"We will have no formal opening day this season. We are ready for you now. Handsome French pattern hats now on exhibition. The product of our own workrooms put in stock as soon as finished. * * * Special sale of flowers Tuesday. Twenty boxes of flowers have been marked at half and less than half price. We want to clear this lot before the arrival of our Parisian flowers."—The T. H. Pratt Co., Hamilton.

"An ensemble of choice requisites for men who take pleasure in being nattily attired."

"There is no happy medium in fashions this season. They are marked by either great simplicity or extreme elegance."

"Why buy at Crompton's ? Don't unless we give you best values and service, or both. You must be the judge. Here is to-morrow's evidence."—Crompton's, Brantford.

The John White Co., Woodstock, devoted a portion of their advertising space for two days to extracts from a local paper's description of their millinery opening. Looks to us like a waste of space, for the matter had already been published.

"To-day we invite you to come and see our reading of the edicts of Fashion. Not even this much-worshipped dame is supreme in her first conjurings, but styles are proved in climes that run ahead in seasonal openings, and what we now proclaim as correct for Spring we have seen approved by that little world whose almost ruler is Fashion."

"Leave your order at the dress goods department for your new Spring costume."

"What a world of opportunities this department offers to the buyer. Every part of this extensive section teems with brightness and absolute newness. To this add the virtue of honestly low prices, and you have the recipe for the most satisfactory dress goods department in the city."—The G. W. Robinson Co., Hamilton.

"The grace of the gown depends almost entirely upon the corset, and no woman with a desire for distinctive, artistic effect in dress can succeed without first securing a model suited to her figure."

"The store that guarantees customers absolute satisfaction. * * * 'Count what you get, not what you pay,' should be the shopper's philosophy. * * * 'Fame is the perfume of heoric deeds,' but art and beauty are the result of deeds that have made our fancy goods department famous. In art needlework we have conceptions of immaculate beauty that grace and adorn the parlors and libraries of persons of culture and rank. Best of all, low prices reign supreme. We prefer small profits and customers' favor. * * * 'A man's a man for a' that,' but he's a much better looking man when he's well dressed, and he is well dressed when fitted at Scroggie's."—Scroggie's, Montreal.

"Our garments are rich in style, but never overtrimmed. They are simplicity itself, with a wealth of harmonious and beautiful details, and we want you to see them. * * * Lingerie for women of taste and refinement."—David Spencer, Ltd., Vancouver.

"Cotton dress goods to enthuse over ; for the assortment is the most comprehensive we have ever shown. The details printed here are merely suggestive, not exhaustive."—Stark's, Vancouver.

"Our annual white sale—a brilliant event featuring alluring arrays of new white merchandise at prices exceptionally magnetic."—Fraser, Torey & Co., Sydney, C.B.

"We are proud of our values in all these lines, expecially after seeing city prices while there last week."—D. W. Hilborn, Selkirk, Ont.

"Remnants of silks and black goods at one-half off regular prices. We make a special offer for the next month of making you a skirt to your measure for $3.50. Fifteen different styles to choose from."—Young's, Brantford.

"We are going to let you in on a trade secret! Every whitewear manufacturer in the country has been reluctantly compelled to raise his prices this season. Cottons are dearer, laces are dearer, embroideries are dearer, labor is dearer. And as no firm is in business for its health, there was no alternative for the makers of whitewear than to raise prices all round. We placed our orders before the bigger advances went into effect, and you can now buy here to the same advantage. Here are some items to show you how the entire assortments run."—Stanley Bros., Charlottetown, P.E.I.

"Never before has any men's store in the county of Elgin made such preparations for the requirements of a fast growing patronage of critical buyers. The best makers on the continent have vied with one another in price and style for a share of our trade. We are not confined to the output of one factory or the ideas of one man, and we buy every dollar's worth of our stock for cash. We are showing a range of goods which for quality, make, style, fit, price and selection of patterns is not equalled by many stores on the continent."—R. H. & J. Dowler, St. Thomas.

"After a Winter of limited variety and rather familiar patterns in silks, we can now boast a comprehensive supply ; a selection of breadth and excellence from the very best makers in silk-weaving centres."—Manchester, Robertson, Allison, Ltd., St. John, N.B.

Convenient.—"Why do you still keep up that Santa Claus myth ?" asked the cynic. "I should have thought you would have laughed at it."

"Because," answered the man with a large family, "it is convenient to have someone to blame for presents that fail to please."

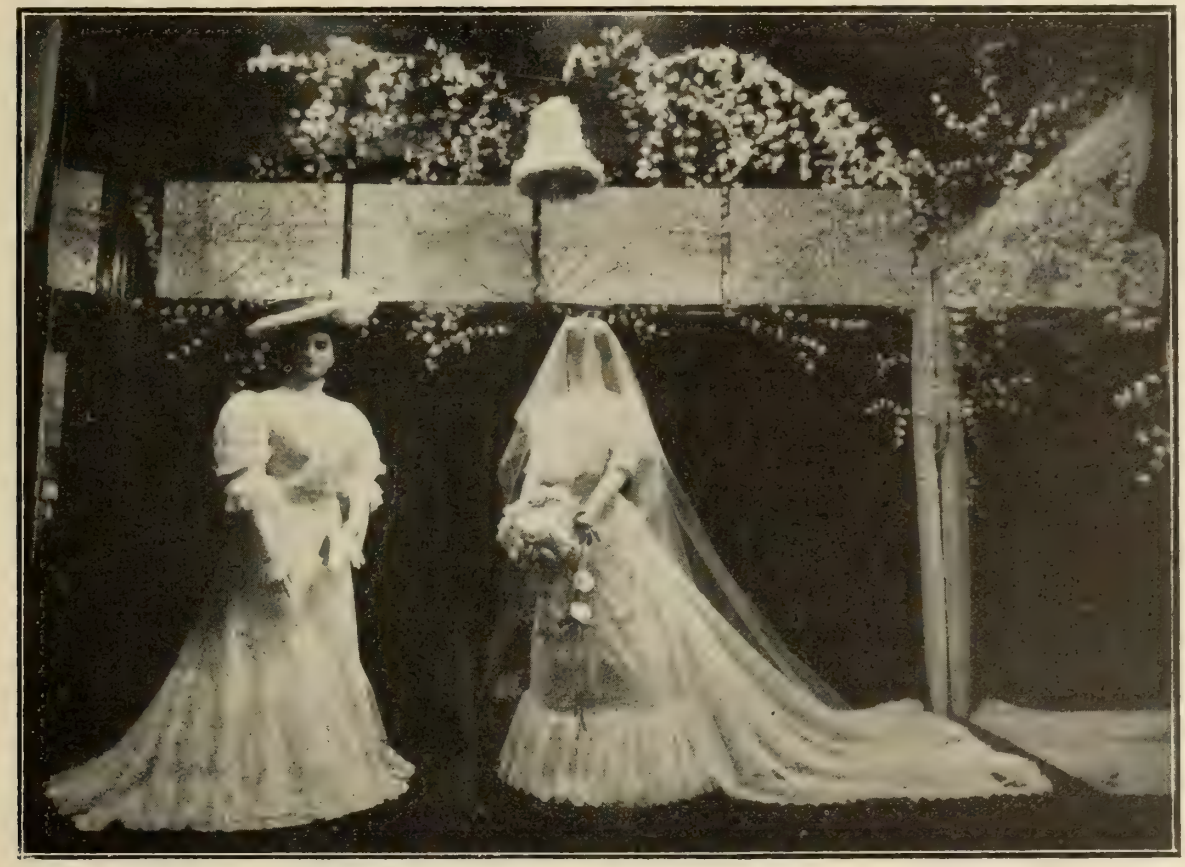
WINDOW DRESSING

THE ART OF DISPLAY



INTERIOR DECORATION

A New Idea

How to Make a Simple Stand for the Display of Fabrics.

The warm weather goods will soon be in great demand and it is up to the window-trimmer to create interest and sales by appropriate displays of goods such as muslins, prints, ginghams, etc. The drawings we give on these pages convey an old idea of a home-made display stand, resurrected, with a new idea of drapery carried out on it. The fixture part of it consists merely of two pine boards ten inches wide and about four feet six inches high, nailed together in trough fashion. This is then covered over with white cotton stretched on smooth and tight and with the addition of an inch strip about two feet in length, it is ready to proceed with the arrangement. Now, with this simple fixture, a window-dresser with any knowledge at all of fabric handling, can work out a dozen different styles of arrangement with muslins, prints, ginghams, silks, flannels, etc.

The sketches show a trim with dress goods and silks, but the idea can be completed with any of the aforementioned lines. Laces and trimmings can be worked into the drape in numerous ways. In order to get the loose, graceful folds as seen in the drawings, the secret is very simple. It is done by catching the selvage of the goods (about two yards from the end) with the thumb and forefinger of the left hand and raising the hand up to the level of your chin, when the goods will fall into nice even folds themselves, and all that you need to do then is to attach the goods to the upright with a pin at a point where you hold the selvage with your thumb and forefinger. After this is done follow the folds down with the hands, pulling them into place on the floor.

June Bride Window—Dressed by Louis F. Raynor for Mahon Bros., Halifax.

In using this drape hardly any pinning is needed. There is no crushing of material and therefore no damage whatever. When a full bolt of goods is given you to work on, the surplus can be laid out of sight behind the stand. Look the illustration over carefully and you'll find you can grasp the ideas very easily. With a few of these stands made in varying heights a new and novel display can be gotten up. In commencing the drape take the end of the goods and cover the stand tightly, then proceed with the rest of it as seen in the sketches.

Monotone Trims

These, as Well as Two-tone Effects, Used Very Effectively by a Toronto Store.

One of the large stores in Toronto has been devoting a lot of window space to displays where one color or two-tone effects were the chief features. These have been creating a lot of favorable comment from the public and good results have been gotten out of them in sales of goods in the colors shown. A few weeks ago a large window was given up to a trim of dress goods and silks in the new shades of blues that are now so prominent in New York and Paris. The whole display was confined to the different blends of the one shade. Later a big window of millinery on this color was seen. At present this firm has made a beautiful display, that is causing great comment, of millinery in purple and lavender or the different tones pertaining to purple. Now this idea is also being made very prominent in the haberdashers' windows. Some very fine displays in this line have been seen lately, such as a display of shirts, white with black dots in combination with black and white spotted neckwear and spotted hosiery. The writer also noticed a novel trim of light blue shirts with navy four-in-hand ties shown in combination. This idea never fails to draw attention and trade and there are very few stores in every town where this idea cannot be worked successfully. No matter how limited your stock may be in comparison to the big houses that are emphasizing this one color idea, you can, with a little thought and reflection in the matter, succeed in turning out a creditable trim on this idea. By experimenting you will find it very easy to force a certain color on the public and create a big demand for goods of that tone. A lady seeing a display of the one color idea in, say, dress goods and millinery, naturally concludes that this must be a leading fashionable color, "right up to the minute," so to speak, and if she can wear that color it goes a long way towards aiding her in the selection of a dress or hat.

How often do we hear the remark made similar to the following by ladies entering the dress goods department: "I want to see something in dress goods, but I really don't know what color to get. What are the new shades for Spring? I want something that is going to be fashionable." The writer noticed in several instances where the display in the window was of dress goods and millinery in one color, that the customer who purchased a dress on the color shown in the window also purchased a hat that was in the window where she saw the dress goods, so it was evident that the hat created the sale of the dress and vice versa, each being in keeping with the other. Merchants in smaller towns than Toronto, with smaller stocks to draw from, can work this idea if they try. The public have to look to the dry goods houses for the information regarding fashions, etc., and it's up to the progressive, wide-awake merchant to keep the people in touch with all that is new by emphasizing it strongly in his window displays.

TWO SPRING WINDOWS.

W. J. Sullivan, with J. W. Ingraham, North Sydney, C.B., has sent in photos of two Spring opening windows dressed by him, but, unfortunately, they are too dim for effective reproduction. One shows a display of Harris homespuns, and the other an Easter millinery trim.

"THE DAYLIGHT STORE."

R. S. Boyd & Co. entered the dry goods field in Truro, N.S., six years ago. They started in a small way, but it was not long before larger premises were necessary. Last Fall a store was purchased and remodelled. It is on a corner, and so well lighted that the firm calls it "The Daylight Store." It has a frontage of twenty-seven feet and a depth of ninety feet, is lighted from three sides and has a high ceiling. Special attention has been given to the electric lighting facilities also. The main floor is devoted to general dry goods and ready-to-wear, and the first floor to housefurnishings. Well trimmed show cases assist greatly in giving the store an up-to-date appearance. In an interview with the local paper Mr. Boyd said his success was due to studying the wants of the people, buying new seasonable goods and never handicapping himself with old stock, and winning a reputation for reliability in advertising.

A GOLDEN JUBILEE.

On April 5, 1857, Almon Bristol opened a dry goods business at Picton, occupying one floor of premises 20 x 40 feet. To-day, after fifty years of progress A. Bristol & Son have a splendid store on the same site with a floor space of over 22,000 square feet, and give employment to nearly seventy people. One week's sales in 1907 is equal to those for the whole of 1857. Mr. Bristol is still an active factor in the business and may be seen in the store almost any day. The firm is a member of the Canadian Dry Goods' Syndicate. Mail order trade in the district surrounding Picton has been made quite a strong feature.

Three years ago the premises were remodelled. The centre walls were removed, the rear extended, and the front reconstructed. Besides this, the interior was torn out and replaced on more up-to-date lines, and the fixtures installed were of the newest stamp. The special number of The Review will contain cuts showing both the exterior and interior of this store, along with illustrations of other fine Canadian dry goods houses.

A "DAY AND NIGHT" DISPLAY ROOM.

One of the novelties in the new Altman store, New York City, says the Sun, is a day-and-evening room for showing off costumes to shoppers who want to see the colors by daylight and by the yellower indoor light as well. The room has no windows, apparently, and is lighted with electric bulbs. But several large mirrors slide back unexpectedly. At the same time the lights go out and daylight enters by a large window revealed from the opening of the mirrors. The costume, posed in the full daylight, and passing through a sudden change of hue, goes through the hardest test that the dressmakers have devised.

AN ACTIVE ASSOCIATION.

At a meeting of the Port Hope Retail Merchants' Association recently the matter of early closing was discussed, but action was deferred. One member stated that closing in Kingston at five o'clock every day but Saturday did not interfere with business. A committee was appointed to look after the merchants' interests with respect to a pedlars' by-law. Some municipal matters, such as fire alarm and street watering, were discussed. This association appears to be fully alive to the fact that an organization of merchants may make itself very useful.

Too Expensive For My Business!

SYSTEM THE SECRET OF SUCCESS

Any retailer who says that about Business Systems, is laboring under a delusion.

The size of a business is the factor that determines the cost of installing Business Systems.

Business Systems are, proportionately, just as much an economy for the smallest retail store as for the largest factory.

In different businesses, Business Systems are designed to fit different ends.

In your business, Mr. Retailer, Business Systems, instead of being "too expensive," are time savers and an actual economy.

You can understand why a system that posts your books and writes out your bills at the same time, is economical, can't you?

That's only one of the things Business Systems will do for you.

SHOW CARD WRITING

BY CRAFTSMAN.

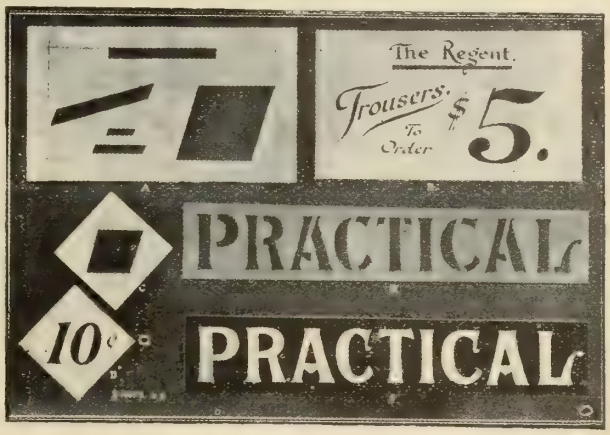
When a quantity of cards are to be written, whether small price tickets or full sheets, the card-writer makes a cut-out. This method is illustrated in Figs. G and H in Cut No. 1. The sample card (H) being written, another card of the same size is taken, and lines are ruled on tissue paper or upon transfer paper to represent the exact position of the words on the original card (H), and pasted on it. The spaces showing the position of words or letters are then cut out with a sharp knife. By placing the cut-out over the other cards to be written and using a soft pencil, the spaces cut out are traced readily and quickly, and the card-writer is certain that all of the words will appear in the same position on all of the cards, each having the same slant, besides being also of the same height. The lead pencil marks are erased with a sponge rubber after the card is dry. These lead pencil marks are purposely left on our designs in order to guide the beginner. Under the cut-out (G) there is pasted a dark background to more clearly emphasize the spaces cut in the card.

In our second illustration, Fig. A is another cut-out for a trouser card. Three pens of different sizes were used to write the card. The number 5 was made with a brush. Fig. C is a cut-out for the small price ticket shown over (D).



Stencils.

When large quantities of hand-painted cards are desired, the larger letters and designs are usually stencilled and then filled in by hand. Stencils are made as follows: The sample card being first made, some tracing paper is laid over it and the letters desired are traced. This paper is then pasted on a sheet of strong manila paper. With a very sharp knife-point the letters are cut out, as shown in Fig. E. This can be best done by laying the paper on a sheet of cardboard and cutting clean through the paper slightly into the card, thereby avoiding burr edges, which are sure to appear if the knife be dull or the surface used under the stencil-paper uneven. The entire stencil should receive a thin coat of shellac, not forgetting the inner edges when the cut-out has been made. This will make it durable, preventing the color from soaking into the paper and the stencil brush from injuring the surface, which otherwise would, after some use, absorb much color and cause blurred lines. A wide, round brush with short bristles is usually the kind required for this work. When a paper stencil is used the color is spread only on the outer surface of the brush by rubbing it perpendicularly across some smooth surface, then holding the stencil firmly in position with thumb tacks, or with weights if it be large, or with the left hand when small. The brush is tapped gently up and down against the stencil and its work is done.

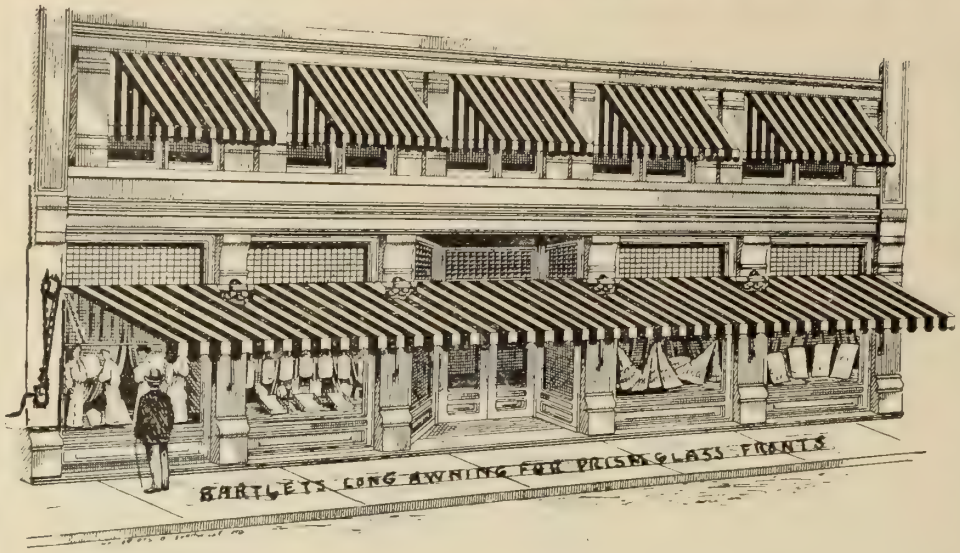
It leaves a neat faint or dark impression, according to the amount and tint of color applied; besides this, it places the design or letters in the exact position on all the cards. Fig. F shows a card made with stencil (E). After the stencil brush is used all the letters are outlined with a small brush, then filled in.



When large stencils are cut and there are many narrow spaces uncut, like those in the top of (A), (C), (T), and the bottom of (C) and (L), it is advisable to cut narrower strips of paper and to strengthen these weak parts by fastening on these strips with glue or shellac.

THE LACHUTE KNITTING CO.

A Dominion charter has been granted the Lachute Knitting Company, Limited, township of Chatham, Que., with a capital of $20,000, divided into $100 shares. The incorporators were Henry R. Hammond, farmer; William Howard, manufacturer; Peter R. McGibbon, lumberman; John Sarginson, manufacturer, and James T. Griffith, manufacturer, all of Lachute, Que. The object of the company is "to manufacture and deal in all kinds of textiles, wool, cotton, woolen products and specialties in wool and all kinds of textiles and all material and supplies relative thereto; to establish agencies and stores throughout Canada and elsewhere for the distributuon and sale of the manufactured products of the company, and to deal generally in all kinds of textiles."

An international conference of cotton growers, manufacturers and dealers will be held at Atlanta, Ga., on October 7, 8 and 9.

Systems for Retailers.

It is proposed to use this page for the next few issues of The Dry Goods Review for the purpose of outlining a number of methods or systems applicable to the retail store. A great deal is said in this advanced age about "applying system to business." There is a danger of over-doing this, but there is no doubt that far more may be accomplished, both by the head of the house, and also by the employe through the introduction of systematic records and methods into any business. Of course, it must be remembered always that results depend largely on the employer and the employe, for an office or a business house may be filled with systematic devices and labor-savers and still there are no beneficial results, because those operating the systems are not working them to the best advantage. In a simple matter, such as filing correspondence and invoices, the greatest care should be exercised, as the time of the merchant is valuable, far too valuable to waste looking through heaps of letters and invoices in order to find the address of a certain concern he desires to write to. There are a number of simple devices for filing correspondence in a small office, although probably the box alphabetical file is the most convenient where a regular filing cabinet is not employed. A letter is received—and, by the way, letters should perhaps, be classified into "purchase" and "sales"—and as soon as a reply is prepared a carbon copy should be written at the time and attached to the original letter; in this way the whole history of the transaction is easily secured for future reference. These letters and replies are filed loose in the box file mentioned above, and any subsequent letter is treated in exactly the same way and filed on top of the previous one according to date. In a large business a great deal of time may be saved and some mistakes in names and addresses avoided by handing the stenographer the letter which is being answered, after placing the figure 1, 2, or 3, as the case may be, the stenographer using the same number in her note book, in place of writing out in full the name and address of the customer. For instance, the letters requiring answers may be accumulated and the dictation given at one time. Should the letter be from Messrs. Brown & Jones, Teeswater, instead of calling this to the stenographer, simply place the figure 1 opposite the name, the stenographer marking her notes in the same way. There will be absolutely no mistakes in names or addresses, and the time saved is worth while. Give it a trial.

System may be employed in so simple a matter as opening and handling the mail. It is the man who studies his business, and plans his time, who succeeds. If a system does not deal with a business you are in, it can easily be adapted to it; in fact, every business has its peculiarities, but there are few which cannot be improved by system. Some men will putter around shop or office all day and accomplish about as much as a systematic man may accomplish in one hour, and the latter's work seems to move so smoothly and without friction.

A word might be said here as to allowances for the return of goods, or for defects or overcharges. This occurs with both the wholesaler and the retailer. Where the customer makes a claim or returns some goods, and the allowance is to be made, it is safer to have a small book for the purpose, called "allowance book" or "credit book," into which is entered the amount of the allowance or returns, when the transaction takes place, and thus avoid the annoyance of having the customer return his account for correction on the first of the month. Similarly, if the retailer is making a claim on the wholesaler, this method is preferable, as almost invariably, if the claim is to be allowed, a credit not confirming the allowance will be sent by the wholesale house.

We should strive to do not only better work, but more work in less time. Now, in reference to purchase invoices, the first step is naturally to check over the receipt of goods correctly; and then the order, to ascertain if the goods have been delivered and charged as ordered. Should any difference arise, it should be reported immediately. After the invoice is found correct in every way, the prices of the various lines of goods should be recorded in some convenient way, so as to be easily accessible at a moment's notice. Probably a small price book, alphabetically arranged, will answer the purpose, giving the following particulars, for instance:

Table cloths	April 8	S. B. Co.	$1.50 ea.	$6

This book may be arranged alphabetically in accordance with the concern from whom the goods were purchased, or in accordance with the particular stock, the latter probably being the preferable method. This price book becomes simply invaluable around an office, both in buying and selling goods.

There are a number of methods for entering or recording purchase invoices, which will be outlined in a later issue. This is one of the most important branches in the work of an office.

SILK PIECE GOODS EXPORT.

The Canadian commercial agent at Yokohama writes: "The foreign houses in the silk export business appear to be unanimous about organization for the protection of their business interests. The varying conditions of trade are as unsettling in silk as in any other commodity, while the amount of capital turn-over is larger than in any other line of export. A committee appointed by a duly convened meeting are engaged in preparing articles of association and by-laws, which will be submitted to a general meeting to be called later, when the 'Yokohoma Silk Piece Goods Association' will take up a general oversight and direction of the silk export business."

FURS THAT STAY SOLD

DID you ever experience the unpleasant sensation occasioned by an unexpected visit from a good customer with a great big kick to make? Doesn't it make the ice-cold chills chase each other up and down your back? You think of the satisfaction with which you struck that harmonious chord on the old cash register when the sale was made. You hide your disappointment, as best you can, behind a "smiling exterior," (whatever that means,) and express your fervent thanks for the opportunity to prove your absolute faithfulness to your business motto, "Satisfaction or your money back." Now, don't you? Then you see your customer to the door, nod "Good Bye" with a pleasant smile—and then lock yourself into your Private Office while you "say a few things." And then—you get even with the manufacturer. Who's to blame you?

PAQUET FURS

But when you are handling expensive goods, such as Furs, you can't afford to let this sort of thing happen very often. It wouldn't take very long to give your business a "black eye"—and you know it! The thing to do is to get right down to the root of the trouble and then apply "The Remedy," which we will give you from time to time in these advertisements.

False economy is at the bottom of it all—rest assured of that at the start. Paquet Furs are made by experts, in the largest Fur Factory in the country. There are cheaper furs than Paquet Furs, but they come back. Paquet Furs stay sold—that's the difference.

If you're not now on our visiting list, drop us a card and you'll be on immediately.

Fur-lined Garments a Specialty

THE CANADIAN FUR TRADE

SEASON 1907-08

Orders Placed Well for Fall—Ladies' Fur Jackets in Spendid Request Men's Fur-Lined Coats Strong Muskrats in Short Supply—London Sales.

Sample fur lines for Fall and Winter have been shown throughout Canada during the past month. Orders are coming in well, with a few exceptions. Some merchants in Ontario are rather pessimistic about the opening of Spring trade and are holding back, although in the majority of cases they are placing well. Throughout Quebec and the Maritime Provinces orders are good. Manitoba and the Northwest are also placing steadily, and as nearly all merchants have disposed of last year's stocks, furs are in high favor and orders are placed freely for Fall. A manufacturer, in conversation with a Review representative, stated that with the utmost truth orders are certainly an indication of the general prosperity of the country, and should result in the year 1907 being a record one in the fur business.

What is Selling.

Fur-lined garments for ladies have been fairly well placed, and the indications are that repeat orders will be sufficient to tax the capacity of the manufacturer. These large orders are also bound to result in much disappointment as to deliveries when the November and December retail sales arrive. Jackets in Persian lamb, which have advanced 10 per cent., astrachan, in the cheaper grades, and muskrat, in both natural and dyed colorings, are in demand. Fur neckwear is selling freely in stoles, ruffs, and scarfs of mink. Alaska sable, which is cheaper, is doing well in the usual shapes. Russian sable fox is also to the fore. The book muff is the leader in a novelty way and the coronation muff is having preference over the round shapes.

Men's heavy fur-lined coats, especially in the better goods from $25 up, are going well. There is a big run on Prussian and Moscow lamb, and there will be good sales for fur coats with collar laps, trimmed with otter or Persian lamb.

While the very high prices of raw materials are a considerable worry to the manufacturer, on the whole the lines now out on the road are quoted at prices which will admit of their being sold to the consumer without any great advance on most staple lines.

The shortage of mink at the London sales resulted in a free scramble by the continental buyers to secure their supplies. The result was that prices went soaring away above normal value. This does not affect the Canadian market to any great extent, as most manufacturers here buy their materials in December and January in the home market when supplies are plentiful and colors good.

Musk Rats in Short Supply.

As the manufacturing season progresses and manufacturers are rounding out their supplies the true condition of the raw fur market comes to light. It is clearly evident that fur-lined garments, where muskrat skins are used as linings, will go higher in price next Fall. Manufacturers who have sampled these lines largely, are finding trouble in securing sufficient skins. In many cases the New York market has been appealed to without avail.

Minks are in good demand, but are pretty well consumed, and are extremely scarce. Marten is realizing good prices, but very few of these goods are sold in Canada.

Below are the results of the March London fur sales:

RETURNED BUYER SPEAKS OF CONDITIONS.

J. E. McComber, of McComber & Cummings, Montreal, is again in the city, after an extended foreign buying trip, which included an attendance at the London fur sales and a visit to Leipzig and other fur centres. The importance of the London sales to every fur market cannot be over estimated, as the March sales are a good indication of prices for the coming season. Mr. McComber attended the Lampson and Hudson Bay sales and made some interesting remarks about the systematic conduct of these sales. Raw furs are all catalogued and divided into lots. Sometimes as many as four hundred buyers are in atttendance at the sale of a particularly good fur, and as bidding is very brisk, prices are forced up. Mr. McComber spoke of the high prices obtained for musk ox, mink and otter. Foreign markets are in a prosperous condition, and the outlook is promising for the new season.

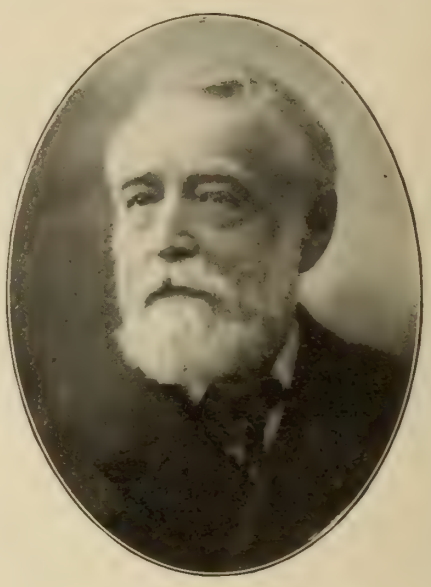
CONDITION OF THE RUSSIAN FUR MARKET.

Max Goldberg, of the British-Canadian Fur Co., Montreal, who has just returned from an extended trip through Europe, where he visited all the Russian and German markets, states: "Last September the market in Nijni Novgorod, Russia, opened slowly, and prices were very high, notwithstanding the weak market in Leipzig at that time. The prices for Persian lamb skins reached such a height, as never before had been experienced by merchants. Only about one-quarter of the offerings were bought, and the Tartars were obliged to take goods back to Moscow and hold them until November, when buying again commenced with about 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. decrease. As it was found that the best goods, which are only about 30 per cent. of the offerings, were picked up in Nijni Novgorod, the 15 per cent. decline did not help the buyer much. This article was at a standstill in Leipzig for some little time, but it revived when manufacturers started their buying during the Winter. To-day good skins are very scarce, but there are quite a lot of poor goods left over, and it will probably act to keep prices in the new crop a little lower.

"Squirrel skins and linings have sold at a small loss against the prices paid in Nijni Novgorod, and merchants were puzzled to find that last February, at the Irbit fair, Siberia, this article had again realized big prices. Sables, which were extremely high a year ago, sold at a slightly lower figure last September and February. Baum marten furs have advanced as high as 60 per cent. to 70 per cent., compared with last year, and are still keeping their price under good demand. Ermines declined 30 per cent., but revived again somewhat at the Irbit fair. All Russian goods have met with good prices, and owing to the heavy snow storms experienced in Siberia this Winter, trappers failed to get the large quantities generally secured, and on this account, in many cases quantities of various lines will be from 50 per cent. to 60 per cent. less than previous years." He also states that business has been much better than was expected, under the prevailing conditions in Russia, and this helped somewhat to keep up the high prices.

DEATH OF STAPLETON CALDECOTT.

Stapleton Caldecott, of Debenhams (Canada), Ltd., died suddenly at his home, 64 Woodlawn avenue, Toronto, on April 17. He had not been in good health since January, but was able to attend to his business affairs. On the afternoon of his death he attended a meeting at the King Edward hotel of one of the companies in which he was interested, and was taken ill there. He went home and became unconscious, and in this condition passed away. Uriniic poisoning was given as the cause of death. A widow survives, and two sons, Fred. Caldecott, of Montreal, and Walter Caldecott, of Toronto Junction. There is one daughter also.



Mr. Caldecott was widely known throughout the country. As a member and officer of the Toronto Board of Trade he was active, and had made a special study of commercial relations as affecting Canada and the Old Country. His views upon tariff and other fiscal questions were very pronounced.

Mr. Caldecott was born in Chester, England, and was educated at Charlton School, Manchester. He came to Canada about forty years ago, having first been trained to commercial pursuits in London and Manchester. He located in Montreal and became a member of the dry goods firm of T. James Claxton & Co. In 1879 a branch was opened in Toronto, and the firm was then under the name of Caldecott, Burton & Co., afterwards Caldecott, Burton & Spence. Later, Mr. Caldecott became a member of Debenham, Caldecott & Co., which has since been changed to Debenhams (Canada), Ltd.

Mr. Caldecott took considerable interest in literature and had written a great deal upon trade questions, as well as upon the question of municipal taxation.

Association. The manufacturers who constitute that body have been long-suffering. But they have never denied that there is a limit beyond which patience ceases to be a virtue. The limit has been reached, and the patience of the silk manufacturers is exhausted. Our only wonder is that it has lasted so long. In future, we learn, proceedings will be instituted "against any person or firm who sells as silk the various imitations of that article." If the English of this pronouncement is dubious, we cannot quarrel with the resolve expressed. We believe that misrepresentation is bad, not only from the strictly moral, but from the strictly business point of view. We think it bad not only for the manufacturer, but for the wholesaler, and for the retail distributor. Wherefore we welcome the promise of aggressive action on the part of the Silk Association and its allied organization, the Silk Club. The joint committee which has been formed to devote special attention to the subject will, it is announced, invoke the assistance of the Board of Trade (under the Merchandise Marks Act), and it has, we are informed, "reason to believe that the board will give every assistance to stop these frauds on the public."

Knitted Goods Problems

Written for The Review by P. B. Lyon, Hosiery and Glove Buyer for the John Murphy Co., Montreal.

A merchant who fails to feature his hosiery as a line distinct from the underwear, is neglecting a beneficial policy; one which has a direct bearing upon the prosperity of the department. One important point at the outset is the brand question. In most instances "brands sell the goods." It is important to know that there is no line of merchandise in which the truth of this statement is so easily proven as in hosiery.

Brands.

In regard to handling branded goods, two brands are sufficient. If one can be procured in both fine and heavy rib, only have the one. Always prefer branded cotton goods for children. A manufacturer who devotes his whole time to a special line will turn out more correct sizes, better lengths, and more uniform goods than one making a large range. His guarantee on his goods goes a long way in selling, and also in advertising. Great care should be exercised in the selection of the brand to be carried. For ladies, such lines as Llama and Indiana have up to the present time been good. Those selling over 50c. per pair, if bought right, should continue to be so. A line with Llama embroidered on the material can be bought to sell at three for $1. This in time is sure to injure the good standing this brand now enjoys.

Special Boxes for Hosiery.

Special boxes should be made for ladies' and children's cashmere hosiery. Although they cover more space than packages, the general appearance of the department is improved. Also more prompt service is assured, and hours of work each week can be saved by their use.

In a well-lighted department, black should be used, otherwise red. These boxes can be had from any good box-maker, and will cost from $3 to $6 per dozen. The cheap boxes are the most expensive in the end.

Value of Complete Assortments.

Too much consideration cannot be given the value of a complete assortment of sizes. It is much better to have two lines complete than four broken. Just now ladies' colored hose is necessary in every well-assorted stock. They increase the stock, give a larger scope for display and force up sales. They also draw the better class of trade to the counter.

Preparation of Stock for Day's Business

Hosiery stocks should be complete not later than 9 a.m. each morning. The head of the department, or whoever looks after the bringing forward of stock, should attend to this matter immediately upon the opening of the store, except on sale days, when it should have been done the night before.

Counter displays are very valuable if properly used. It is best to use a few stands not more than thirty inches high, with a drop to about twenty inches, if desired, displaying from three to five pair, one color. If the whole range is shown surround the stands on the counter with others arranged in sizes. Then again a plain price ticket in ticket-stand is good for specials, takes very small space, yet attracts direct attention and brings results.

How to Arrange Stock.

There is only one kind of tag or ticket worth using, a one-pronged pin ticket. This ticket, when attached, is completely covered, small, yet large enough to allow stock number, cost and selling. It is also quickly adjusted, cannot pull out, yet is easily taken off. Sewing on of tickets as of old is far too slow and not so neat.

Jobs should be kept as jobs, and never put in a regular stock. If not all sold on first sale, put them away until the next. When allowed to mix with stock no end of trouble is caused, and in many cases dissatisfaction is the result. Real jobs move quickly; twenty-five or fifty cents off the dozen does not constitute a job.

Complete assortments are essential in hosiery stocks. Four sizes in ladies' should be ordered in every line. As an example, a fifty-dozen lot of 8 in 8½, 17 in 9, 17 in 9½ and 8 in 10. Children's full stockings in sizes 6 to 8½ are best.

In regard to prices, the fewer the prices and larger the assortment at each price the better. For a regular stock use only prices ending in 5 or 0, Jobs at odd prices are very often best, but not always. Children's hosiery should be marked in as few prices as possible. Three are best, and use four prices at the most, as: 4, 4½, 5, 5½ at 25c;, 6, 6½, 7 at 30c.; 7½, 8, 8½ at 35c.; or 4, 4½, 5 at —; 5½, 6, 6½ at —; 7, 7½ at —; 8, 8½ at —

Points to Emphasize.

When ordering cotton, lisle or silk hosiery always state color of box preferred. We prefer red. Whenever possible get in half-dozen boxes.

Have separate department for the selling of children's stock.

Have all reserve goods entered on cards, and as soon as marked, have checked off and brought forward. This will greatly assist not only the salespeople, but the buyer as well. At any time he can tell what lines are selling or otherwise.

Care should be taken when displaying white or light colors on counter. One pair of black underneath will help to keep the dust clear.

When exhibiting hosiery to a customer always stand back of your lines, with the exception of gauze lisles. Always see that gauze lisles are sold with the understanding that they are not guaranteed. We have cards on our counters which read, "Gauze lisles we do not guarantee. We are not responsible for breaks."

Insist on prompt service, and have only the best of help.

More Suggestions

Written for The Review by J. P. Morrish, Hosiery, Underwear and Glove Buyer for W. H. Scroggie Co., Montreal.

With regard to the selling of branded goods, in preference to the general lines, in our opinion you can never go wrong in having a good brand at a popular price, in either hosiery, gloves or underwear. For instance, if you have a customer who buys a line of your goods, with a brand or special name on the goods, she or he naturally tells others about the nice styles you keep at one dollar, and this in a short time leads to future sales.

Hosiery Boxes.

We always have our lines placed in red boxes, as we prefer that color. Other firms have their own tastes, but the general opinion is that manufacturers figure these items in the cost of the goods when they are quoting them.

Value of Complete Assortments.

It is very essential to carry a complete assortment, not only in colors and styles, but also in prices. Many customers wish to have a large display shown them, before they choose exactly what they want, and hence the value of a complete assortment.

Preparation of Stock for Day's Business

Of course the first thing in the morning after the dusting is through, is to make out your list. Also get the sizes in the different lines which will be needed during the day. This saves the time and trouble of going through this matter when everybody should be busy attending customers.

Regarding the arrangement of a well-kept stock, we find it necessary to have every garment ticketed, whether it be hosiery, undervest or silk glove, and in such a way that it cannot be easily pulled apart. Lines not ticketed are, in time, sure to become a pile of missmates. A considerable amount of loss also comes through having goods which come in pairs looted and pinned together wrongly.

Points to Emphasize.

There are so many points to emphasize in our lines it is hard telling which are most prominent. We first of all are very particular in the way of politeness to our customers. When you have found out their needs, say lisle hosiery for instance, we show a variety of styles and prices, pointing out at the same time how much better this line is than another, and the advantages of one line in regard to style, etc., over some other line. We also introduce a few lines of cashmere hose to our customers, and last of all, but not least by any means, we are particular to show politeness to our best or poorest customers ; a good word or pleasant smile is never wasted.

Golfers and Sweaters

Prospects for Fall Are Good—Slight Advance in Prices Over Last Season.

Outdoor life necessitates many styles of knitted goods for athletic sports, for both men and women. Rowing, cycling, golfing, boating, or any other ot the various outdoor exercises, all require some outer garment, and a sweater as ever remains at the head of the list. A new feature in the golfer range this season is a ladies' bolero coat shown in either full length or three-quarter sleeves. and is very suitable as a Summer garment. This garment is selling well and is shown in combination colors. In both sweaters and golfers, in plain self-colored effects, the same old staple styles are shown. The Norfolk jacket is again coming into prominence and is well looked after. Colors selling best are white, navy, cardinal and black. In spite of the fact that the trade in general claimed golfers to be a doubtful and uncertain line, they are selling fairly well for Fall, principally in Canadian goods. The popular prices for these goods are from $15 to $24.

Hosiery

Advance Displays of Spring and Summer Lines — Big Demand for Tams—Chemnitz Market—Domestic and Foreign Advances for Fall.

Advance displays of Spring and Summer hosiery at the Easter period served to give an inkling of the demand. Preparations should be made without delay to have stocks complete during the present month and June, the biggest hosiery selling period of the year.

Retailers are selling large quantities of cashmere hose at the present writing. Lace and plain lisles in Alice blue, sky blue, pinks, greys, and especially tans and whites are in splendid request, in lace ankle effects. Cotton, silk plaited and spun silk are shown in large quantities and are well looked after. Men's half-hose, especially in figures and fancies, are to the fore.

As stated by The Review a few months ago, tan hosiery is going to have a remarkably big sale this Summer ; very much larger than anticipated by the jobbers. The popularity of browns and tans is shown by the fact that manufacturers of boots and shoes cannot fill orders for tan goods.

Repeats, in most cases, cannot be had and deliveries are very very poor. The conditions now prevailing in the Chemnitz market are such as have never before been known. Prices for raw materials have advanced over 100 per cent. since a year ago, and wages have risen continually.

At the present writing lisles and cashmere hosiery for Fall have advanced as follows : Domestic goods, 5 per cent. to 7½ per cent., and foreign lines 7½ to 10 per cent. Retailers can also anticipate an advance of another 15 per cent. unless they place orders early. Many retailers now realize the situation and are doing so. The principal lines bought for Fall are plains and ribs, touching fancies very lightly. Cashmere is the leading line in the $2.25 goods. Better lines, running in prices from $3 to $4.25, are selling well also.

Merchants who have placed orders in March or April may look forward to deliveries during July and August. Otherwise they cannot be guaranteed earlier than the latter end of September.

At the present time (April 15) Canadian hosiery manufacturers are conferring with regard to prices and patterns for Spring, 1908.

The run in tan hosiery is on the golden brown shade; tans with a yellow tinge are not those sought after and the trade will accept any class or make provided it is the right color. Importers are now considering ordering for next Spring, and, so far as can be ascertained, tans and white will be the leading hosiery colors in 1908.

Underwear

Deliveries Six to Eight Weeks Behind This Spring — Serious Situation Causes Jobbers to Place Orders Where Possible for Spring, 1908.

Spring deliveries of underwear during April continued slow, in both domestic and foreign goods. They are from six to eight weeks later than deliveries of last year. Some retailers do not expect deliveries till well on in May, and rate themselves lucky if they get deliveries then. A large number of retailers left their ordering of goods as late as possible, anticipating lower prices. This anticipated fall, however, has been far from the case. As a result, retailers are trying to place orders all at the same time, and are asking for deliveries as early as they received goods last year. This, manufacturers find impossible to do.

Now that the warm weather is here to stay, both jobbers and retailers report sales very active. There is a steady demand for short and sleeveless lisle vests, also fancy hand worked designs. A good many light wool vests in sleeveless effects are also favorites in Swiss goods.

Good Fall orders have been placed in men's heavyweight underwear, according to latest reports from salesmen. The trade for combinations, in natural shades, is good, and sales are very active for Fall. Two-piece suits promise to be very popular in blues and browns. Large orders for this line are taken along the road.

Jobbers state that owing to the bad deliveries stocks are well depleted. For this reason it would be advisable to get all orders and repeats placed as soon as possible. Many of the manufacturers are filled up to the end of the year, and will not accept any further orders Prices will be very stiff and no prospects for lower need be looked for. Over last year prices have advanced from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent., and still further advances can be looked for.

In view of the domestic and foreign conditions some jobbers are very anxious to place Spring and Summer orders exceptionally early; in fact, some houses have placed orders already for Spring, 1908, so as to be sure of deliveries.

A wholesale dry goods buyer, in conversation with a Review representative, stated that business up to the present time was far in excess of last year in wool underwear. Mills would not accept repeats on any lines except for very late deliveries. Fleeced underwear mills have withdrawn all quotations. He also states there is a growing demand each year for a better class of goods, and that men's lines selling at $4.50 could hardly be replaced, on account of the scarcity of materials.

Brand Advertising.

Most makers have now caught on to the value of brands, but as yet do not know how to make the best use of them. The branded garment without the proper advertising might just as well have never been made. It will never amount to much as a money-making line.

The ever standing theory, that expense of advertising an article should be included in the cost, is fast dying a natural death. The increased sales through advertising should, and do—if the article proves of merit—amply pay for the investment. Moreover, a trade mark assumes a cash value, often reaching a figure many times in excess of the total advertising investment.

TO PURCHASE BRINTON MILLS.

A despatch from London, Eng., says that Kidderminster manufacturers have formed a company with a capital of £50,000, to acquire the business of the Brinton Carpet Company, of Peterboro.

Notes from St, John

A practical demonstration of the art of home-making was shown recently in the ten big windows of M. R. A., Ltd. Each window represented a room furnished in the latest fashion and showing the newest ideas in carpets, draperies, curtains, furniture, bric-a-brac and all that goes to make a home beautiful. M. R. A. call the display their "annual out-door exhibit of indoor furnishings." Every window of the big departmental store is utilized for the exhibition, and each window represents a different portion of the home.

The windows of the Germain Street store showed a drawing-room and bedroom. The former had a general tone of green and rose, with handsome, inlaid furniture and silk tapestry for the walls and over-draperies. In the bedroom the prevailing shade was blue. The walls were of French cretonne, medallion design; the furnishing of birdseye maple, and a brass bedstead with a spread of flounced Battenburg.

Two of the King Street windows depicted a "den," with weathered oak furnishings, and a hall with all the necessary fittings in golden oak.

The third window on King Street was given over to an elaborate display of portieres and tapestries, and the fourth was devoted to showing Axminster and Brussels carpets. The windows on Market Square showed a library, dining-room, and another bedroom. All were most attractively gotten up, and the display was, without doubt, one of the most striking of the many handsome demonstrations made by M. R. A. at various periods.

St. John, N.B., May 1.—The season has been rather backward for the sale of dry goods, as the weather has been cold and dull. This has somewhat curtailed the retail movement in Spring lines, but jobbers appear to be doing a larger business than in former years. One reason is that the local houses have been making greater efforts to extend their businesses than ever before and are succeeding. Stocks of dress goods are complete now and business in this line has been very good. The demand for millinery has been excellent, but warmer weather would be welcomed.

Vassie & Company have still further enlarged their premises by securing four floors of the adjoining building on King St. Each floor is 20 x 100 feet and will be connected with the firm's present warehouse by doorways. The additional space thus secured will greatly increase their facilities. They report the outlook for this year as excellent.

A - LETTER - WHICH - SPEAKS - FOR - ITSELF

Bennington, Vt. Mar. 5 1907

The Ellis Mfg. Co.,
Hamilton, Ont.

Gentlemen:

In reply to your favor we beg to advise that we have not sold any of our Spring Needle Cylinder Rib machinery for the manufacture of underwear fabric to any parties in the Dominion of Canada outside of yourselves, and the machines that we furnished you were of our latest improved type and capable of turning out Spring Needle Ribbed Underwear equal to any ''Cooper'' Machines in operation in the United States.

I can also assure you that The Cooper Mfg. Co. of which I am the President are not exporting any of the ''Cooper'' goods made on same class of machines as you have into your Country, and no concern in Canada are Agents for ''Cooper'' Goods.

Yours truly,

Charles Cooper

CC/AVM

James F. Robertson, president of Manchester, Robertson, Allison, Limited, is in England on a pleasure trip. Joseph Allison, director of the firm, is also away from the city for a few weeks, and in their absence the affairs of the firm are in the hands of W. H. Barnaby.

A. V. Branscomb, head millinery and novelty buyer for M. R. A., sailed for England on the steamer Empress of Ireland, April 19. He will visit the various European markets. M. R. A. have offices in the Rue Richer, Paris, and Milk St., London.

One of the prettiest and most striking window displays of the past month was that arranged for Oak Hall, the King St. clothing house, in honor of St. George's Day. The color scheme was red and white with a few suits of black cloth attractively displayed. The background was made up of three large panels bearing alternately at the top and bottom of each, the cross of St. George, and wide red and white stripes. The flooring was panelled in red and white. A large picture of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, the banner of St. George's Society, and appropriate mottoes, with just enough dress suits and accessories to give a pleasing and tasteful appearance, made an effective and creditable display. Thomas Drummie, who looks after the window-dressing for Oak Hall, was greatly complimented upon his work.

Oak Hall has recently added a stock of hats and caps.

J. N. Harvey, the Union St. clothier, has bought the lease of the store now occupied by the International Correspondence Schools. This will give him all the ground floor space of the Opera House Block, with also one room on the first floor. He will then have the longest store front on one street of any house in the city. When Mr. Harvey started in business in March, 1901, he occupied only one of the four stores he now utilizes, but the rapid growth of his trade has made the constant enlarging of the premises necessary.

One of the features of the past month has been the gigantic sale of clothing conducted by Henderson & Hunt at their King St. premises. It lasted for ten days, and the big double page ads. which they published in various newspapers evidently resulted in the sale being a tremendous success, as their premises were constantly thronged with buyers.

Merchants in all lines of trade are greatly pleased at the announcement that extensive improvements are to be made in the I.C.R. facilities here. The congestion in the local railway yards, where seven miles of cars were in bond at one time, made it very difficult for merchants to get delivery of their goods, or to fill orders promptly. The Government has promised to make extensive changes and improvements in the yards so that there will not be a recurrence of the trouble next Winter.

The death occurred here on April 3rd, of William A. Cothers, one of the best known and most highly respected commercial men of the province. Mr. Cothers was for twenty-one years a traveler for J. M. Humphrey & Co., the well known wholesale shoe dealers, but latterly, on account of ill-health, he had left the road and conducted a grocery and commission business.

George E. Ford & Son, of Sackville, have opened a branch of their business at Bayfield Corner. They handle everything to be found in an up-to-date general store.

L. C. Wetmore, head clerk for E. O. Parsons, of the west side, left for Tacoma, Washington, about the first of the month. Hunter Parsons, formerly with M.R.A., succeeded him.

W. G. Smith, of M.R.A.'s buying staff, arrived home on the 24th from Europe via New York aboard the Oceanic.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE RAILWAYS.

The wholesale dry goods section of the Board of Trade, Montreal, met early in April, and discussed the draft bill of lading now being considered by the railway commissioners. The president of the association, William Agnew, who had just returned from a trip abroad, occupied the chair. Under the Railway Act, the railway companies cannot accept any responsibility, which was placed upon them under the law, unless they get the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners. As a consequence of this, they have drafted a set of terms and conditions of carriage which they have asked the commissioners to approve of. Almost every one of the twenty-nine causes of the proposed bill of lading is inserted, apparently with the express purpose of relieving the companies of responsibility for goods carried. The Wholesale Dry Goods Association, after careful consideration, communicated to the Council of the Board of Trade specific objections to the majority of the provisions of the draft. The members were of opinion that under no circumstances should the railway companies be relieved of any responsibility with respect to goods carried in their capacity as common carriers.

The Council of the Board of Trade is combining in one memorandum the recommendations of the various branches of the board. They are doing this for the purpose of laying it before the Board of Railway Commissioners. This is expressive of the opinions of merchants of Montreal generally on the question.

The unanimous desire of the merchants seems to be that the bill of lading should contain no conditions whatever, but should be merely a receipt for goods delivered for the purpose of carriage to their destination, the responsibility in connection with which should remain as now specified by the laws of the Dominion.

WALLACE, BLAKE, SHOULDICE, LIMITED.

An Ontario charter has been granted Wallace, Blake, Shouldice, Limited, Toronto, with a capital of $40,000, divided into $100 shares. The incorporators were: Edwin B. Wallace, Thomas J. Blake and John W. Shouldice, merchants; George F. Marter, gentleman, and Dora Parkin, book-keeper, all of Toronto. The object of the company is "to manufacture, sell and otherwise deal in dry goods and articles of a kindred type, and for such purpose to acquire the stock and goodwill of the business at present carried on at Toronto by the said E. B. Wallace, T. J. Blake and J. W. Shouldice, under the style of Wallace, Blake and Shouldice."

NO NEGOTIATIONS WITH GERMANY.

The Berlin Vossiche Zeitung states that it learns from a reliable source that Canada proposes to offer Germany a modification of the existing tariff on German goods, which would reduce the charges very nearly to the level of the tariff enjoyed by England, and that Canada demands in return a corresponding modification of German duties against Canada.

This report is discredited by inquiry of a member of the Canadian Government. The German Consul to Canada has on two or three occasions informally suggested that possibly an arrangement could be made between the two countries looking to a mutual lowering of the tariff on certain articles. But beyond these very vague pour parlers no definite proposals have been made nor are any contemplated at present by the Canadian Government.

Silks, Velvets and Velveteens

Silks in Greater Popularity—Satins for Elaborate Gowns —Velvets and Velveteens.

There is no doubt that fashion is favoring silk fabrics, and this in spite of the advancing market. Soft, supple makes of silk, with a brilliant finish, will be freely worn for reception and for evening wear, and also for separate waists this Fall. Though it is as yet early to predict just what the high novelties will be, Pekin stripes in satin and silk, in crepe and velvet, etc., will certainly be fashionable.

For the more formal occasions sheer silks and chiffon velvets will enter into keen rivalry, and a third fabric that is becoming fashionable is soft satin of the satin duchesse and of the ondoyant type. Satin is also coming to the front as a trimming fabric.

The demand for velvet for costume, trimming and millinery purposes is so great that manufacturers' plants are taxed to the utmost, notwithstanding the recent advances, and deliveries are, consequently, very slow.

Velveteens with a chiffon finish paons, and the regular lines of cotton and linen-back goods for costume millinery and trimming purposes are much in the same position, and the supply will be none too great next Fall.

TWEEDS AND TARTANS FOR FALL.

Tweeds, and homespuns in tweed effects, are being brought out in the fashionable stripes, plaids and checks, and in the popular Fall colorings. Tweeds, etc., have held their place in the trade for a long while now, and are likely to do so as long as prices keep upon the present high level, for they are about the only material that can be put upon the market at a certain price, and in cloths that sell below the dollar mark they will take the place of the higher-priced suitings.

Tartans are again to the fore for Fall wear and promise to be free sellers for misses' and children's wear. Contrary to the vogue in other lines, the vogue is for the more showy plaids. The red and black Rob Roy, and other tartans showing green and red are the ones finding most favor for Fall. Panamas, both in plain piece-dyed cloth and in fancies, are selling to the cutting-up trade.

Fall Colors

Tendency Towards Dark Colors—Three Colors Mingled in Fancy Cloths.

The color development is becoming interesting, and the tendency so noticeable last Fall, and during the present Spring, towards indefinite and sombre colors, is more than confirmed. The colorings, though decidedly darker than those of last Winter, are very rich. Brown, blue, green bronze, wine and taupe or smoke being those most popular. The exclusive stores will extend their range by buying odd shades in plain cloths. Amongst these the new plums that shade into both red and blue, some new blues and mauves, and also the peacock shades, will figure. The first-mentioned list of colors are those used in the make-up of fancy cloths, and generally in threes mingled.

Owing to the vogue of dark colorings, many buyers think that black will make a great gain this Fall, and black materials are showing in an unusually big range, particularly in silk and wool fabrics.

The fashionable colors this Fall are not clear, but are made of more than one tint, and shade off into other colors. There is also present a certain percentage of grey that lowers and deadens the tone. Take brown, for instance; in this color the shade that the fashionable woman is wearing is not the much-seen leather, or golden brown, but is a shade that has a certain mixture of both grey and brown, and producing a wood shade. The presence of this grey cast in the green shown for Fall produces a particularly beautiful series of silvery shades. There are also many indefinite blues shown, and the fashionable greys contain more than a hint of brown. The reds produced by this process are very attractive, and the new wines are sure to find favor.

Further Fall Indications

Crisper Finish and Slightly Heavier Fabrics Said to be Indicated for the Coming Fall.

Paris is now introducing rougher-finished cloths, and slightly heavier fabrics are expected to do well in the coming Fall and Winter. The tendency is towards materials with a crisper finish and with somewhat more body than those used in the past few seasons. These cloths are of the nature of unfinished worsteds, fancy cheviots, serges, etc. The tendency is strongly towards fancy effects, and in all materials the design is much of the same nature. The main idea is indistinctness, and a co-mingling and blending of colors, and this holds good in all designs whether they are stripes, checks or plaids. The pattern is also further broken up in many of the new fabrics by the weave employed, the herringbone and chevron weaves being especially prominent. Brown, blue and green are the prevailing colors in the majority of patterns. Shadow effects are also strong in both stripes and checks, and in the sheerer fabrics Pekin stripes are good.

The chief materials wanted for Fall are those that will develop well into the tailored and semi-tailored suit, though everything points to a big fancy season there will also be extra good business done in plain cloths, and broadcloths, Venetians, amazons and cloths of a like nature are safe to be good sellers on the Canadian market. These cloths also promise to be popular in fancy effects, and are showing in stripes, plaids and shadow weaves. These goods sold well in the high class trade last season and are now brought forward for the general trade. The patterns are, as in other cloths, of stripes and checks in two or three tones indistinctly mingled.

Spring Colors and Cloths

White and Black Effects in Stripes and Checks—Growing Vogue of Brown.

Suitings which at this season of the year are the leading sellers are showing in white and black effects, and also in dainty soft greys, with faint over checks of pastel coloring. These are the goods which The Review predicted would be the leading sellers when first Spring buying began to be discussed. Shepherd's checks, in black and white, and in the small and medium sizes are big sellers. Since the season opened stripes have rapidly come to the front, and as the trade has fought somewhat shy of stripes, desirable cloths are in none too good supply. More interest is being manifested in pale tan shades and in champagnes, etc. In plain cloths—broadcloths, both silk and wool voiles, wool crepes, silk and wool poplins, etc.—brown is rapidly coming to the front with the city trade. This holds good not only in the leather and tan shades, but also in the deeper shades of brown. Navy blue is another color that is selling freely, and, indeed, apart from the light shades in fancy tweeds and suitings, the colors selected are decidedly dark and low in tone, much darker, in fact, than those usually seen at this season. This is a tendency that shows every sign of developing further in the coming Fall.

Voiles in both wool and silk, and wool cloths, are selling freely, but fabrics of this class are none too plentiful in supply. There is quite a run upon black voiles, and the tendency is back to thicker and coarser makes.

For morning wear the Parisian women are taking to plainly tailored suits of checked or striped woollen fabrics, or of navy blue serge. These suits are simple and neat in the extreme, and the skirts are short and either kilted or sun-pleated. They are stitched tightly down to the hips. Many of the striped cloths have the circular skirt with a bias seam down the centre of the back and front, but no matter which cut is chosen the skirt is guiltless of any trimming. The short loose jacket, and the short fitting one, are equally well worn, and are trimmed either with a broad silk braid or with collar and cuffs of bright-colored velvet, orange, Empire green, Delft blue and wine being the colors used. The novel touch to these suits is, however, the guimpe or underblouse. This is developed in batiste, a white ground with tiny floral pattern being used. As the coat is cut low in front a good deal of the blouse shows, and, further, the blouse has long full sleeves that show below the wide short sleeves of the coat.

For afternoon, and for more formal wear, semi-tailored suits of piece-dyed cloth or serge are worn. These are made with the long skirt and a fitted redingote. Thick wool canvas or voile is also used for these suits, but not too thick to show the silk lining through.

It used to be that fabrics and colors suited to the season of the year were worn; now it is difficult to tell for which season fabrics are intended. Only this last Winter white was accepted for street wear, and voiles and other sheer fabrics were regularly used for Winter gowns. Not only is this the case, but heavy and sheer fabrics are combined in both Winter and Summer gowns. Thus chiffons and nets are trimmed with cloth and velvet, and these heavy fabrics are, in turn, trimmed with net, lace and chiffon. And even in colors the same idea prevails, for the colors chosen this Spring, for all but suitings, are dark and sombre in tone.

There is a tendency to feature wool delaines as a Summer fabric. They are good sellers at the present time in the city stores, and promise to do even better when the warmer weather arrives. There is every indication that the country trade intends to follow suit, for even now there is a good enquiry for this fabric, and it is altogether probable that delaine will take a high place this year as a Summer fabric. The idea is practical, and particularly for children's wear delaine is to be recommended, as it washes and wears exceedingly well. It is easy to do up and so saves the laundry bill. It is expected that delaine will be chosen instead of fancy patterned muslins for Summer wear.

GOOD BUYING FOR FALL.

Large city retailers are ordering strongly on broadcloths and Venetians. Fancy broadcloths are also being very well taken. The colors predominating are of sombre shades in phantom stripes and check effects. Next, in order come panamas and voiles in the heavier weaves Cheviots are also being ordered freely. The colors most likely to be popular are blacks, blues, brown and grey in the order named.

There is likely to be a fair demand for Canadian goods this Fall. The local manufacturers have been doing their utmost to give their tweeds and homespuns a fine, soft, bright finish, in order to compete with the more favored French and German goods. The season's output will show a very decided improvement on previous efforts. On the whole a very good season is looked for, owing to the scarcity of imported lines and the trouble experienced with deliveries.

DRESS GOODS PROBLEMS

By W. B. MOWATT, of The John Murphy Co., Montreal.

Stock-Keeping and Display — Slow-Selling Lines — Returned Goods—Samples, Etc.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the first of a series of articles dealing with selling problems in the Dress Goods Department. Buyers for this department in city stores are giving their opinions upon a wide range of subjects coming under this head. Their remarks should be of value and interest, and their courtesy will be appreciated by our readers.

An up-to-date dress goods department in any of our large stores has for its main object RESULTS. Every effort is made in that direction, and to be successful the manager must take the public for his critic and his guide.

Stock-keeping and Display.

Stock-keeping and the display of goods must go hand in hand. A well laid out department loses much of its attractiveness if the goods in the fixtures do not correspond in neatness, classification and good order with those displayed about the counters and stands. See that your goods are well blocked, neatly wrapped in clean paper, ticketed and priced.

Clerks should make a rule of dusting a row of fixtures every morning, throwing out the short lengths, measuring and ticketing them, so that their stock will always look fresh and new. Such a practice will give their goods a high-class tone, which a badly-kept stock never has.

Never keep goods displayed in the same place for more than a week at a time. Frequent changes add attractiveness and show better results. The same goods displayed in various ways, such as full tone, half-tone or mixed color schemes are always effective.

Samples.

Upon receiving new goods, cut a sample of each piece, keep a cutting in your stock sample book for reference, and use the remainder for customers' samples.

The matter of giving samples is a subject which requires delicate handling. Personally, I believe in referring customers to a sample department, instead of the counter, where asking for samples is very often used as a means of spending a pleasant afternoon, to see and be seen, without the least intention of buying.

Handling of Returned Goods.

Goods returned from a customer should be accompanied by the purchase bill and if returned within a reasonable time and in good condition should be accepted by the manager without a murmur. I would stipulate that if the length is a remnant length an allowance should be deducted from the bill, in proportion to reduction generally made on remnants. This is only reasonable, and, if explained in the proper way, is always accepted by a fair-minded customer.

Slow-selling Goods.

Dress goods are divided into three sections—staples, fancies and season's goods. The first mentioned are always good, in so far as they are always saleable, but the fact that the market value rises and falls sometimes. For this reason the successful buyer must use his discretion in conjunction with his over-turn when making purchases ahead.

Fancies and season's goods lose first caste after they are three months in stock, and an effort to clear them out should immediately be made. First loss is always the least loss—that should always be borne in mind by the manager.

Fancy goods that have once been placed on sale should never be replaced in your regular stock. They should be kept for sale purposes, where their usefulness is often proved. They form a good ad., besides augmenting your reputation for holding genuine sales on the one hand and keeping an up-to-date, high-class, fresh stock on the other.

Treatment of Salesmen.

Treat your salesmen as men. Make them feel that they have a voice in running their section. Have your rules and see that they are carried out to the letter. The better the man the more ready will he be to comply with any rule that is laid down for the better working of the department. Never show partiality to any of your salesmen, but treat them all alike.

Treatment of Customers.

Salesmen should always be respectful to their customers. Don't harass them, but ever be on the alert to answer any questions they may ask, and in every case, where difference of opinion may arise, refer them to the floorwalker or manager of the department.

When making a sale never overlook the fact that what you are selling is your ad. for future business. Impress your customer on this point very strongly, and add to this your readiness to suggest anything that will help your customer in making her purchases.

Never dispute or question with a customer, but always bear in mind that you are there to sell goods, not to argue.

Wash Dress Goods

Considerable Difficulty Experienced in Filling Orders — Prices Very Stiff.

Considerable difficulty is found by the wholesalers in filling their orders on many of the types now in special favor. It is stated that in many cases mills have been unable to cope with the demand owing to the shortage of materials. The growth in wash goods during the last two years has been so enormous that manufacturers were unprepared for the demand created. The reason for this is very easily seen, when fabrics of this nature are compared with those of two years ago. Manufacturers have put forth all their energy to make these lines as attractive as high-priced silks and other high-class dress materials.

Prices are firm, and will continue so for a considerable period. Looking one year ahead, it would seem as though a break was impossible. Certainly there is little possibility of it occurring during 1907. Prices have advanced from 10 per cent. to 30 per cent. on these goods since January of this year. The outlook for Fall at present is very serious. A number of domestic and foreign manufacturers have withdrawn prices on some lines of staple goods. Those not withdrawn have been raised to such a figure that it will be impossible to place contracts at the figure which they are now quoting. Should prices remain for Fall, as at the present time, it will surely mean a great advance in cost for Spring, 1908.

White, as usual, continues to be the leader. White mercerized brocades and plain mercerized Irish linen suitings have met with marked favor. Just now white dressed ducks, of both linen and cashmere finish, promise to be very popular. White batistes and French organdies are in demand in the wholesale trade. In Persian lawns the demand has been so great that in many cases jobbing houses have been unable to keep a complete assortment of these goods, and, consequently, stocks are rather depleted. Swiss spots and lace striped muslins are active and demands have been steady. No doubt when the warm weather arrives these goods will move much more rapidly. In colored effects, the colored organdie muslins of medium price are favorites to date. A good organdie muslin to sell at 25c. per yard has had the greatest demand so far this season with the wholesalers. No doubt as the season advances lower priced colored muslins will become more popular. As designs, colors and weaves of these materials improve year by year, a prominent wash dress goods buyer states that as the Summer progresses present indications point to there being a shortage in colored floral muslins.

THE SMITH-RUNCIMAN CO., LIMITED.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Smith-Runciman Company, Limited, Toronto, with a capital of $75,000 dollars, divided into $100 shares. The incorporators were: John Ogilvy, of Montreal, merchant; Henry William Smith, Thomas Runciman and Richard Sidney Smith, merchants; and Joseph Sanford Booth, accountant, all of Toronto. The objects of the company are "to manufacture, import, sell and deal in millinery, dry goods, fancy goods and similar goods and merchandise, and also to carry on various other business which it may probably or possibly be desirable to carry on in conjunction therewith; to acquire, take over and carry on the business of The Smith-Runciman Company, wholesale manufacturers of and dealers in millinery."

A NEW CODE SYSTEM.

Mitchell's self-testing code, a new system for the transmission of messages by telegraph or cable, is being introduced into this market. It is so arranged that one word may convey several meanings, such as "article," "quality," "price," "quantity," "terms," etc. For instance, "Zygumtabuk Wabxytocogy Mitkekulty Rupadcevar Lofrabfack" interpreted reads as follows: "Kid gloves, ship as per sample number 15-52a, 12 dozen 6¾, 18 dozen 6½, 24 dozen 7¾, assort 15 per cent. blue, 20 per cent. black, 25 per cent. tan, balance assort latest colors. Samples wanted quickly, forward by express." The address of the company handling this system is 8 Colborne St., Toronto.

THE
Indispensable for the Open-Air Girl.

"LADY'S REALM" says:

"The out-door girl who loves to cycle, walk and drive will never wear anything but a 'PIRLE' costume when she has once donned one. It may be the shower of May or the storm of November, her neat cloth dress will remain unspotted and unshrunk, and, when dry, will be as fresh as when it came from the tailor's hands."

Registered Trade Mark

"Madge" in "Truth" says:

"Every dressmaker ought to leave out a bit of selvedge somewhere with the 'PIRLE' stamp on it, as this affords an absolute guarantee for the wearer.

"The proprietors undertake to make good any material so stamped that has been actually damaged by rain."

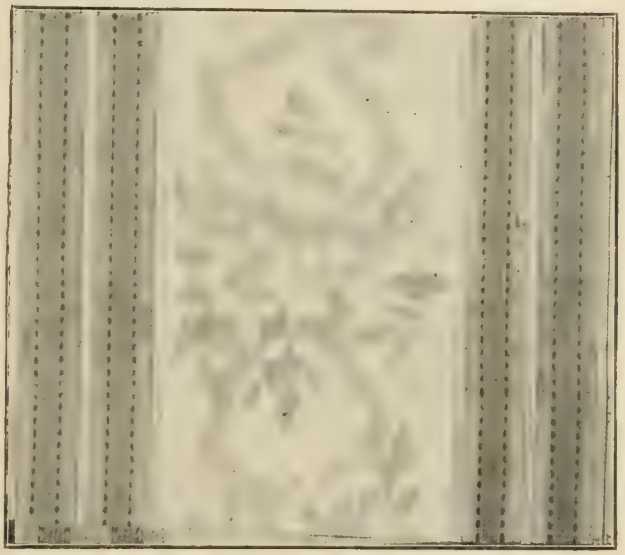
Ribbons

Prices Advance Again—Dresdens and Failletines in Big Demand—Brown Velvet Ribbon Scarce.

Deliveries of desirable Spring ribbons to the importing houses continue to be slow and unsatisfactory. The retailer has not yet begun to feel the full force of the situation, as he is protected by the yet almost unbroken stocks in the hands of the wholesale houses. As the season progresses and these stocks become depleted he will find repeats very hard to secure. Therefore he should watch his stock carefully and be sure to order well ahead, in order to keep up his assortments. In ordering he must also bear in mind the much wider and more extensive demand that the buying public is sure to make upon this department.

Prices are higher, too, and another advance has to be recorded in both domestic and imported ribbons. The silk market is very firm, and all the tendencies are in an upward direction. Manufacturers complain that even when the full price is paid for raw silks, deliveries are poor and uncertain, and this is safe to be reflected in the finished article later. Already they are asking a long date for deliveries, and orders placed now with foreign manufacturers cannot be delivered in Canada before early in January. Prices have advanced from 20 per cent. to 30 per cent. over those of 1906.

The ribbon counters in the retail stores were thronged all last month, the big sellers being Dresdens, and plain ribbons in failletine, taffeta and satin duchesse makes. Roman stripes sold well, but plaids and tartans were somewhat slow. A novelty ribbon that sold well was a Dresden with 3-4-inch satin and moire stripes running parallel.



Shantung Ribbon.

A combination of all-over check and Dresden is another effective ribbon, and is useful as a millinery or as a sash ribbon.

Velvet ribbons, particularly in 9 and 16 widths, are selling well, greens and browns being the colors in demand. Brown velvet ribbon is about the scarcest thing on the ribbon market at the present time, and there are very few jobbers who have any of this ribbon in stock.

The leading shades are Copenhagen or Alice blue, London smoke, wine and golden brown, with greys, navies, and cardinal also selling well. White and black are always staple shades and big sellers. As in other departments, the demand is for a better quality of ribbon. Large city retailers report that from 25 cents per yard to $2.75 are the selling prices, with the bulk of the business done in ribbons selling from 25 cents to 90 cents.

Dresden Stripe Ribbon.
Shown by Debenhams (Canada) Ltd., Montreal.

Now that prosperity is widespread retailers should take advantage of the opportunity afforded to raise the standard of their department by pushing better lines. This is particularly easy now, as the cheap lines show the advances more clearly than do the higher priced goods, and when the better ribbon is shown against the cheaper one the difference is so apparent that the extra price is easily obtained. Ribbons selling from 35 cents up show little change, as even though he has had to sacrifice quality a little the manufacture is able to manipulate good ribbons a little, whereas he cannot take anything from the cheaper grades and make them look well.

It is a wise plan, and one that The Review has often advocated, to show from time to time fancy articles made of ribbon. Cushions of handsome Dresden or other fancy ribbons, cushion frills, etc., are always salable. Coiffure ornaments and ribbons made into neckpieces also have a certain sale. The latest novelty is a corset cover made of Dresden ribbon, lace insertion and beading. These take a good quantity of beading and have a very dainty effect under the sheer lingerie blouses now so universally worn. A pattern should be procured and given away to the woman who buys the necessary quantity of ribbon to make a corset cover. Try this scheme as a help to ribbon sales.

Parasols

Only Fine Weather is Wanted to Start Selling Season.

The only thing needed now to start brisk selling in this department in the retail stores is fine and warm seasonable weather. The high novelty of the season is the lingerie parasol, which promises to be almost as big a success as other lingerie items of Summer dress, viz., the lingerie hat and the lingerie waist.

There is a varied assortment of lingerie styles showing. At the head of the list stands the linen parasol, Irish hand-embroidered, which is the lingerie parasol de luxe. That of all-over embroidery is another good style. This model has generally a lining of silky mercerized cotton fabric pinked out at the edge. The cheaper kinds have insets of Swiss insertion and edge. Ribs are generally gilded or silvered, and the fashionable handle is of natural wood in dull finish. Stripes are the big feature of colored lines, the chine stripes being most in vogue. In the more expensive silk models some handsome and attractive color effects are seen, generally with the dark stripe for the border, though some are shown with this reversed, the dark edge being at the top of the parasol and the light stripe forming the border. These silk chines are duplicated in mercerized cottons and are expected to command a large sale.

Braids and Trimmings

Braids the Big Sellers—Increasing Interest in Drop Ornaments.

Though a certain amount of handsome embroidered trimmings in soft colorings, in Empire and Japanese patterns, will be taken by the better trade, business in this department promises to run popularly on braids and drop ornaments. All widths of braid are selling, but medium pulls and soutaches are the big sellers. Plaid braids, in pulls, promise well, and will be a good deal used on the dark cloths and suitings to be so much worn this Winter. Drops in cords, braids, and also in paillettes are showing. One thing that is militating against the sale of drops is the fact that many merchants have stock on hand from last season.

Veilings

Splendid Veiling Season is Developing—A Big Color Season.

The veiling counter grows in interest each week, and what promises to be a splendid season has already been inaugurated. The colored veil holds the field—even the much-liked magpie effects having to take a second place.

Now that the Summer season is opening up lighter colors are more enquired for and champagnes and baby blue promise to be big sellers. The present vogue is for browns, wines, navys, greys and greens. The white chantilly net with lace edge is a good seller. Chantilly nets, esprit and even plain Brussels nets, with fancy chiffon borders, are big sellers. Mesh veils, with one or two rows of ribbon velvet as a border, are in good style. There is also the heavy silk buttonhole edge, and heavy borders of dotted chenille. The filet or square mesh is the latest novelty, and, later, striped bordered chiffon veils will be good sellers. This department, if given the requisite attention, and if a proper proportion of novelties is stocked, should be a very profitable one this season. Handsome and expensive veils have sold well, and, evidently, there is more disposition on the part of the retailer to push these better goods.

Gloves

Fabric Gloves in Short Supply—Small Fall Orders for Long Gloves—Tan Gauntlets.

Favorable reports of the Easter glove business are received from all sections of the country. In most cases retailers made a gain in the month's sales over March, 1906.

Among retailers at the present time long gloves in 12-button lengths, in both glace and fabric effects, are selling better than ever. Colors predominating are largely whites, blacks, tans, navy blues, champagnes, and golden brown. The dull, dead and dark shades of brown are rapidly giving way to the lighter shades of tan, and to the brighter and more lustrous golden brown, which has so much to recommend it. Incidentally it might be mentioned that this is the color which is destined to have a strong run in footwear, and the sale of the one should naturally influence the sale of the other. Short gloves in both glace and fabric, also slightly in suede effects, give every promise of becoming very popular as the season progresses, and just now are enjoying active sales. Retailers state that the majority of goods ordered are now in stock, and that retail prices remain as usual. They also find that prices have advanced fully 10 per cent. to 25 per cent. over last year. Jobbers in some cases are getting any reasonable price asked.

The wholesale market is in a very healthy condition, so far as ordering is concerned. Jobbers are short of fabric gloves, and deliveries are extremely slow on lisles and the cheaper long lace gloves. These lines, on being received by the jobber, are immediately shipped to the retailers who are clamoring for the goods. This is particularly noticeable in the cheaper lines. In view of the conditions prevailing, merchants should anticipate their requirements and order immediately if deliveries are to be had on time.

Orders placed so far for Fall in ladies' glace gloves are up to the standard. Orders for the short wrist glove, namely one and two domes, have met with marked favor so far. Salesmen state it is a hard job to convince buyers that long gloves will be very active for Fall, and the consequence is that very small quanities have been ordered. Colors predominating are blacks, tans, whites and a few light shades of pink and sky, also tans and golden brown. The demand for short glace gloves in two domes is so good the general opinion is that it will be quite hard to get deliveries for Fall.

Over last year prices have advanced from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. Goods selling at $12 last Fall cannot be had just now for less than $15. This represents the average advance.

One of the latest developments in the glove market is the strong demand for tan gauntlets which has sprung up in many parts of the country, and more especially in towns, where are located colleges and academies for girl students. This gauntlet tendency should be watched closely by the retailers. This glove is of suede finish with fringe attachment and brought out only in tan coloring. Sales are very active considering the short time it has been on the market. Early in the Spring it met with marked favor, but towards the end of the month sales died down a little, principally owing to the warm weather.

For Fall it is expected this line will again come to the fore and enjoy the comfortable sale it previously had. It is manufactured only in Canada and retails from $2 to $3 per pair.

Neckwear

This Line is a Big Seller—Many Novelties in the Summer Goods.

Neckwear manufacturers are still extra busy, though they are beginning to catch up with back orders now. The trade is starting to sell and show Summer neckwear, though makers, in order to get to work on wash goods, have had to withdraw their silk samples. The continued cold weather, no doubt, accounts for the interest silk neckwear still holds, an interest that will doubtless cease with the first fine warm days.

There is a growing feeling for turn-down collars, the Peter Pans leading in Canada at any rate. It seems certain that something will be doing in starched turn-over collars. The deep ones still hang fire, but those narrow and starched, from their greater becomingness and comfort, are having a much better reception, and are selling freely. Starched Peter Pans are out-edged with the latest frilling novelty, the tourist frilling of fluted muslin, which, by the way, is the frilling success of the season so far.

Equally popular, if not more so, are the soft fancy embroidery and lace trimmed Peter Pans, accompanied as they are, by dainty buttoned-on lawn and lace-pleated jabots. These jabots are also worn with the turn-over tab collars, which are selling as freely as though they were the latest novelty out.

Perky little fluted silk bows in black or colored silk are selling, to be worn with the stiff collars. The novelty in turn-overs is that of silk or lawn, with colored embroidery. This is done in art colors, and in semi-conventional floral designs.

The stock promises to be a big proposition. Smart little made-up stocks in lawn and lace are extra good, and the embroidered stock is also a free seller. Tailored stocks are immensely popular, especially the hunting stock. Some of these have soft turn-overs, and all fasten at the back, the ends tying one in front and being fastened with a fancy pearl pin. All kinds of Windsors are big sellers, and in lace neckwear, fancy yokes of princesse lace are the feature.

Lace

Calais and Nottingham Laces in Desirable Patterns Are Scarce.

Owing to poor deliveries, Calais and Nottingham laces, especially vals., are scarce in desirable widths and qualities. Some bargains have been offered in this lace but when investigated the goods have been found to be of very coarse mesh and of a wider width than fashion is favoring. The problem now is, what about late deliveries—deliveries that will not be to hand in time for the present season's trade? The proportion of orders in many cases is large, and is giving food for thought for many merchants. It wholly depends upon the position and circumstances as to what course a merchant must take. Either he has to accept the goods and carry all he cannot sell over, or, as in some cases, he will cancel all orders not delivered before the first of June and place orders for January delivery. He will have the goods in hand bought possibly at a lower figure if he adopts the first course and in the latter case he will have the novelties. Valenciennes are, with cotton clunys and fine torchons, good still, and promise to be the leading sellers.

Filet is gaining ground and promises an immense vogue, both as a lace proper and also as a combining motif with other laces. There is an increasing interest in net laces, both all-overs and flouncings. The net lace and the lace net blouse is to be the late season waist, and is to be a big seller in the Fall and Winter. Just now white and cream are the sellers, but already an enquiry is developing for deep ecru. Lace robes, yokes and berthas promise splendidly for Fall.

Western Dry Goods Trade

Spring and Summer dry goods trade is on with a big rush, and in spite of the many adverse conditions under which business has been conducted since the first of the year, the wholesale houses report larger sales than in any previous season. In part this has been due to the general publicity among the retail trade given to the undoubted fact that stocks are low in many lines of goods—particularly cottons—and that the manufacturers will have great difficulty in taking care of repeat orders. Trade papers and commercial travelers have given publicity to this fact, and as a consequence the retail trade have wisely anticipated their requirements in these lines of goods. At the moment the late opening of Spring has hindered the movement of cotton goods, prints, etc.; but, nevertheless, sales are largely in excess of last year.

The problem of the wholesaler this Spring has not been to sell goods, but to get the goods to sell and to make deliveries after they are sold. Shipments from the east have been delayed weeks and months owing to the congestion of traffic on the north shore route of the C.P.R., and, as everyone knows, the railways in the west have been unable to attend properly to their passenger traffic, to say nothing of freight.

At time of writing the congestion of traffic on the C.P.R. north shore route is still very serious, although for the first time since last December the yards at Fort William are free of cars. In Western Canada the C.P.R. lines are now in fair shape, but the C.N.R. lines are still badly blocked. On some of the branch lines traffic has not yet been resumed, and even on the lines where trains are running the service is still uncertain and irregular. The experience of the severest Winter in twenty years has shown how utterly inadequate is the equipment of the western roads, and how necessary it is in the interests of business, that the Governments, Dominion and Provincial, should exercise a constant supervision in railway matters. The west wants more railways, but, perhaps, the greater need is to have the lines already built equipped properly with rolling stock and motive power. It is the imperative duty of the Governments to see that the railways make every effort to secure this necessary equipment.

What of the present business situation? Of course money is "tight" as a result of the conditions which have obtained during the last few months. Last Fall when ordinarily the railroads should have had every car employed in moving the wheat crop there was a sudden imperative call from Alberta for cars to ship cattle eastward to the Liverpool market. The year 1906 was the best in the history of the Canadian ranchers, as prices were high and the cattle were in prime condition. But one result of the prosperity of the Alberta ranchers was to cause trouble for the Saskatchewan and Manitoba grain growers. The railways were able to make only a beginning at moving the crop, and, as a result, the farmers did not get the money for their wheat. True, many have received advances from the banks on the security of warehouse and elevator receipts, but the great majority are waiting for the opening of navigation before they can realize on their work for 1906. As a consequence, the retailers have been carrying their customers and the wholesalers and manufacturers have been carrying the retailers. Add to this the fact that the railways have been badly tied up all Winter and the reason why money has been "tight" can readily be understood.

There is not, however, any reason for alarm. Another month will see a great change in the situation. The wheat crop will commence to move freely again and money will be set in circulation. The obligations of the west will then be discharged. In the meantime the keenest business men, the men who have the most thorough acquaintance with conditions in the west are unanimous in the expression of the opinion that a little patience on part of creditors is all that is required to tide over present temporary difficulties. The prosperity of the Canadian west rests upon a solid stable basis.

The lesson of the Winter's experiences is the absolute necessity for more railways and for better equipment for the lines already built

Waists

Big Sale in Spite of Cold Weather—Between Season Novelties.

The cold April has had little effect upon the sale of lingerie waists, which so far has been of record-breaking proportions. Another factor that ought to make for a further improvement in this department is that some of the newer firms are constantly creating novelties in waist styles. This has been done for some time by a few firms making high-class waists, but it is a totally new departure in the popular end of the trade. The firms making this change in selling methods have their travelers constantly out on the road with other lines, and, consequently, this frequent showing will add little to their selling expenses. It will be a great help to the outside merchant, as he will be able to offer the big attraction of something fresh each month in his waist department, and the merchant who recognizes what a trade puller novelty is will welcome this idea.

Lawn Tourist Waist.

As in the past few years, the trade is turning to a plainer style of waist for the outing season. This waist is not a fore-runner of any change in the general style, but is made to wear at times when the more elaborate waist is not desirable. The newer ones are developed in white lawn, tailor fashion, and the front pleats are trimmed on each side with fluted ruffles made of the new tourist frilling. Checked and fancy muslin is also used in building this class of waist. Many of the waists are finished at the neck with Peter Pan collars, edged with the fluting. This is the high novelty in waist styles at present.

Another mid-season idea is the use of bands of tucking as a trimming for lawn waists in addition to the lace and embroidery trimming. What are practically all-over waists are developed from tucked and inserted lawns, nets and jap silks, the tuck being edged with a narrow lace edging, often in the form of a ruffle. These waists are very popular, but care should be taken, in fitting full figures, to see that there is plenty of room over the bust, and it will often be advisable to sell a size larger to the customer than is usually worn. This holds good in all waists that have tucks running all the length of the blouse front. There is a big demand developing for net and all-over net lace blouses. As yet cream is the wanted color, but already ecru is being asked for. These waists are lined with japan silks, and there is some demand for colored linings.

Silk waists are steady sellers, chiefly in white and black and dark colors, and with some chemisette arrangement of lace. A splendid little model, which is proving a successful seller, is of soft white liberty with a Dutch neck edged with strapping of Irish lace.

Cloaks and Skirts

Gibson Shoulder the Early Fall Novelty—Pleated Skirts Still Good.

Travelers for ready-to-wear garments have been on the road for some time now, and reports are to the effect that a record business is being done. They state that the large advances in price have not affected the ordering to any extent.

It is reported that British cloth manufacturers are extremely busy and are asking very late deliveries. Prices are very stiff and the general opinion among the trade is that they will remain so. Merchants will find popular priced goods rather hard to procure at old prices, owing to wages increasing, and also to the scarcity of material. Prices on coats have advanced from 20 per cent to 25 per cent. over last year. In view of the conditions prevailing it would be to the Canadian merchant's interest to look well ahead and book orders early on staple styles.

Skirts of panama and chiffon broadcloth, also plain and fancy cheviots, are in high favor for Fall. In addition to the brown cloths, in the leather or so-called saddle shade, navy blue cloths will be very popular. Navy blue serge, in light weight, is taking rank along with the more ultra shades in brown. Green cardinal is also particularly good. These shades are shown in checks, tweeds, plaid effects, and also stripes in darker tones. Styles in skirts will continue on pleated, strapping and fold effects. Fold skirts are the latest novelty on the market. They are shown in fancy tweeds and mixtures in pleats or stripes.

In ladies' coats manufacturers state that just now the Gibson effect is by far the best seller on the market. Dark tweeds are very popular, and olive brown is also selling well. A popular tendency on ladies' coats this season is toward a quantity of buttons and soutache braid, which are used for trimmings. They show the coat to advantage. Loose coats continue to hold first place in the early models. There is a tendency toward plain cloths in beaver effects, and these goods may be more popular later. Broad shoulder effects are the wanted early styles.

Corsets

Price-cutting in Cheap Corsets—Bust Supporters Promise to be Big Sellers.

A pretty serious situation seems to be developing in the corset trade in Canada, and the worst feature is that no good and sufficient reason can be advanced for it. This is the campaign of price-cutting and underselling in the very cheapest lines of Canadian-made corsets that is raging at the present time.

Just why a time of great prosperity, when the enlightened manufacturer and merchant are using every effort to encourage the sale of better made and more profitable goods, should be chosen for such a flurry to take place in the lowest end of the trade is hard to say, unless it is that many buyers of corsets, like a few old timers in other lines, are influenced in their buying, and judge the values in their better lines, by the extra value given in the corsets to sell out at 35 cents and 50 cents. Should this be the case a good deal that is enigmatical in the situation will be made clear. We see just why so many merchants fall down in their corset selling, and also the reason for the growth of business along this line in the department stores which do a mail order trade.

There are many businesses where these cheap lines have to be stocked, but, we are certain, that not one in which it is wise to push them. The only safe foundation upon which to build a corset department is the satisfactory wearing and fitting qualities of the goods carried. Sell a woman a good corset, one that keeps its shape, fits comfortably and improves her figure, and you have made two eloquent friends for your department, viz., the woman herself and the dressmaker who builds her gown.

It is not to your interest to push cheap corsets, for, in the first place, they cost you just as much to sell, take up as much space, and all your other expenses are just as high, as on the better and more profitable goods. Neither do you get adequate profit or reputation from their sale. If your present help cannot sell good corsets clear them out and get those who can. It requires tact and persuasion on the part of your saleswoman to make a customer pay a higher price for her first pair of good corsets, but if they are the right size and style she will ask for them again when she comes to buy, simply because of the greater comfort and durability, and the improvement they have made in her figure.

Then why in these prosperous times push the sale of these cheap corsets; those that net you little profit and less reputation? It is not because your customers cannot afford to pay more than 35 cents or 50 cents for a pair but because you show and push goods at that price. Though they are well gotten up, and look just as good to the eye, of necessity the materials and wearing qualities are poor. If this is true in the past, what must you expect them to be now that the price of practically everything that goes into a corset, labor included, has gone away up. If you demand a 35-cent or a 50-cent corset—and one with hose supporters at that—from the manufacturer, he is going—reluctantly, he says, but because your demand is insistent—to give it to you. You, however, are not going to get a 50-cent article for 35 cents, nor a dollar one for 50 cents. The extra cost will come out of the quality of the corsets you buy, and it is your trade and your customers—and also the reputation of the Canadian manufacturers for making a good and reliable corset—that will suffer. It is you, yourself, and the manufacturer who will have to pay the piper.

There is a side line in the corset department that most merchants will find it profitable to take up, as so many women want the fashionable firm bust effect who do not like the high bust corsets. Even where the high bust is chosen this article, if worn, makes a great improvement in the contour of the figure. It is the bust supporter, or brassiere, as the French call it. The kind we show cuts of is about one of the best, and is enjoying a big sale in the city department stores and also with the leading exclusive dressmakers. Though primarily designed for improving stout figures, it is such an improvement, as it rounds the figure and eliminates the unsightly line left by the top of the corsets that even women with slim figures are adopting it. It is light in weight, easily adjusted, and adds to, rather than detracts from, the comfort of the wearer. It can be used as a substitute for a corset cover, as it is daintily trimmed and easily laundried. Should any merchant feel interested The Review will be pleased to give further particulars.

VISIT THE MARKET.

As the Spring season rapidly draws to a close in manufacturing centres an important lesson is easily read by retailers. Manufacturers in Montreal, Toronto, Quebec, Ottawa, and, in fact, any centre where ready-to-wear goods are turned out, have been exceptionally busy. They have been bothered with slow deliveries from the mills, lack of sufficient skilled help, and, as a result, retailers have often had trouble in securing desirable new styles.

The manufacturing trade have been so busy they could not keep in close touch with retailers. However, in every branch of the industry many styles have been turned out which they could not afford to sample. Orders have piled in so quickly that oversold lines have been common. It is the aim of every good manufacturer to avoid this contingency. This explains why sample rooms in their factories are often the only places where certain styles are to be seen.

With this in view the necessity of visiting your natural ready-to-wear market is clearly seen. It is now no longer necessary to argue that frequent trips to market pay. It only needs a season like the one now drawing to a close to strengthen this point. A merchant in the market can often see styles not on the road, and is generally sure of picking up a few desirable lots.

Whitewear

Feature Underwear Sets—June Sales Will Find Prices Considerably Higher Than in January.

Dainty underwear sets should be pushed to the front in the coming month for the benefit of June brides. Not only will the prospective bride buy them, but if daintily boxed and shown, they will be favorably regarded by the practical-minded when wedding presents are being selected.

The usual plan followed by the manufacturer is to make garments to match so that they can be sold separately or by the set, and so that the set can be made up of any or all of the pieces. Two or three tasteful windows devoted to fine underwear, and to the showing of sets, should be made during May and June. June sales will be generally held, but prices, as compared with the January sales, will be much higher. Some firms in the trade, in an endeavor to meet old prices, miscalculated and gave merchants an opportunity to offer some startlingly good values last January. They are now back in the price line, and June sales will reflect the higher figures.

Conditions in the West

What is the actual outlook for business in the Canadian west? Has the country suffered much as a result of the hard Winter? Will the severe Winter seriously affect immigration, or will it affect it at all? Collections are slow now and money seems to be unusually tight in the west. Is this condition likely to last long? These are questions in which the business men of the country are very much interested and it is important that they should be acquainted with the actual conditions. Business men want the truth about the situation, not statements colored by the buoyant optimism of the west or the rose-tinted eye-glasses of the east.

To begin with, it must be admitted by all who give the subject any consideration that there is something wrong with the present state of affairs. Money is undeniably "tight" and business is suffering as a consequence. The banks are carrying many large business concerns and they are finding it hard to get the money to supply the requirements of their customers. In the Winter season when money should be plentiful it is becoming increasingly difficult to make collections.

Railways at the Bottom of it.

The root of the trouble, as far as the west in concerned, lies with the railways. They have not kept up with the growth of the country. Their rolling stock and motive equipment are inadequate, under even the most favorable circumstances, to handle the western traffic; consequently the worst Winter in twenty years put the junior roads almost completely out of business and very seriously crippled the senior road. These are facts which cannot be disputed.

Even had the past Winter been normal there were special reasons why the railways were up against a serious situation. In the Fall, when every available car is required to move the wheat crop, there was a sudden and unexpected call from Alberta to move live stock east. Heavy falls of rain in Alberta during the month of August were responsible for a luxuriant growth of grass and the ranch cattle were fat and in prime condition. At the same time there was a rise of about two cents per pound in the price of beef in the London and Liverpool markets. Heavy shipments resulted, and 1906 was undoubtedly the greatest cattle year the west has ever known. These cattle shipments required a great number of cars, and whlle the cattle shippers in Alberta are prosperous, the farmers in Saskatchewan and Manitoba complained that there were insufficient cars to move their wheat. When navigation closed at Fort William it was seen that there had been much reason in their complaints. When navigation closed, on Dec. 12th, the big terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur were practically empty, and from Sept. 1st, 1906, to Dec. 12th, 1906, the number of cars shipped was 2,443 less than for the corresponding period in 1905. Practically the whole of the Saskatchewan and a good proportion of the Manitoba crop remained to be marketed. The whole of the 1906 crop will not be marketed until the 1907 crop is ready for transportation.

Fall of the Egg Basket.

Now, it is a commonplace remark that the west has all its eggs in one basket, that everything depends upon the wheat crop. Generally speaking, this is true, and when the railways were unable to move the crop promptly it was inevitable that there should be a serious shortage of ready cash in the country. It is true that money was advanced by the banks on the security of the crops, but it must be remembered that these advances have been hindered by a world-wide money stringency, due to a great variety of causes. On the great bulk of the wheat crop yet unmarketed the banks have not advanced any cash, probably because they were unable to do so in the state of the money market this Winter.

As it Looks Now.

This, then, is the present situation. Money is undeniably "tight," and all interests are waiting impatiently for the opening of navigation. When the wheat crop commences to move the present stringency will be greatly relieved and most of the obligations of the west will undoubtedly be discharged. There is no reason lor undue anxiety; in fact, the business men who are best acquainted with conditions in western Canada, and who have had the longest experience in business in the west, are the men who are most optimistic as to the immediare future. The prosperity of the country rests upon too sure and stable foundations to be disturbed seriously by the circumstances of the last six months. Western Canada is past the experimental stage. The tide of immigration is flowing in, unchecked by startling and exaggerated reports of the rigors of a severe Winter, the railways are planning larger extensions this season than in any previous Summer, and real estate values are steadily advancing. A little patience on the part of eastern manufacturers and wholesalers is all that is required. In a few weeks conditions will right themselves.

In one respect the severe Winter, with its resulting hardship to business, has been a blessing in disguise. It has brought to the attention of the general public, of the railway officials, of the Railway Commission, and of the Government, the fact that the equipment of the railways is quite inadequate to the needs of the country. Great efforts will now be made to remedy this state of affairs; greater efforts than would have been made had not the need been made so apparent by the events of the past few months.

A POINT FOR THE WHOLESALE HOUSES.

Upon the situation surrounding the strained condition of the market in all dry goods lines the wholesale houses have impressed themselves strongly. Never did a more favorable opportunity present itself for the demonstration of their full value to the retailer, and the latter warmly appreciates the manner in which they have stood between him and the hardest market Canada has ever experienced. In discussing this matter with The Review, a Wiarton merchant said that for the future he had made up his mind not to depend upon import orders for his goods.

There is a great deal that the wholesale houses can do to improve the condition of retailers in general. First and foremost we would recommend that they give earnest study to the operation and growth of the retail mail order business, and the efforts which local merchants are putting forth to conserve the trade of their home markets. If they do this they must be impressed with the fact that one important requirement of stores in places where the catalogue houses claim strongest patronage is a much better assortment in every class of goods carried. We do not mean that a retailer should be urged to add a variety of new lines on the same basis as he has been accustomed to buying his stock. That would require an extra outlay that he could not stand, and which is not at all necessary. The point is that he order a much greater variety of lines, and a smaller quantity of each that he has purchased of those stocked heretofore. He need not materially increase his total outlay on placing orders, but he will have to assort more frequently than he has been accustomed to doing. We are satisfied that by following this plan he may reclaim a lot of trade that now goes to Eaton's and other mail order concerns. The wholesale houses can help him to carry it out.

DOES NOT AGREE WITH US.

In the April issue we criticized adversely the course which one merchant pursued in opposing the competition of the catalogue houses. He secured the insertion of an article in the local paper telling the people that they should buy at home because it was a duty they owed to their town, and that unless they did so the latter could not be expected to make the progess it would if the money earned there were spent with the men who had invested their entire capital and energy locally. The article went on to say that citizens who made purchases out of town were doing a mean thing, and that they were very much mistaken if they imagined the practice could be continued without the fact becoming generally known. It was stated frankly that mail orders sent out from this community amounted to more in a year than the total annual receipts of any one of the home merchants

The Review looked upon this article as an excellent piece of free publicity for the catalogue houses, and expressed the opinion that it would fail to accomplish the object for which it was written. Its author does not, however, altogether agree with us, although he admits that if the arguments which he used were applied to conditions in most of the smaller cities and towns of Canada, our criticism would probably be without fault He says that while they were intended to have a good general effect, they were aimed particularly at several prominent people, among whom is a bank manager. To the latter this sentence was directly addressed: "You may, perhaps, be earning a salary that is not directly contributed to by the community in which you live, and feel that you are under no obligation to patronize local institutions, but do you suppose the managers or directors of the interests you represent would take this view?" Already citizens have been in his store who had not patronized him for a considerable time. A school teacher went to him, and after confessing that he had bought extensively through mail orders, promised, now that he saw the matter in the proper light, to be loyal to home interests hereafter. These results appear to him conclusive evidence that the course he took was the right one under the circumstances.

We did not attempt to quarrel with the truth of this merchant's arguments, but we did say—and still believe our stand to be the correct one—that he did not go the right way about converting the people of his district from the mail order habit. He started out by admitting that outside concerns made heavy inroads into the business that should be handled by local stores, and the only reason he advanced why this should not be so was that it was the duty of everyone to circulate his money at home. Not a word about comparative values ! How much more convincing it would have been if he had argued that home merchants could supply just as good values—as a matter of fact, we know that in many cases they give better—as the catalogue houses, and that it is much more convenient and satisfactory to buy from them than to send away for goods. Then, if he wished, he could follow this up with an appeal for a test of his assertions, and point out how the community as a whole, and, consequently, everyone in it, would be benefitted by the circulation of as much money as possible locally.

From the above it might be taken that we are in favor of merchants, who feel mail order competition strongly, writing for, or inspiring in, the local press articles calculated to wean people of their communities from patronage of outside concerns. If asked to lay down a general rule we would say that we are opposed to such a course, while admitting that there may be circumstances under which it would be advisable. In this instance we are inclined to question that, although a few persons have, apparently, been brought to time, the catalogue houses have not assumed a position of greater importance in the eyes of many others than they ever held before.

The best way to fight the catalogue houses is to treat them as legitimate competitors whose patronage the local merchant can lessen only by giving his customers just as good values as they offer, by introducing strong descriptive matter into his advertising, and by generally improving his methods of doing business.

A DRY GOODS WAR.

When price-cutting prevails to such an extent that it is called a "dry goods war" we meet with a condition that must be deplored. In a town of about twelve thousand people there are eight stores catering to the dry goods trade, and as they are all of an excellent class, and conducted by aggressive merchants, competition is, naturally, very keen. About a year ago the real "war" started, and for months there was a regular fusilade of bargains. One store held a big sale, and several others jumped into the game right away. Prices were "slashed and slaughtered" until some lines of goods were selling, week in and week out, at actual cost. When we were in this town one day recently three of the merchants were getting out announcements of further "bargainfests," one to last sixteen days, another ten days, and the third a week or more. Two of them offered for the sacrifice nearly every class of merchandise beneath their roofs. Perhaps others have by this time started in to see what they can do along the same line.

When the "war" began two firms decided that they would have none of it. They went ahead and did business in the regular way, only offering price inducements when there was a good reason for so doing. One of them had been established only a month or two. Its proprietors tell us that they made fine progress right from the first, in spite of the fact that they refused to meet quotations of some of their competitors. They say they went in for a good class of merchandise, selected it very carefully, sold on strictly cash terms and experienced no great difficulty in maintaining a satisfactory margin of profit on everything. Their policy to-day is the same, and they have such a share of the trade going their way that they are exceedingly well pleased. The other firm which held to the steady method of merchandising find that business has increased very nicely during the past year, and they have every reason to congratulate themselves upon the stand which they took. All but one of those who engaged in the price-cutting—and he is the man who put on the first sale—deplored the present condition of affairs as one which greatly unsettles business. It is not necessary for us to go further into this matter ; the plain facts as stated are sufficient to drive home the point which we wish to emphasize.

IS IT A LACK OF COURAGE?

There are still numbers of merchants about the country who think it necessary to keep their stores open until nearly midnight every Saturday. Some even go so far as to make their closing hour eight or eight-thirty o'clock every other night in the week. What a piece of foolishness ! Is there any one of them who can give us a good sound reason why all of his business could not be done before six o'clock ordinarily and ten o'clock Saturday ? We have yet to meet the man who finds it possible to advance such a reason. Ask why the practice is continued and you will very often get the answer : "The others all do it."

In a town of fifteen hundred population the stores closed any time between eleven and twelve o'clock every Saturday night. One progressive merchant determined that he would no longer be a party to the maintenance of such abominably long hours, and he announced that thereafter he would lock up at ten o'clock. Others told him he would lose business ; that the thing could not be done ; that it had been tried before and had to be given up. He replied that the men who made the move and then went back to the old conditions were lacking in courage. He has demonstrated that he is right, although his competitors still refuse to follow his good example. However, that does not appear to be worrying him, and he is now looking forward to the time when he can get his customers to do their buying before nine o'clock. We would like to see this same spirit manifest itself in some other quarters.

FANCY GOODS AND NOTIONS

Directly after Easter, and right through the month of April, at retail, sales in fancy goods departments were very active. Large city stores have transacted an immense amount of business in both staple and fancy goods. Merchants interviewed state that the notion business has developed to a remarkable degree, and in most cases this line now claims the dignity of a separate department. It is only in this way that sales of the better goods have been made possible.

There is a steady inquiry at retail for engraved combs, set with small rhinestones. Plain steel combs are also active and selling well just now. Cut steel combs, both single back and in sets are meeting with marked favor in the better class goods. Pearl goods set with rhinestones are one of the newest effects on the market. They are very attractive and ought to prove a good line to the retailer. Another tendency is towards brilliant-set combs. They are shown in pretty designs and effects, with back and sides to match. Heavily decorated, metal-mounted combs, such as sold well a year ago, are just now somewhat behind schedule.

Hair pads are claiming the attention of the retailer to a great extent. They are shown in various shapes and assorted colors to match any kind of hair. They can be had anywhere from eight to twenty inches long, and in the better grade goods some very soft and light quality effects are shown.

Hair nets in the different sizes will sell well, now that the warm weather has set in to stay. They are largely worn at picnics or outings of different kinds.

The post card and album business continues remarkably good. It was thought by many merchants when this fad first took the public's fancy, it would, like many others, have only a brief life. It has now been running smoothly for five years and gives no sign of diminution up to the present ; in fact, the tendency points all in the other direction. When these cards first appeared they covered a wide range of subjects, comic cards, sentimental effects, views and scenes. Just now views and scenes are holding first position, with the sentimental views and comic cards following in the rear. Outside of being instructive, views and scenes have sense to back them up.

extent has extended to a few of the smaller towns. The French fans, chiefly in silk chiffon, with bone, ebony or pearl handles, have sold well. They are made in wide varieties of patterns, in both plain and cut steel spangles. These fans are very handsomely gotten up and ought to secure a fair share of the trade.

Large retail stores are showing varieties of fancy bags at the present time. The two-flap effect is one of the best styles of the season. Another good feature is the twin-strap effect. Beaded bags in every conceivable color are still in the running. They are made in a wide variety of patterns, and can be had anywhere from $2 to $48. Chain mesh bags are to the fore in high-class goods. Leather bags are coming into high favor, particularly in fancy leathers. Dainty shapes, principally of crushed morocco and other leathers, are active in the better grade goods. Colors predominating largely are light green, blue and grey. These bags are fitted with small mirrors and powder puffs and other articles for ladies' convenience. The general demand at the time of writing is for purse styles. The large bag shapes are somewhat behind schedule, as they do not contain the dainty interior fittings once used to advantage, and the public fancy has turned to small and medium-size coin purses. The little beaded bag, with drawing-strings, which sold very well last year, is also in the rear and the demand for this article is small. The feature of the current demand is the steady enquiry for foreign shapes. Prices have advanced about ten per cent. over last year, and this eventually is bound to affect the retailer, if it has not already done so.

Leather belts in all styles, and tinted leathers also, are active. A new belt on the market is known as the Margaret Anglin. This belt is manufactured from good leather, and silk elastic, in all the newest color tones. It is about 1¾ inches wide, and is mounted with gilt, gunmetal, and French grey buckles. The buckle has the appearance of being made in one solid piece, the divide, or place where it parts, being indistinguishable and somewhat of a surprise. The maker calls it "The Great Divide." This belt is a novelty and ought to become very popular.

Japanese fancy goods continue in high favor, and vases, baskets, bronze and brass ornaments, crockeryware, tea sets, and fancy lines of silk goods are shown. Candy baskets, made of fancy straw in every available color, are to be had from $3 per hundred up. Prices have advanced from twenty per cent. to twenty-five per cent. over last year, and importers state they will stay steady for Fall. China silks have advanced fully twenty-five per cent. over the previous year, and importers state deliveries are very hard to procure. The demand from the United States and Canada has been so great within the last year that weavers thought it a good time to advance prices, and did so accordingly. These increases are bound to affect the retail trade. Importers and jobbers have covered themselves accordingly.

Travelers are now on the road taking orders for the holiday trade. Latest reports are to the effect that active business is done all along the line. Manufacturers have brought out a large variety of new novelties, and merchants would do well to place orders early so as to secure deliveries on time. This is plainly a notion year.

THE NEW YORK MODE

Unseasonable Weather Makes Retail Trade Backward—Styles of the Present give Youthful Appearance—The Jap Sailor Hat.

The retail trade is in a most chaotic state owing to the peculiar weather conditions which prevail all over the country. Business in all lines has been slow, but no other reason is given for this condition than the cold and unseasonable weather. Many women are even, at this late date, wearing furs, although, of course, Spring millinery has been worn for at least two months. The styles in hats are erratic and almost bizarre. Indeed, the fashions of the present day have transformed women's appearance to such an extent that one is compelled to look the second time to make sure of even one's intimate friends. On the whole the effect has a tendency to rejuvenate, for as I have previously mentioned, skirts are extremely short and display quite frankly considerable ankle, for pumps are the footwear worn almost to the exclusion of all else. Then, too, short box or semi-fitted coats are very popular, and these, too, have a youthful tendency. Coats of the tight-fitting variety are cut on the cutaway lines and are exceedingly smart with their three-buttoned single-breasted fronts and rolled revers. The sleeves are usually three-quarter length, which, by the way, is an exceedingly unbecoming length, although the long gloves worn for all occasions do a great deal to eliminate that awkwardness. Chamois and heavy tan gloves are smartest, but the glove departments are preparing for an enormous silk glove business, as silk and lisle are really the only comfortable materials for Summer wear.

Have I mentioned the tendency to go back to the strictly tailored waist? Cross-bar muslins and dotted muslins are used, as well as plain batiste and lawn tucks and box-pleated fronts with flutings of narrow lace or self material are the usual embellishments. Sleeves continue to be short and are in the plainer models finished with a turned-back cuff. In these styles it is possible to return to the more practical opened-in-front waists, although lingerie and silk waists continue to open down the back

Tub dresses are to be prettier and at the same time more practical than ever. Little jumper dresses of plain duck, in blue, white, lavander and tan are charming for general utility wear. Guimpes or shirt waists may be worn with these frocks, which, if not made en princess, are so finished at the waist line as to give a one-piece effect. A single band of white inserting is the usual joining for the summer frock. Striped and polka dotted materials are smartest for general wear, flowered effects being confined more for the country or house wear. Black and white, especially polka dotted effects, are very strong both in silks and muslins. Blue or black foulard in polka dotted designs are very strong, as are also pongees and rajahs in natural and colored materials, either plain or dotted. There are still many devotees of the shepherd check, but New Yorkers have just cause to be a trifle tired of this style, which surely has been over-popular. The hair and so-called invisible checks and plaids are in excelent style, and in cotton and silk voiles are at their best. White suits are expected to enjoy great favor. Serge, panama and flannel are the materials most in evidence. These suits are made with short pleated skirts and either cutaway or box coats, usually relieved by a collar of black silk or velvet. The piece suits are in excellent demand, the waist being either a jumper or plain shirt waist.

Group of Show Girls from "The Parisian Model."

Robes of embroidery or lawn, with lace insertings, are selling well. Linen robes are also in demand in both the handkerchief and heavy linens. Batiste robes in delicate pinks, blues and lavenders, embroidered in white, are among the novelties in the dressier, but not necessarily more costly robes. The stores report a good business in these goods and also in embroidered shirt waist patterns. The latter, hand-embroidered, run into considerable money, but very handsome designs can be found for much less money in the machine-embroidered goods. Very lovely are the patterns embroidered on white Jap silk, wistaria, chrysanthemum, wild rose and other handsome designs being among those shown, combined with drawnwork or insertings of net.

Mention has previously been made of the fashion of wearing laundered collars. Charming are those embroidered and finished around the lower edge by a fluting. Dainty little ties are made of black or colored ribbon or of finely plaited lace or sheer lawn. These touches soften the hard outline of a stiff collar and are not only becoming but very dainty and simple looking, as no matter what the material the tie is a tiny butterfly or rosette affair. With the return of the stiffer waist it seems only natural that the sailor hat should be reinstated—which it most certainly is, much to the disgust of the millinery world. However, whatever it is and must be faced, so that it is well to prepare for an enormous demand for the rough black Jap sailor, plainly banded. A few white rough straw sailors are used in the cheaper grades, but very few. The call is for black and not in Milan but in rough black straws. The smartest sailor has rather a small crown, about two and a half inches in height and a brim between three and a half to four, or a trifle over, in width. Sailors, like the majority of hats, are worn set quite well back off the face. Panamas, for those who can pay the price, are very fashionable either trimmed or simply trimmed with a scarf. Bancock is also to be in demand for the high grade outing hat. Leghorn and Milan are the two strongest sellers. Leghorns are being worn even now, and are large and simple in outline, the trimming being mostly arranged toward the back.

We are at present suffering from a perfect epidemic of mushroom and Empire shapes. Old and young seem to have fallen under the spell of their charm. Really many of them are captivating, but so much depends upon the wearer and the wearer's coiffure. No wonder false hair is so much in demand, for it takes quantities of puffs and curls to fill out the great scoop-like spaces, principally at the back and sides.

It is really difficult to state what color or material is most fashionable. Quantities of cherries are worn. I mention these first because we have become so accustomed to roses that it hardly seems necessary to mention the fact that they are still the favorite millinery bloom. Cherries seem to be unusually good; indeed, quite the fad, as are also daisies—both the white, and yellow and black varieties. Grasses, wheat and field flowers are well to the fore. Flowers are arranged loosely on the majority of the hats, which adds to the picturesque effect.

Wide ribbons crushed into huge loops and bows are used in messaline and chiffon taffetas; among a perfect riot of bloom, indeed, the hats are laden with trimming of almost every description. The impression must not be conveyed that only hats with drooping brims are fashionable. There are, of course, many excellent shapes all more or less generously proportioned, and all to be worn setting well back off the pompadour. Even the sailor shapes are worn in this manner, and are trimmed across the front by large wings, or with a large bird. There are, perhaps, more grey, blue and burnt straws used than any others. Hardly any braid hats are seen, but frame manufacturers have little cause to despair, because plateaux must, of course, be wired as well as the broad brimmed capelines women are wearing. These have tam-like crowns of princess lace or dotted or figured net, all of which tend to accentuate the lavishly trimmed effects. Few really small hats are worn, but somehow the shapes, from the front at least, do not seem so enormous, owing to the fact that so much of the front hair is shown. The back views tell an entirely different story, for not only are the brims remarkably long, but are so arranged to stand out from the head, a fact which seems to accentuate the depth of brim, since the coiffure is not visible excepting from the front or profile. The nattier model, which you will remember is characterized by the shortness of the front brim, as compared with the back, has never been in more universal favor. Trimmings seem to be arranged either directly in front or back rather than at the side.

It is, perhaps, on the stage that the artistic merits of the new creations are seen at their best. Empire gowns, huge floppy hats and the kimona sleeves somehow seem not quite in keeping with the strenuous everyday work-a-day world. The plumgraph from "The Parisian Model" gives a very clear idea of the present-day fashions. The hats, every one, are lovely and well worth serving as models, since they are "created" by the great Joseph.

A WARNING.

There are several men who appear to be systematically going about the country soliciting subscriptions for the MacLean Trade Newspapers and Magazines and are pocketing the proceeds where they are able to land a subscriber. Several people have been victimized in this way. Some of these men are not confining their efforts to the MacLean papers, but, from enquiries we have received from one or two of our contemporaries in the United States, are practising the same methods in regard to their publications.

Business men and others are cautioned to look out for these fraudulent canvassers, and we would take it as a great favor if they would notify us by wire, at our expense, should they meet any of these men, as it is our intention to prosecute them if we once get the hands of the law upon them.

No one is authorized to solicit subscriptions for us unless he has our regular subscription forms and a letter signed by us giving him the right to receive moneys on our behalf. Our friends, the travelers, frequently send us subscriptions, and, of course, where a merchant knows a traveler to be a representative of a reputable house he may be sure that the subscription he may take will reach its proper destination.

We trust that our friends throughout the country will lend us their assistance in endeavoring to land these fraudulent solicitors. The names of the men and the localities in which they were last heard of are: C. H. Raymond, Berlin, Ont.; J. C. Murray, Farnham, Que.; McDonald, St. Hyacinthe, Que. There is another who operated in Galt, whose name we have not yet ascertained.

The Canadian Millinery Review

Summer Millinery

The Larger Hat Indicated for Summer Wear—Plumes and Feathers Upon Dress Hats.

There are already indications that the advent of Summer weather will see the introduction of larger hat shapes, and though neapolitan and leghorn will be well worn, there will also be a large proportion of net and lace hats. These are made up in the large picture mushrooms, with drooping brims and large pouf crowns. The net is variously manipulated—shirred on wire, pleated, etc.—and the crowns are a cloud-like mass of color. While flowers are used, soft, delicate willow plumes or sweeping paradise is the really smart trimming, although the great expense confines these handsome feathers to the very few. The touch of velvet is another feature that only serves to accentuate the airy lightness of the rest of the hat, and this is obtained by the use of velvet chous or a bow of ribbon velvet. Feathers and ribbon velvet are also the fashionable trimming for leghorns and neapolitans.

Princesse lace is also much used, the hat being made of motifs and piece lace in the making of handsome millinery. Pyroxaline braids and brilliant satin straws are also seen, used in conjunction with lace nets, flowers, feathers, etc.

Tulle continues to be used, but chiefly for under-brim trimmings, its scarcity probably being the reason that so few all-tulle hats are seen.

Ribbon trimmings are more and more used as the season advances, and there is a wonderful variety of effects —chous, bows, rosettes, loops, and, lastly, as a mid-season development, long streamers and ends. A favorite way of arranging this back effect is in sash effect, the ribbon, which is about 5 inches or so wide, coming from the sides and tying below the brim of the hat at the back. Streamers of ribbon velvet are used in trimming leghorns and milans and brides that form a band over the hat and tie under the hair at the back are seen on some of the later hats.

So far this has been a big flower season, with the rose as the leading flower in the popular trade. Though roses will be big sellers to the end of the season, the woman who likes to be a little different is beginning to tire of them, and it is altogether likely that other flowers, particularly daisies and field flowers, will be more sought for. Wheat, oats and grasses are also in vogue and their use is increasing.

The exclusive milliner is using more plumes and wings than flowers—large fancy wings on the street and suit hats, and long ostrich plumes of the willow variety on the dress hats. Paradise, blondine and marabout are also freely used. In the less expensive models the flower spray is utilized instead of the willow plume.

The Review has referred many times to the fact that hats are worn at a new angle this season—not over the face, but backward. This, perhaps, with many shapes, is more apparent than real, the hat being set squarely on the head, the long, drooping back brim giving the apparent tilt.

The Market Situation

Acute Shortage and Poor Deliveries Likely in Many Lines —The Price Conditions.

A condition that cannot be too strongly emphasized is the continued shortage in many lines of millinery fabrics. This stringency has been badly felt during the present season and no relief seems due in the near future; in fact, indications point with almost absolute certainty to an increased congestion during the coming Fall. The importing houses have made every possible effort to obtain an adequate supply of goods, and the task has been one of uncommon difficulty. They have had to anticipate Fall requirements long before the usual buying time, and in order to have the goods here in time for the opening of the Fall season, orders have had to be placed months ahead. Raw silk is in very short supply, and not only are values on the rise but even when the top price is paid manufacturers are finding it hard to get immediate deliveries. This condition is going to affect the deliveries of silk fabrics later on. Under these conditions the manufacturer is not seeking for orders; in fact, it not unfrequently happens that when a buyer seeks to place a large order he can only get a portion of it accepted, and this is the case even when the manufacturer names his own price. Long dates for delivery are asked—anywhere from six to eleven months.

Tulles and malines are the scarcest thing on the market at the present date, and a goodly list of other materials could be given that are in short supply. Substitutes for tulles are doing well, laces, nets, etc., being used for the purpose. Prospects, it is said, are none too bright for a good supply for the Fall season. Canada is not alone in feeling the pinch; our neighbor to the south is also short, and more than one Canadian firm has been approached by United States houses in search of tulles for that market.

A feature of the situation is that the value to the trade of the importing millinery houses is being forcibly brought home to more than one retail firm, and in millinery, as in other lines, goods have been obtained from the importing houses when other sources of supply failed.

Millinery and the Horse Show

Special Openings, Both Wholesale and Retail, Held During the Month.

Special openings have been held in Toronto during the month of April, for the showing of millinery suitable for wearing at the Toronto Horse Show, and a good deal of business has passed because of this event.

It is not just the horse industry and allied trades that benefit, nor yet just the dry goods, millinery, and dress-making trades in Toronto that are gainers; the whole of the trade throughout the Dominion is interested in this show. Society attends in its best and bravest, not a few specially imported Paris and New York gowns being worn, and millinery commands as much, or more, general attention than the winners of the blue ribbons.

It is the fashion end—the opportunity to see just the styles that appeal to the Canadian woman who has the leisure and the money to make a study of what she wears—that is of such value to the outside dry goods merchant. It is here that he has a chance to study in advance those styles that will presently be passed on from Toronto to the rest of the Dominion; for, as he well knows, any style that develops strongly there is soon taken up by the smaller centres. This is the class of knowledge that the up-to-date merchant is always after, as it forms an invaluable guide to future buying.

Up to a recent date there was some uncertainty as to whether or not Toronto would be able to hold a show this year, as the armouries were no longer available. Fortunately this difficulty has been overcome and the show has been held in the St. Lawrence Arena, part of the remodelled St. Lawrence Market.

THE PLEATING AND MFG. CO., LIMITED.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Pleating and Manufacturing Company, Limited, Toronto, with a capital of $40,000, divided in $10 shares. The incorporators were: John J. Eaton, manufacturer; May L. Eaton, married woman; Fred. H. Hurlburt, lumber merchant; William H. Miller, accountant, and Revena Kelly, book-keeper, all of Toronto. The object of the company is "to manufacture, sell and deal in all goods made on pleating and other machines used in the manufacture of all kinds of dry goods."

STRIKE IN HAMBURG.

Merchants who have experienced difficulty in securing prompt deliveries of Spring hosiery and gloves coming from the Chemnitz market are probably not aware that one of the difficulties importers had to deal with was a serious strike in Hamburg. This important shipping centre for Chemnitz goods was recently tied up owing to all dock laborers going out on strike. Goods were held up, and in many cases were shipped around by way of Bremen. However, this took time and caused considerable delay. The strike in Hamburg is now settled.

HOSIERY AND UNDERWEAR.

Tan hosiery will be in demand as soon as the warm weather sets in. This is due to the fact that tan shoes are to be worn extensively. Other leading colors are greys and navy blues.

There is a decided feeling for athletic underwear—sleeveless shirts and knee-length drawers. They are cool, and comfortable in every way.

Deliveries of all classes of knitted goods are poor, but, in view of the market and manufacturing conditions this is to be expected.

STAPLES AND RAW MATERIALS

The Cotton Market—Whites and Greys Scarce—Jobs Out of the Market.

A backward Spring in many sections of Canada has tended to relieve the true situation in desirable Spring cottons. Retailers with incomplete stocks did not feel the full force of the scarcity of goods, as trade has not opened actively at retail. However, as the season progresses they realize that almost every desirable line of cotton is hard to procure. They feel the situation in two main ways. Jobbers deliver Spring orders incomplete, and manufacturers are held back many times in making prompt deliveries as they cannot secure the requisite cottons from the mills. Almost every garment and clothing manufacturer is finding difficulty in this direction.

Canadian mills are extremely busy, and have turned their attention to Fall lines. They have no jobs to speak of to offer wholesalers. The English market is still behind with orders, notwithstanding the enormous increase in the number of mills and spindles. China is becoming a large consumer of cottons and England finds a ready market in this direction.

At the present time jobbers state that whites and greys are very scarce and are the hardest materials on the market to procure. Some of the houses are absolutely without a case of grey goods, and very few white materials are shown. A wholesale staple goods buyer, in conversation with a Review representative, stated that in his wide experience of over twenty-five years in this business, he never has seen the staple market in such a condition. Both domestic and foreign mills are experiencing a very large demand for these goods. Sheetings, pillow cottons, denims, tickings, cottonades and flannelette blankets are very scarce, and are also largely in demand. In view of the prevailing conditions, merchants should anticipate their requirements and order early and liberally. The retailer who places on time may expect deliveries and do the business. The merchant who puts off his placing till too late is sure to be disappointed in the end, and will not receive goods on time. Buy early as no relief is in sight.

Fall orders for staples have been well placed by the wholesalers up to the present writing. Sample lines are about complete.

There have been several advances in price, and some lines have been withdrawn entirely, as manufacturers are stocked with orders and cannot take care of any new business before November. In the wholesale district the general opinion is that prices will go higher on whites and greys for next season.

The present condition of the print trade is very favorable. Several of the wholesale houses have been able to secure sufficient quantities to carry them through any shortage which may crop up. Ranges seen in the different houses show up well and cover a large variety of colorings, widths and weights. Some manufacturers were unable to secure sufficient quantities of raw cotton to carry on their business. They had to shut down mills, for a week at a time, at various periods. This was done so as to allow shippers of raw cotton time to forward shipments of any quantity sufficient to keep the mills in operation. Still another thing that has handicapped the Canadian mills is the uncertainty of deliveries. This is, no doubt, due to the crippled railroad facilities, which caused a certain amount of congestion on the different materials, also keeping large stocks of merchandise tied up on various side lines. Canadian mills were behind in their deliveries, but just now they are coming through fairly well. Information received is to the effect that mills expect to have all orders complete, or nearly so, this month. If this proves true it will place the print trade in a much better condition than it has been for months. It is also claimed by jobbers that goods turned out by Canadian mills this year are all that can be expected ; the designs are original and the finish has even been improved on. The cloth is now up to the highest weave, and results are sure to be larger sales in the future. Demands run on staple and general lines. Some jobbers state that prices have not altered to any great extent as far as they are concerned.

The month of May will, no doubt, see a great many customers in the wholesale districts. They may pick up a bargain here and there which will complete their stocks.

The Lining Trade.

In spite of the considerable advances experienced this season in the lining trade, jobbers state that merchants are booking well on sateens and other linings. Owing to deliveries having been very bad last season, they have anticipated their requirements and placed orders early. The continued rise in prices, also the scarcity of goods and the especially high prices of Egyptian cotton, have had something to do with the early ordering. Schreinered and mercerized cloths are selling well and the better qualities are meeting with steady sales.

The Fall Outlook.

The outlook for Fall, in a good many of the lower lines of flannelettes, is not very bright. Indications point to the fact that this line will be extremely scarce. One large cotton mill has withdrawn its entire line. Merchants have been so anxious to book for Fall, and orders are coming in so rapidly, that mills are asking October and November deliveries to the jobbers.

Prices for Fall have advanced from 5 per cent. to 7½ pet cent., and on this account retailers will have to pay a slight advance over the Spring prices. Most jobbers have anticipated their wants and bought freely.

Good values are shown in saxonies, and striped flannelettes are showing a decided improvement. Jobs have been an unheard of thing for some months now, owing to the scarcity of materials and the large demand for goods.

Buyers for wholesale concerns are looking forward to the same shortage in wrapperettes that has been experienced with flannelettes. Prices for these goods for the Fall trade are higher than this Spring.

Taking into consideration the advanced prices, the sale of these goods has been very satisfactory. The Canadian wrapperettes are keeping up with the times and are in first-class shape, as far as materials and designs are concerned.

For the People Behind the Counter

Interesting Information and Advice Addressed to Salespeople — The English Apprenticeship System.

Not so long ago it was impossible to secure a position in the dry goods trade in England without first producing an indenture showing that a full apprenticeship term had been served. In some districts this condition is still rigidly maintained. One of these indentures, or "sheepskins," was shown The Review by an Englishman who is engaged in business in Toronto. A copy of it is herewith given, and should make interesting reading for every young man in the Canadian trade :—

"This indenture witnesseth that —— —— doth put himself apprectice to —— ——, drapers, ——, to learn the art and with them after the manner of an apprentice to serve from the —— day of ——, unto the full end and term of three years from thence next following to be fully complete and ended, during which term the said apprentice his masters faithfully shall serve, their secrets keep, their lawful commands everywhere gladly do. He shall do no damage to his said masters, nor see to be done of others, but to his power shall tell or forthwith give warning to his said masters of the same. He shall not waste the goods of his said masters, nor lend them unlawfully to any. He shall not contract matrimony within the said term, nor play at cards or dice tables, or any other unlawful games, whereby his said masters may have any loss with their own goods or others, during the said term, without license of his said masters ; shall not haunt taverns or playhouses nor absent himself from his said master's service day or night unlawfully, but in all things as a faithful apprentice he shall behave himself toward his said masters and all theirs during the said term.

"And for the true performance of all and every of the said covenants and agreements either of the said parties bindeth himself unto the other by these presents, in witness whereof the parties above named to these indentures interchangeably have put their hands and seals, the fourth day of March, 1882, and in the forty-fifth year of the reign of our sovereign lady, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, defender of the faith, and in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

"And the said —— —— shall instruct their said apprentice in the art of the drapery trade, which they useth; by the best means that they can shall teach and instruct or cause to be taught and instructed, finding unto the said apprentice sufficient meat, drink, lodging and all other necessaries during the said term."

What remuneration did this apprentice receive for his three years' service ? None whatever. On the contrary, his father paid the firm with whom he served $75 for instructing him. Every indenture provided for some premium, the amount of which varied in different cases.

Never attempt to instruct a customer. Suggest, or politely question the desirability of this or that.

A FEW WORDS FROM THE BOSS.

Have you ever realized, my friends behind the counter, how important is the place you fill in the trading community ? Upon you rests much more responsibility than is dreamt of by the rank and file. You can make or mar the business you are engaged in, and we, your employers, are at your mercy. This is no figure of speech.

I have been prompted to have a talk with you about business methods by an incident I witnessed the other day. A lady came hesitatingly into one of our leading establishments and stopped short when she saw that the millinery department was nearly empty, and that eight pairs of eyes were critically fixed upon her. She was a shy lady, so she retreated, but spent $50 in cash in a rival establishment. Now, a cat may look at a king, and a salesperson need not be servile to even the wealthiest patron of the firm, but eight young persons had no call to hustle a shy lady out of the department with their eyes. A little knowledge of human nature would have resulted in hard cash to the tune of $50, but no one came forward tactfully to receive the shy customer, and nobody thought it necessary to seem to be busily engaged in looking elsewhere than straight at a sensitive face.

It's the little things that count in business, and they are all comprised in the little word tact. If you are a woman don't bother about relating to the next friend behind the counter the good time you had last night while you are handing change to the customer, and never think it too much trouble to leave a good impression upon the woman you have served. Make her feel that you are a part of the great machine of business, and that it is a pleasure to do business. Concentrate your mind upon what you have to do to-day, and reserve frivolous conversation till the shutters are up.

If you are a man deal as pleasantly with men as you would with women ; study their tastes, peculiarities, and desires. And both of you study human nature, and study the boss most of all. His interests should be yours, otherwise you are taking money under false pretences, for he hires you to supplement his own efforts. Be sure that your promotion will be quick if you give loyal service, and always aim at the top of the tree.

I know a man who less than thirty years ago was a clerk in a small country store. He now employs five hundred hands. He was simply tactful and industrious.

He never bothered about "good times" when business was doing, and no customer ever left him without feeling that he practised the art of pleasing. His reputation is the same now as it was when he was an assistant.

Now, don't think that you should do good work for nothing. Never be afraid to demand more money if you are really worth more. If you cannot get justice in one place there are a thousand doors open for the salesperson who can pull in business. We cannot do without you, and you cannot do without us. Let us pull together for the good of the house.

POINTS FOR THE SALESLADY.

Remember that all the time spent in the store belongs to your employer.

That courtesy behind the counter wins even the most captious customer.

That gossip about young men, or with them, is unbusiness-like, and, under the circumstances, rude.

Do not thrust a package at a customer as you would a pistol in the face of a highwayman.

Never throw down goods with an air that seems to say, you do not care whether your customer buys or not. And do not talk to another clerk behind the counter while you are selling.

Remember that the purchaser often sees more in the seller than she thinks, and refined young women have made valuable friends for life by their courtesy to a customer.

Dress modestly and avoid cheap jewelry. Strive to be prompt and polite ; have a well-modulated voice, and pay strict attention to business while on duty. In fact, strive to be a model saleswoman, and it will not be long before you are recognized as such by your customers as well as by your employer.

Remember always, that you are superior to your circumstances only when you make yourself so. The most selfish and exacting of employers is always ready to recognize the merits of an efficient clerk.

Our London Letter

The latest advance foreshadowed is that in pins. The makers of these small but necessary articles, are finding themselves compelled to ask a higher price. This, they claim, is due to the persistent advances that has taken place in raw materials. The kind of copper used, has, in a very short period, advanced about 50 per cent. Pins have already gone up 30 per cent., and a newly revised price list, showing a further rise, is expected in the near future.

There was a record attendance at the March series of fur sales. American buyers were more numerous than ever, and there was a large contingent from the continent. Fashionable furs fully maintained their values, and in the case of specially wanted kinds advances were made. Prices are now fixed for the year, and there is no indication of any sagging tendency. The demand was good, competition was keen, and the whole of the stock of furs offered was readily absorbed.

Bradford.

There was some anticipation that when the large Australasian output was really in sight there might be some easing off in the values of raw wool, especially when the stringent conditions of the money market were considered. The tremendous demand is over-riding these conditions, and the tendency is still upward, as it is quite evident that, notwithstanding the large amount of colonial wool which has already arrived, the trade in Bradford and in all other woolen centres, is still wanting wool. Combers are working at high pressure to supply the immediate requirements of the spinners, and the spinners in turn are finding it difficult to keep up with deliveries for home and foreign customers. Therefore, there are no stocks of any description accumulating.

In the fabric end of the business, the chief complaints heard refer to tardy deliveries. Orders are in plenty, due in a measure, to the fact that buyers who were unwilling to pay the advances have been keeping their orders down to the narrowest possible margin. Now, when they see that further advances are inevitable, they are coming into the market, only to find that the supply of Bradford fabrics is not nearly equal to the demand.

There is some unrest, too, in the operative class, and operative wool combers are asking an increase in wages. Some of the leading firms have already decided to grant the men's demands.

Nottingham.

The influence of good times is making big changes in the town and district, for extensions, alterations and removals are the order of the day. These are not wholly confined to the lace makers, but the hosiery and the making-up trades are also affected. The lace trade is extending to the neighboring towns and villages, and Ilkeston, Long Eaton, Sawley, and Sardiacre are developing into busy industrial centres. A large factory has been erected at Draycott, near Derby, for the accommodation of 200 lace machines, and is held to mark the beginning of an epoch of development in this quiet little village.

Here, too, there is unrest in labor circles, and some classes of lace operatives are "asking for more." With the exception of one or two factories that make goods not in demand, the tide is still running high, and full work in every department is the rule. Good repeats are coming from the States, and in spite of the big increase of 50 per cent. in the past twelve months, there seems at the present to be a practically unlimited demand. The goods asked for are nets of all kinds, in cotton and silk, fine narrow vals., torchons, clunys, maltese, etc. Tulles are in very brisk demand, and all-overs of various styles are selling. Cable, mosquito and point d'esprit nets are in good demand.

Manchester.

The fact that cotton spinners are doing quite well at present is evinced by the result of the late stock-taking operations in the Lancashire mills. In one instance the profit was as high as 75 per cent. per annum, and in another 60 per cent. Taking the balance sheets of about twenty mills, the average gain on the share capital works out at something like 35 per cent. per annum.

Users of yarn are not purchasing in advance of their needs, but where sales are made the spinners have obtained a wide margin of profit. Values are keeping up to a very high level, when the resistance of the users is considered. There is no weakness in the fabric end, and no manufacturers are seeking business, but those manufacturers who have to buy their yarn are heavily handicapped, when compared with those who both spin and weave.

Paris Fashions

By A. E. DACAM, for "Dry Goods Review."

Some New Sleeve Models Described and Illustrated—Features of the General Mode.

At this date the styles for the coming season are definitely fixed, and there is little chance of any radical change being accepted later on. Modifications, of course, there always will be, but the smart set, which in this case means the "demi-mondaines," have cast their vote and the crowd may be safely trusted to follow blindly in their lead. One of the most interesting features of the moment is the change in sleeves—a change dear to the heart of the dressmaker, as it will be impossible to arrange or adapt an old model, therefore, a new one becomes a necessity. The sleeve, or upper part of it, is a continuation of the bodice, the arm-hole seam being entirely suppressed. Already a drooping shoulder line is effected by means of epaulettes and "volants," as will be seen in the accompanying sketches, which represent, very fairly, the styles now in vogue. Bodices are almost all draped ; either the drapery forms the bodice itself, with a lace front or empiecement, or it is carried over the shoulders into the waist belt, descending onto the arms and giving the sloping effect. The loose folds and pleats also tend to make the bust look wider. The bretelle movement, which carries out the same idea as the drapery, seems greatly in favor. These are not the narrow braces of last Summer, but are both wide and long, cut "en biais" to fall in folds over the shoulders, crossed back and front, and tapering to a point, are taken into the waist belt ; or again, they are sometimes cut in steps, forming epaulettes over the shoulders, the cloth being cut "en biais" to avoid a skimpy appearance; sometimes instead of being crossed at the back and front they are held in place by means of straps and tabs with a smart effect. This idea is generally carried out in the same material as the skirt is made of (a plain tissue giving much the best effect) and worn over a lace or lingerie corsage. A few dressmakers are trying to bring back long sleeves, but so far the Parisiennes will have nothing to do with them, except, of course, the sleeves of classic tailor gowns and morning waists, which do not vary to any great extent. At the same time advocates of the long sleeve—and they are not a few—have faith in their power to establish it before the Fall.

There is every indication of a quick change of design in dress materials. Striped woolens and cottons, organdies, muslins and silk mixtures are, at the moment of writing, the "haute mode" and will run for some time longer, but floral or dimity designs are surely coming. The stripe, whether made up on parallel lines or otherwise, is too conspicuous and shows the date too much for it to remain "chic" for very long, and it is, therefore, doomed to fall speedily into the vulgar. Morning gowns in voile or woolen materials, the skirt striped and pleated (very usually a dark grey stripe or a paler grey ground) with bodice or jacket of a plain cloth the same shade as the ground work of the skirt, are being extensively worn and recall a bygone mode. To make the two garments harmonize, the skirt is trimmed with bands or tabs of the plain material, or with whatever trimming is employed on the jacket. Grey of all shades, black and white, grey and white, as well as a dull blue and white, are the leading tints for these morning costumes, but for other purposes fresh, bright colors are being extensively used. A soft spinach green, Parma violet, mauve rose, all the scale of beiges and browns, and a light thin red called "rouge homard," are receiving some attention.

With the short bolero and directoire gowns the high waist at the back is still "de rigeur." This style permits of a graceful draping of the skirt, which, in a soft material, has a most happy effect. Tussor is being much employed for afternoon and visiting gowns. For evening gowns modulations of the Empire style are still very much favored. It is astonishing that this mode, which was adopted under protest, should have secured such a firm footing in public favor. In evening wraps fewer silks are seen this season; they seem to have been replaced by faced cloth trimmed extensively with lace and velvet. A good model in "pervenche" blue cloth recalls the old-fashioned rotonde cape, but in this case the sides are fitted to the waist under a square opening which serves as armhole. The back and front fall in voluminous, loose folds. Round the collar, and reaching to the hem, as well as round the sleeve opening, is a wide band of narrow black velvet interlaced with gold, and piped with blue taffetas. An edging is formed of black and white mousseline ruching.

It would seem that the latest millinery models, such as were seen at the recent Concours Hippique, have been created absolutely in the interests of the hairdresser, for it would be absolutely impossible to wear the large mushroom hats, which are placed on the top of an enormous chignon with bouffant front and sides, so that the face is in no way shaded by the hat, without having recourse to padding or numerous false tresses and curls. The same remark applies to the miniscule sailor with sloping brim. However, as it is the modification of these extreme styles which is accepted, there is still hope for the great majority of women who cannot afford to keep a "coiffeur" on the premises. The cache peign is much less voluminous, hats being no longer tilted forward, but, on the contrary, many of the models have an inclination to a backward slope. A good model is a large cloche form in dull green straw, encircled, with the exception of the right side, by a wreath of enormous marguerites and leaves in various shades of pale yellow, and deep-colored centres, uniting the wreath is a large bow of green liberty ribbon, the same shade as the straw. A Louis XVI. in white "paille d'Italie" has a high crown and lying onto the brim is a loose drapery of shot pink and cream silk, which gives the base of the crown a very wide effect. At the left side is a bunch of three very large pink and cream roses, full blown, with their leaves, the top rose reaching higher than the crown. A smart model is a small "chapeau-toque," that is, a medium crown with very narrow, sloping brim. This is carried out in a mixture of blue and brown glace straw. Bands of ribbon are carried from under the brim in front to the right side of the top of the crown, where they form a bow. A large bunch of yellow marshmallow flowers covers the back of the hat, falling almost to the nape of the neck, and from under the flowers fall blue ribbon streamers. Another model is a white leghorn with the brim sharply bent up at each side. This is ornamented with a large bunch of pink roses and lilac, and white lilac placed at the front of the crown, sprays of which reach over the left brim. From behind this an enormous white feather curls over the back, falling to the shoulder. Quite a new style is a round sailor with medium brim, curled upwards all round, carried out in very fine grey straw. Around the crown is a wreath of pink roses, evenly arranged and framed in their leaves, also evenly arranged and pointing upwards and down as the case may be—that is to say, those above the roses point up and those below point down. At the back is a bow of graduated lengths of deep grey velvet ribbon, four inches wide, the longest loops reaching to the nape of the neck. For a dress hat ostrich feathers in all shades are much employed, arranged "en panache" and almost covering the hat, but marabout and fancy plumes are also much employed and used in conjunction with flowers and ribbon.

A Unique Nine-Cent Sale

Every Fourth Article of Same Price as Three Preceding Purchases Sold for Nine Cents—Moved Higher-Priced Merchandise.

A unique sales-plan which was productive of excellent results was used by the E. A. Knowlton Co., of Rochester, Minn., about a year ago, says the Chicago Reporter. The sale was put into operation soon after the holidays and proved to be one of the most effective ways ever tried of moving the class of merchandise that the store desired to close out at that particular season of the year.

The plan of the sale was to sell every fourth purchase of the same price as three preceding purchases for nine cents. For this reason the sale was advertised as a "Nine-cent Sale." The plan, as announced in the advertisements, was as follows :

Conditions of Sale.

We propose to sell you every fourth article or yard of the same price for 9 cents, no matter what the price may be—$1 or $50. One transaction must complete the purchase ; or, in other words, the sale must all be made at one time in order that you may get the fourth article or yard for 9 cents, although you may repeat the four purchases as many times as you wish.

Further on in the announcement it was stated :

A merchant wishes to have the least possible amount of Winter goods on hand at the time of a Spring opening. It will be some time before any warmth will be felt. We take the following new method of reducing our stock to the lowest possible point. Don't forget that we offer you our new white goods, embroideries, laces and muslins on the 9-cent proposition during this sale.

Explained by Ad. Man.

Mr. George B. Knowlton, in charge of the advertising of the Knowlton store, explained the plan more in detail to a Reporter representative. He said : "The fundamental proposition of the sale is to give practically a 25 per cent. reduction on goods bought during the sale. This is at once apparent when you consider that every fourth article is sold for 9 cents.

"Of course, this would not be true if only cheap goods were bought, and the sale is not calculated to move any goods costing less than 9 cents, for there would be nothing gained by purchasing merchandise of this low price. The sale was designed to move the higher-priced goods, and it accomplished its purpose even better than we anticipated. The stocks principally affected by this plan were the ready-to-wear, the dress goods, silks, furs, house-furnishings, and articles which run into money.

The conditions of the sale were few and simple, and were easily understood by the trade after we had explained the plan in our advertisements. Every fourth article, which correspond in price with the three first purchases, was sold for 9 cents. The transaction had to be completed at one time. A woman could not buy two articles to-day, one to-morrow and the fourth the next day. She might visit the store and look at the goods, and make up her mind, but the four articles had to be bought at one time.

Sought Higher-Priced Goods.

"A person would naturally think that the higher the price of the article secured for 9 cents, the greater the bargain. This was just what we wanted the trade to believe. Regular prices were maintained, so that we could afford to close out the merchandise carried over from the Fall season for a 25 per cent. reduction. All the goods in the store were included in the offer, with the single exception of articles in the basement below 25 cents in price. The basement goods, from one to twenty-five cents, were sold at the regular prices, save a few specials, which were put on sale at the time to attract the trade to the department.

"In the ready-to-wear section we allowed any three purchases to be averaged, and any article at the average price of the three was sold for 9 cents. For instance, if a woman bought a $5 hat, a $3 petticoat and a $4 skirt, the average price of the purchases was $4, and she was allowed to buy any $4 article in the department for 9 cents. But if the woman wished to choose as the fourth article an item that cost $4.25, we added the difference to the 9 cents and sold it to her for 34 cents. Wherever the fourth article was more than the average price, this principle was adopted.

"The plan appealed to the women of the city as a very fair one, and the result was that the women advertised the sale among themselves, and each day the crowd at the store grew larger.

Stimulated Sales of Dress Goods.

"In buying dress goods, the fourth, eighth and twelfth yards were sold for 9 cents. This offer had the effect of hurrying up the women of the town who were thinking of buying any kind of dress material, either for Winter or Summer wear.

"A part of the sale was the clubbing offer, and this was the means of attracting considerable trade. We announced that the women would be allowed to bring in their neighbors and combine their purchases, the fourth article going for 9 cents.

"The advantage of our nine-cent sale was that it drew trade to all departments and opened all lines and all prices of merchandise to the bargain hunters. A great many sales are limited in the price of articles they move. For instance, a 29-, a 39-, or a 49-cent sale moves only the merchandise that is somewhere near these figures. Our nine-cent sale moved the higher-priced goods, and was a complete success in every way. Other merchants who heard of it wrote for the details, and have informed us that they adopted the same plan with very satisfactory results."

SHIRTS and OVERALLS

95% of the Retailers in Business to-day are Aiming at Practically the Same Thing.

They're trying to build their business on a strong, lasting basis, and to keep the growth steady and perpetual. Now, there is only one way to do this, that is to stock Goods that will make Quality the selling Argument. This plan means satisfaction to the customers, and in the word "Satisfaction" is found the keynote of the rise and growth of every business that is worthy of the name.

Colossus Shirts and Overalls were put on this "Quality Plan" from the very start, and as a result the increase in sales has been phenomenal. Colossus garments, as the name implies, are large and strong, but the features which sell them---- the Materials, the Workmanship and the Finish---are high-class to a degree. Hard to Get Delivery On Shirts—The Attached Cuffs Selling Well—A Good Display Idea.

The wholesale and retail trades are experiencing great difficulty in getting delivery on shirts. The factories have been working as hard as it is possible for them to work, but still they cannot nearly meet the demand. Many retailers who were late in ordering found themselves in the rather unpleasant predicament of being short of stock when the season opened. They refused to believe that conditions were quite so bad as painted, but their skepticism meant the loss of quite a little good trade. Nearly everywhere they go travelers are called upon to make excuses for the non-delivery of orders placed some time ago. When the Fall season starts it is likely that very few merchants will neglect to cover their requirements early.

One firm which is struggling hard to fill its orders, asked some of their hands to work on a Saturday afternoon recently. None refused to do so, but on Monday morning a number failed to show up; they were sure of getting just as lucrative employment elsewhere, and did not hesitate to make a change, feeling, no doubt, that they were being treated unfairly. Of course they were paid for the extra time, but even that, combined with the fact that they must have known something about the condition of deliveries, did not satisfy them. This indicates the condition of the labor market just now.

A Toronto store utilized a good idea for the display of shirts. A window was devoted entirely to blues in a medium shade. They were very neatly arranged, and each one had a collar and cravat attached, all the various styles in both being shown. In the latter it was, of course, necessary that care should be exercised to show only colors that blended well with blue. This window drew a great deal of attention and must have attracted sales in very substantial volume.

Retailers have been buying heavily on shirts with cuffs attached, and this coming season should indicate pretty well whether or not this style of garment is to "catch on" good and hard. There are points which may be advanced both for and against it. The great objection is that for business wear the cuffs soil very quickly, and often, inside of half a day, qualify for the laundry bag. That would not be so terribly bad if it were not that they will stand very few trips to the laundry without becoming shabby. What are we to do, then? Must a new shirt be purchased? If this were necessary we would feel perfectly safe in prophesying a short life for attached cuffs. However, some manufacturers have endeavored to overcome one objection by making what is called a French cuff. The sleeve just above is starched and when folded back, and the cuff buttoned over, the latter is well away from the hand and protected by the coat sleeve. Concerns across the line have been sending out an extra pair of cuffs to be sewn on after the original pair becomes unfit for use. For Summer wear the cuffs are quite narrow.

We have spoken before now of the advisability of pushing better lines, and we wish to enphasize this point again. There is little money now in selling cheap shirts, and less satisfaction to your customers who wear them. You can dispose of better goods if you wish. Just try it.

How to obviate the bulging of the dress shirt has been a problem not easy of solution. The body of a new shirt patented by the Interstate Shirt and Collar Co., is sewed not to the edge of the bosom, but about two inches from the edge on the inside. Thus the suspenders in front run between the body and the bosom, and the lower part of the bosom projects slightly over the top of the trousers, being hid by the waistcoat. The front readily follows the movements of the wearer, whether in stooping or turning posture. Men of generous build do not, so much as others, notice the effect of the impression of the suspenders upon the bosom of their dress shirt, but this is a common and serious fault.

Ready-to-Wear

The Best Lines Must Be Insisted Upon if the Department is to Grow Materially.

In ready-to-wear clothing for Fall a narrower shoulder than heretofore will be used, and we feel that the change will be welcomed both in under and overcoats. The custom tailors have used it altogether this Spring, putting in just enough padding to round off the shoulder nicely.

Manufacturers are improving their output all round, and every retailer should insist upon getting the best procurable, such goods as he will not be ashamed to show to any of his customers. The day is coming when ready-to-wear business will reach somewhat the same proportions that it has in the States, and now is the time to lay the foundation upon which to build up a reputation that will place you in a position to attract your share of trade. Unless you strive to make steady progress along this line you will lose materially through your neglect.

The decision of some manufacturers to accept no more special orders is a good one. They will never attain the growth which they desire unless ready-to-wear business expands to many times what it now is, and they would be foolish to foster any condition which tends to discourage this expansion.

In last issue we dealt pretty fully with the suitings that have been purchased for Fall.

Origin of Men's Fashions

This Article Endeavors to Trace the History of a Change in Fashion, and to Fix the Responsibility for It.

Men's Wear :—This Winter when "fashion" decreed that the well-dressed masculine community should adopt a more closely defined waist line, and add an extra inch or two to the lounge jacket, the fact was accepted by every tailor possessed of a clientele which attached importance to such matters. Few, probably, of the many who noted and provided for the change went sufficiently into the question to inquire, "Why, and who influenced the change ?" The point has been debated among tailors and among cutters, whose duty it is to obey the unseen authority, times out of number, and always without conclusive result. At the moment, when there exists, as we believe, a keen desire among a considerable portion of the trade to bring about, by one means or another, more frequent changes in the characteristics of masculine attire, and to infuse fresh interest into the subject of men's clothes, the question assumes a new importance. If any influence is to be brought to bear in the direction indicated, it is evident that the source of fashion's inspiration must first be traced, so that the activity expended by those interested may not be misdirected.

An Inconclusive View.

Said a recognized sartorial authority, asked for an opinion on the point : "The question has been discussed by trade societies for the last 20 years, and the identity of those responsible for the suggestions which establish the fashion remains a mystery to-day. There is probably no person, or group of persons, who can claim to have originated on a large scale. Most men's fashions are of gradual growth, and, in fact, have been evolutionary in character."

The answer is typical of the many opinions which those most closely in touch with the exclusive West-End trade expressed. But the inconclusive nature of such a reply is at once apparent, and, upon a little reflection, it is impossible to accept it as a final word on the subject. From season to season changes do occur ; they are followed by the trade, and adopted by the well-dressed section of the public. They must come from somewhere—and must be traceable to a definite source.

A Comparison and a Contrast.

We may regard for a moment the subject of feminine fashions. It is not difficult to trace their origin. In Paris and in Vienna there are skilful designers and artists of great distinction in their work, who each season produce a model, or perhaps two, in the particular branch of dress with which their fame is identified. Such a model is acquired by a house with more direct commercial connections, is reproduced, finds favor among the experts, and, finally, with or without modification, takes its place among the fashions of the moment. From the "creation" of the court dressmaker to the extended popularity of the suburbs it progresses, finally to be extinguished as the downward movement continues, and a fresh inspiration takes its place.

The field of men's attire would appear to afford no parallel to this process ; the first-class tailoring house has no recognized court of appeal on questions of fashion ; the masculine mode has not been placed on an exclusively commercial plane. This much it requires little investigation to make perfectly clear.

Does the Masculine "Fashion Leader" Really Originate?

There exists a marked tendency among tailors to assume that the regulation of the fashion is more largely due to the influence of the customer on the tailor than of the tailor upon the customer. The city takes its cue from the west-end, the west-end sets the example, and the west-end wearer—the man of refined taste, whose independence entitles him to the distinction of a leader of the mode—governs the tailor who gives expression to his ideas. This would constitute the argument logically elaborated. But is it so ?

There is good reason to doubt it. In the first place, it is open to question whether there exists a class of "well-dressed" men sufficiently independent of convention and with adequate fixity of interest in questions of dress, to lead in the complete sense which the acceptation of such a condition of things would pre-suppose. They could not do so without expert assistance, and it is only reasonable to assume that such qualified supervision must soon establish itself as the principal factor.

There are many who deny that it is the man of really high social status who influences the fashion. The aristocracy—both the older and younger sections thereof—are stated to be, as a class, extremely conservative in their attitude towards dress, and move but little from one year to another. They buy good stuff, and often, but will tolerate no experiment. Rather is it the smart military man, and the sporting individual, who is the willing exponent of ideas (which may be his own or another's), and leaves his mark often upon the styles which find more general acceptation in the west-end, and which are handed down to the wider circle of city and provincial wearers. Among them new ideas receive consideration, and the sartorial artist enjoys an enlarged scope.

Where do they go for their clothes ? Not to Poole's or the half-a-dozen famous firms so long and honorably associated with the tailoring craft. These each have their own characteristics, in themselves practically unalterable. Any cutter with a wide west-end experience could name the origin of any garment made under the auspices of the great group. They reflect the conservative instincts of their patrons, and prosper. They are, therefore, enabled to exercise an independence which enables them to preclude experiment from their domain.

In the neighborhood of Conduit street there are, of course, many essentially "military" tailors. These, no doubt, have their share of smart customers of the kind which has been mentioned. But, apart from these, dotted about in thoroughfares such as Grafton street and Brook street are many tailors whose shops would scarcely be suspected as being connected with tailoring, and which give the impression of small offices of a semi private nature. Their clients are young officers in the Guards, wealthy sportsmen, and similar men of considerable position, and with a certain liking for conspicuity. Here, it may be taken for granted, many important sartorial plots are hatched, and it is the tailor, and not the customer, who plays the leading part.

Tailors' Suggestions and Their Influence.

Assume that jackets have been worn loose-fitting and comparatively short. The tailor may suggest that a little change may be advisable, slight in itself, but calculed to create an impression of some significance. In another instance, the tailor experimenting under similar conditions advises a change in the collar. Both suggestions are realized ; there may be half-a-dozen others like them. One or more of the suggestions may appeal to observers, who will mention to their tailors that such a detail is desirable in their own clothes. A "fashion" has been started, which may or may not have an extensive ultimate vogue. In the city the feature will be accenuated, and often painfully exaggerated. Then is the extreme attained, and every man is conscious of the mode thus interpreted to him.

This would seem to be about as close as it is possible to get in tracing the course of a fashion to its source. On the whole, it would seem to fit the facts as they are—which is a good deal more than can be said for the evolutionary theory.

Another point of practical interest suggests itself. If such changes as occur are due to the example of a somewhat venturesome section of well-dressed men, why is it that the alterations are not more radical and frequent in character ? The answer may be that the conservatism of those to whom the suggestions first make appeal acts as a restraining influence, and that any example which is calculated to secure an extensive following must, in these circumstances, be of a distinctly moderate nature.

Wash Neckwear

This Will Be a Big Season for it—Small, Neat Designs Are the Leaders.

Wash neckwear will soon occupy a prominent place in the retail stores. Last year pure white was the leader, sometimes with a self-pattern, but this season the great majority of lines have a colored pattern. This must certainly be small and neat, to preserve the cool appearance which is the great feature which these goods have to recommend them. Only a small percentage of the neckwear offered as wash goods can really be laundered.. Two inches is now the popular width, and it will be worn mainly with the stand-up fold collar, slightly below medium height. A Toronto store showed some very pretty greys, pinks, blues, etc., with very open plain check a few days ago.

Bows are selling very well, and manufacturers are finding a ready demand for those in the new shape which are sold made up. Of course most retailers outside the large centres have to carry a certain amount of stock in this line, and they surely will not make the mistake of trying to sell any to customers who make any pretence at being smart dressers.

Coin spots, white on dark blue ground and blue on white ground, etc., strike our fancy, and we believe they should be good sellers. Another new line that we would pick as likely to meet with very decided favor is a dark ground with light hair-line check about an inch to an inch and a half in width.

As we predicted in last issue, the attempt to push browns has not succeeded. This color should be allowed to rest for a while longer. The public will come round to it again in proper time, but not until the immense run which they made on the color becomes a little less fresh in their memories.

One firm is showing white coin spots on washing foulards on light and dark plum, light grey, dark cardinal, Alice blue, self and stone grounds, with handkerchiefs to match. Another novelty is a bordered wash cravat in six shades, each with white border. This would have an attractive appearance when worn without a waistcoat. Shepherd's plaids are being put out strong, but we are not sure that they will meet with a very enthusiastic reception. Stocks for outing wear are also seen.

In neckwear to retail at fifty cents values are very noticeably reduced, and we would urge retailers to push the lines at seventy-five cents and a dollar whenever possible. Numbers of stores have done this with good result.

The Hat Trade

The Stiff Hat is the Leader—Straws Will be in Short Supply.

The vogue of the stiff hat is acknowledged. One does not need to be an observer to be aware that in all the larger towns the proportion of stiff hats worn to-day would be fully ten out of every twelve. This is the hat that the retailer will make his money on. Each year brings forward some new type, which has a certain prominence or following, and the year 1907 is no exception to the rule. Where any large number of young men congregate one will notice the predominence of a flat-set brim, full crown with side eyelets and deep band. Outside of this the hats of the day present an appearance of well-judged proportion, due to the close attention given to the selection of styles by the buyer for the wholesale trade. They, naturally, in turn, have their ideas taken up and offered for sale by the retailer. One cannot but admit that soft hats have been somewhat slow, but as the season advances they will be taken up more freely, especially in the neglige or outing styles. The straw sailor will still remain the leading style for Summer wear. It is made of the usual split Milan, and other suitable braids, with very little change in styles. Manufacturers state that panamas have met with marked favor, and that all soft straw hats have been bought freely for the wrm weather rush soon to come. By the way, a certain fashion note for men in a very prominent publication mentioned that grey derbies would be the correct thing for the present season. How would you like to stock a dozen or two?

Colored bands on straw hats are gradually growing in favor, but the staple black always saves a lot of argument when it comes to the selling of the article over the counter.

American factories are crowded to the doors with orders, and if a real warm wave strikes the country the average retailer will find it a very difficult matter to get deliveries of any goods, the buying of which he may have put off until the opening of the season. The most prominent feature in connection with the hat trade for the present year is the delay in shipments reaching the retailers. This delay is partly due to the serious blockades on our railroads during the past Winter. While the wholesaler comes in for the goodly portion of the blame, retailers should be charitable enough to let him down a little, knowing he (the wholesaler) must have his own troubles getting deliveries from the factories.

The price of hats is steadily increasing, as the materials for the formation of the hat have all advanced, as have wages also. This will affect retailers to the extent that they will have to raise prices to cover themselves. In view of these conditions merchants should anticipate their requirements and order liberally and early so as to receive deliveries early and also secure the best prices. On hats which sell at fixed prices it is noticeable that quality has had to be cut down somewhat.

The Trade in London, Ont.

London, Ont., May 1.—The remarks in last month's issue regarding three great evils with which the trade has to contend—the cancelling of orders, returning of goods and dishonoring of drafts—have struck a responsive chord among the wholesalers of London. Evidently the order cancellers are the only class of people known to commercial life who regard a contract deliberately entered into as being binding on the other fellow. Unfortunately, the practice is not confined to a few isolated cases; it is widespread, and the sooner it is put a stop to the better it will be for the victims. When an order is placed it should be regarded as a contract, the conditions of which both buyer and seller should loyally observe, and the failure of either party to do so should stamp him as a man of, to put it mildly, questionable business principles. Have any of these offenders ever stopped to consider the loss and inconvenience this practice causes? The loss of the traveler's time, while serious in itself, is but one of the lightest items in the total bill of loss this practice entails. The cancellation of orders leaves the seller with a quantity of surplus stock to dispose of as best he can, probably after the season for the goods is over, and frequently at a loss that becomes a serious factor in computing the results of the season's operations. The man who in placing his orders lacks the knowledge and experience necessary to forecast the requirements of his own business should have the common honesty to bear the consequence of his ignorance and incapacity, and should not meanly try to pardon the funds necessary to his business education from the pockets of those from whom he makes his purchases. Of course, circumstances arise, such as inability to pay by reason of business complications or misfortune, when a request to cancel an order can hardly be avoided, but when the only reason that can be urged is a miscalculation as to the requirements of business, such a course becomes a positive offence against common commercial principles.

The agitation among wholesalers last Fall to effect an agreement regarding discounts and dating, though it failed to go through, owing to a couple of western dealers holding off, has had the effect of bringing about an improvement in these respects, there being noticeable a marked tendency in the direction of uniformity.

Retail Trade Brisk — Recent Advances of Ten Per Cent. —Preparations for Fall.

With retailers stocks of rugs and piece goods are all in, and the various fixtures are thronged and decorated with the latest novelties ordered for the Spring and Summer trade. As far as immediate business is concerned at retail, carpets are in splendid request, and merchants state that in many cases sales have more than doubled over April of the previous year, Trade opened up about the middle of March, and up to the present time everything is running smoothly and sales are all that can be expected. Brussels and axminsters, as previously mentioned in The Review, still continue to hold first place in the three-quarter widths. There has been quite a demand for yard-wide stair carpets lately. They are largely used in corridors or on stained or polished floors. A much better feeling is experienced for wool carpets, both in piece goods and squares. In these goods some very pretty small effects are shown in pinks and blues. They are used largely for bedrooms. Double tapestry carpets are quite a feature in this season's showing, and sales continue active. One reason for their popularity is the width, which is 1¼ yards, and saves many seams and sewing. This is quite a consideration to housekeepers. Among the colors predominating are greens, light chintz effects and soft tones and shades. There is a general tendency towards bronze-green, more especially in the cheaper grade goods.

Prices are still soaring, and every indication points to the fact that they are going higher as the season progresses. There has been another advance of from five per cent. to ten per cent. recently in both domestic and foreign goods, and the end is not yet. Manufacturers of English tapestry carpets have advanced their goods 2½ cents per yard, making the advance on lower grades of tapestry over fifty per cent. higher than last year.

Both manufacturers and jobbers state that business has been very good throughout the last month, with repeat orders coming in fairly well. Hemps and tapestries are to the fore in the cheaper class goods, as well as the Brussels, Axminsters and Wiltons in the better grade goods. Deliveries, with one or two exceptions, have been fair.

Domestic mills for Fall report good sales in both three-quarter piece goods and rugs, in Brussels and Wiltons. Canadian travelers are on the road carrying all the latest designs and novelties, and are looking forward to a record business. The unwearied English carpet travelers are again on the wing, and notices are being daily received by merchants on this side of their approaching arrival. Travelers for the different jobbing houses have been on the road for some time now, and at the present time are busy on their sorting trips. They are also showing special lines for Fall. Deliveries from the manufacturers are expected to be all in about the end of June. In view of the recent advance of ten per cent. on both domestic and imported goods, merchants should anticipate their requirements and order liberally and as early as possible, as no relief from the present high rates is in sight. Further advances may be looked for, as raw materials are steadily advancing, wages are increasing, and the prosperous condition of the country means increased call for all grades of carpets.

Oilcloths and Linoleums

These Lines are Active—Recent Advances Will Affect Retail Trade.

Merchants were quite startled recently by the increase in the price of domestic and foreign oilcloths and linoleums. This has affected the whole manufacture, with the exception of inlaids. Not only have prices soared, but the tariff on these goods has advanced five per cent., which will make a noticeable increase for the coming season. Although this advance in price has been long expected, it came as a surprise, and there is no doubt but that it found quite a few merchants unprepared.

Among large retailers there seems to be a falling off in the better quality four-yard-wide goods. Inlaid linoleums are mostly used. Oilcloths and linoleums are slowly coming into prominence for bedrooms on account of their sanitary qualities, and floral patterns are being generally selected. Hardwood effects are largely used as borders for rugs. They are very effective, and easily cleaned, people finding them better than wool filling. Cork carpets, both plain and printed, are selling well, but natural cork continues to hold first place. There are also a lot of nice oilcloth squares shown by merchants this season.

Among the jobbers inlaids are selling well. They state that the recent advances on all oilcloths and linoleums will certainly affect the retail trade. They have advanced prices to cover the increased duty. They also claim that British manufacturers are so busy in many cases they have been unable to execute orders promptly, and on this account they (the jobbers) have many orders on hand undelivered. The domestic source of supply is very busy, and repeats are expected this month. Their advance in prices is on a much lower scale than that on foreign goods.

RUGS ACTIVE.

The sale of rugs is still on the increase. They can be lifted, cleaned and relaid with very little trouble. Those meeting with the public favor just now are seamless art squares. A large variety of tapestry rugs are also selling well. These are very attractive in appearance and are not costly. A tapestry rug 3x1, or in other words, 12.0 x 9.0, is the best selling size, and can be bought at retail anywhere from $8.50 to $15. There is also a large assortment of two-toned effects to be had in Brussels squares. The borders on a rug are always woven to the square and this saves mitres and cross seams. The trade for jute rugs and carpets has been very small so far, mainly owing to the increases in price this rug has experienced during the last year. Moravian rugs are being well looked after and are gradually coming into prominence. They are very sightly in appearance and the designs, in most cases, are copies of celebrated Persian and Turkish carpets. They are shown in sizes from a small door mat to the square in the larger sizes. They are also to be had in hall runners in sizes 9.0 x 3.0, 10.6 x 3.0, and 12.0 x 3.0. Orientals and antique Persian rugs are still in high favor and the trade is well satisfied with these goods.

A Novel Panel Treatment, Artistic, Effective and Inexpensive. Filler of Grasscloth No. 1,711. Panel blocked out with a suitable divider. The scenery border No. 2,793 lends an artistic feature, and is one of the best scenery borders shown for 1907. Manufactured by Stauntons Limited.

ORIENTAL STRAW MATTING.

Straw mattings, in the markets of China and Japan, have been very scarce and hard to get this season. As a consequence, prices are away up, being actually fifty per cent. higher than they were last year. Some very pretty effects are shown in checks and carpet designs. Stencilled mattings are also very scarce. The retail prices for straw mattings this season run from 15c. to 60c. per yard, and last year the same quality goods were retailed from 10c. to 10c. per yard. As a result, sales are not expected to equal those of last year.

REPEAL OF THE QUEBEC TAX.

The Quebec Legislature, at its recent session, took a very sensible action in repealing the tax on commercial travelers doing business in that province as the representatives of outside concerns. We have already announced the repeal of a similar tax in British Columbia. We are glad to see both of them go; they were hindrances to trade, and had no reasonable excuse for existence in the first place. In Quebec, even the fact that a yearly revenue of $18,000 is lost should cause no regret.

Wall Paper

This is between seasons in wall paper manufacturing circles; and spring goods are now—or should be if retail dealers are energetic—going like "one o'clock," so to speak. Designers, about this time af the year, are scratching heads and biting finger nails in thinking out something novel for the fall trade.

Our domestic manufacturers seem to be pretty well up to the mark in devising new ideas, or are particularly persistent in rooting out new ideas from foreign points. The natural result of this domestic energy is as choice a line of goods as any reasonable public could wish for.

It will at once be seen by the discerning retailer that this matter of choice of design is of the utmost importance to his business. Nowadays people are not satisfied with any old thing for their wall decorations. The general commercial prosperity of the country is reflected in this desire for the unique and the artistic in wall decorations. There are, of course, many people whose tastes have not yet been elevated beyond the cheap and commonplace in wall paper. Herein lies a profitable duty for every retailer to perform. Strive to educate the poor in taste—not force them—up to an appreciation of the really artistic in wall decorations. While doing this work of education, by elevating the public taste, it is gratifying to know that it is a profitable undertaking if properly carried out.

In advertising wall paper of the better grades, more stress should be laid on the quality of the goods than on the price. People of taste are undoubtedly attracted by refinement in advertising. It often happens that the substitution of one word for another completely alters the tone of the advertisement, while not in the least detracting from its meaning. In advertising wall paper, therefore, the words "wall decorations" instead of "wall paper" give a higher tone to the advertisement. "Decorations" is, as a matter of fact, the proper word to describe the higher grades of wall paper. So much artistic ingenuity is exercised in modern wall paper production, that many grades can easily vie with the frescoes which decorated the walls of ancient palaces. Wall paper possesses the distinct advantage also, that it is cheaper than fresco painting, and can be changed at any time. It will be well to bear these facts in mind when writing copy for your newspaper space. Lay particular stress upon the quality and exclusiveness of the stock you carry, and reach out after the people who are looking for wall decorations, rather than something to cover the walls.

A contract has been signed for the erection of a $40,000 department store at Prince Albert. The building will be owned by Rev. Wm. Moore, and it has already been leased to Hamlin Bros., of Winnipeg.

IN THE SAME BOAT.

The shortage of various lines of goods in the United States has become so acute that American manufacturers have appealed to Canada for help, only to find the Canadian trade laboring under the same conditions that they themselves have to face. The following from the New York Commercial in regard to cotton goods might be made applicable to other fabrics as well, and it serves to further emphasize what we have tried to impress upon our readers :—

"Many retail buyers have questioned the statements made this season by jobbers and selling agents regarding the shortage of staple cotton goods, and the fact that it is impossible to make the deliveries called for. That these statements have not been exaggerated—in fact, have been under, rather than overdrawn—is shown by the position in which one of the largest American concerns now finds itself. This concern, which does an enormous business, has been unable to obtain, since the year opened, sufficient supplies of cambrics and other cotton goods with which to turn out the orders now on its books, in spite of the fact that orders for goods were placed unusually early. Failing to obtain supplies from American manufacturers, jobbers or selling agents, an effort was made to obtain supplies of cotton goods from Canada, but without success."

We here give extracts from the letters of the largest firms in Canada in this regard: "We are sorry to say that we are unable to supply you with any of the goods mentioned, for they are just as scarce here as in your country." * * * "Your letter received, and in reply beg to state that we have no muslins or cambrics to offer." * * * "Your letter to hand asking for two qualities of cambric, neither of which we are able to supply. In case any other goods will be of use, we enclose several samples, but do not anticipate that you will be able to pay duty on these prices. The samples sent are offered subject to the goods being unsold should you order." * * * "We regret we are not in a position to offer you muslins or cambrics." * * * "We do not know what the duty on bleached cotton goods into the United States is. We think, however, it is about forty or fifty per cent. We regret very much that we cannot send you samples. We are in the same condition as you. Canadian mills are very much behindhand in the delivery of these goods, and the goods we are getting in from England are also weeks behind time in delivery. It would, therefore, be useless for us to send you any samples, as we could not give you satisfactory delivery; in fact, cannot get enough to fill our own orders here." * * * "We are in exactly the same difficulty as yourselves regarding almost all counts of cotton goods."

HINTS TO BUYERS

From information supplied by Sellers, but for which the Editors of THE REVIEW do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

The W. R. Brock Co., Montreal.

The W. R. Brock Co., Montreal, have just received a clearing lot of muslins from one of the manufacturers here, and are offering the goods at quite a reduction, over 25 per cent. in many instances. Special mention might be made of the E7 mercerized leno stripe, which, although retailed in the regular way at 20 cents, can be had at a figure which will enable the retailer to offer it at 15 cents. MB35, a satin check apron muslin, to retail at ten cents, is having a very good sale, and would fill the place of a leader at a bargain sale. In Swiss spot muslins, attention might be drawn to two lines, 6336, to retail at 15 cents, and 271, to sell at 11 cents. Both, we are sure, will prove very good sellers.

The range of dress goods for Fall of 1907 is now on the road and quite a number of new fabrics and designs are being offered for sale. The demand for plaid checks in both suitings and dress fabrics still continues very strong, and in this connection we might refer to JB34, clan tartan dress goods and the "Korbay" plaids, both of which lines have been ordered in large quantities. In the tweed suitings "Kurragh," "Kruso" and "Kracko" have met with a very good reception from all who have seen them and the Brock Co. may look for good business in all these lines. But while the checks, stripes and plaids will be asked for to a large extent, popular favor seems to be turning to the plainer materials and patterns, such as venetians, vicunas and broads and great care has apparently been taken in the selection of these goods. Prominent in the collection are AM33 vienna suiting, WM105 chiffon venetian and TH90 chiffon broads, three lines which have been ordered in large quantities by the various city merchants.

The range of Fall blousings, too, is A1, in every particular, many of the very popular lines of last season having been repeated.

Just a word about deliveries. While it was pretty hard to get goods for Spring, they anticipate a much greater difficulty in getting deliveries for Fall, and it will be practically impossible for the wholesalers to get on repeats with the manufacturers. While they have in many instances placed very large orders, it would be advisable for the retailer to place orders just as early as possible for all his requirements.

Debenhams (Canada) Limited, Montreal.

Their samples for the Fall season are now in the hands of their representatives. They will advise from their Montreal and Toronto branches of the exact date on which the collection will be submitted to you. Their buyers having made an exceptionally early visit to the market, with a view to obtaining an adequate representation of samples of Fall novelties in time for the Canadian trade, the range from all departments is by far the most complete they have yet been able to send out. The importance of placing orders early for the coming season cannot be exaggerated. There is every indication that prices will still further advance, and in certain sections there will probably be a shortage of goods. They have given their represtntatives full information on all points of special interest in connection with the samples, together with indications of the trend of fashion. Among their late trade literature is a handsome four-page booklet, handsomely gotten up and printed on very heavy stock. It is about 12x9 inches and has a white cover with black and white lettering. The back page of this very interesting booklet is occupied by an illustration of the trade mark of Atlantic Serge. A copy will be mailed by the firm on application.

Greenshields Limited, Montreal.

In face of strong markets in all dry goods lines, Greenshields Limited, Montreal, state that they are able to offer many desirable lines at attractive prices, and that they are well able to look after all wants of their customers this month.

In wash dress goods, whites are still claiming the premier position. The principal lines which are particularly good are Persian lawns, organdies, India linens, Victoria lawns, Swiss book and Swiss spot muslins. Costume drills and real Irish fancy linens are also to the fore. In reference to above costume drills and linens, they state that these lines are especially adapted for Summer suits, being made of a very strong mixture of cotton and linen textures. They will always press and keep shape to satisfaction. This firm have stocked largely on these goods and expect a big run on same. In colored dress muslins, large spots on white grounds, or vice versa, are selling well. There are also numerous smaller spots and designs to meet all tastes. Customers visiting the city during the month of May will find a large assortment and variety to select from. They claim their stock is in a first-class condition, and are ready to meet all demands which may be made upon it. Letter orders are always executed faithfully, with care and precision, and are forwarded with the greatest expediency. A call in the month of May is sure to be of mutual advantage.

Good business is being done in the linen department. Although supplies of different lines held by some houses are short, Greenshields have a good stock on hand and are able to fill any orders received. They state that they have had information from a good source to the effect that spinners in Belfast are filled up with orders sufficient to keep them busy for twelve months ahead. As a consequence, goods are very scarce and the manufacturers are handicapped by this same reason, as they cannot get sufficient materials to fill orders received. This firm are showing leading lines in table damasks, table cloths, napkins and towelings, at old quotations just at the moment, but they expect to be compelled to advance all lines in a short while.

In the woollen department, ladies' mantle tweed cloths are moving very freely for Fall, in both light and dark colors. Beavers in various colorings, and especially in black, are also shown. They are also submitting a novelty in imitation broadtail and astrachan.

In department E stocks are well arranged and open orders receive prompt treatment. Popular Spring hosiery, including the lace ankle goods, is in good supply. A big range in cotton and lisle thread in plain effects is also to be had. Colors predominating are whites, pinks, sky blues, champagnes, and light greys, with black leading.

All lines of linings have advanced, and although goods are extremely scarce, they have their usual large assorted stock in the following lines: sateens, perclaines and taffeta linings. A number of these goods are of very special price, particularly in sateens. They pay particular attention to letter orders.

A record business is being done in the house furnishing department. Anything wanted for immediate delivery, carpets, squares, linoleums oilcloths, mattings, cretonne, art muslins, curtains, curtain nets. See their travelers' samples or write them direct. Their stock in these lines contains the latest designs. They have the goods right in stock.

The Canadian Underwear Co.

This firm, the Canadian distributors of "J" brand collars, cuffs and shirts, have issued a complete catalogue of these goods, which for usefulness and attractiveness is hard to equal. It contains 36 pages, and the careful compiling of the work reflects credit upon the enterprise of the firm. It is printed on very heavy stock in two colors. A full line is illustrated and prices are quoted in every instance. Some interesting half-tones of the factory and offices in Austria give some idea of the immense output of these goods. The reading matter is strong and pointed, the merits of the goods being brought out clearly. Some interesting business details and a dress chart are appended. The catalogue will be found of interest to every retailer and will de mailed on application to the Canadian Underwear Co., 505 St. Paul St., Montreal.

Delfosse and Co., Montreal.

A new drapery stand for the display of dress goods, silks and wash goods is illustrated. The stand is having a ready sale and is one of the best sellers of Delfosse & Co.'s lines. Their wax heads are proving the points of superiority claimed. A useful fixture catalogue can be had by addressing this firm, No 5 Hermine St., Montreal.

Between-season Novelties in Waists.

It has only been in the high-priced waists designed specially for the exclusive trade, that hitherto merchants have been able to obtain a constant succession of novelties. Rhys D. Fairbairn & Co. are now out to show the same for the popular trade, and each month their travelers will have something new to show to the trade, even between seasons, in medium-priced waists.

As waist-making fits in admirably with the neckwear business, the same materials, etc., being used, and as the samples can easily be carried along with neckwear, this firm has the proper facilities for making this departure a success. To the up-to-date merchant who values the trade-pulling power of a constant succession of novelties, and who is endeavoring to increase the turn-over in this department, the line of blouses put on the market by Rhys D. Fairbairn & Co. should be specially interesting.

John Macdonald & Co.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, have a fully assorted stock for the assorting season in men's underwear, half-hose, neckwear, suspenders, men's working and negligee shirts, overalls, umbrellas and haberdashery.

They are showing superior value and a beautiful assortment in black voile dress goods, Panama dress goods, in navy and in black, white lawns, India linens, nainsooks, vestlings and sheer muslins; a large range of styles and prices in val. laces, also in white lawn blouses and in ladies' ready-to-wear dress skirts and underskirts; ten jobs in dress goods and a big job in cotton hose.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, state that their stock of woolens and tailors' trimmings, including ladies' tweed costume goods and mantlings is fully assorted.

By recent shipments they have completed their assortment of Crum's prints and colored dress muslins for the assorting trade. Their stock of towels, towelings and linen tablings is fairly well assorted. They inform us that their stock of carpets and house furnishings is fully assorted. This is the month of their semi-annual stock-taking, and so as to reduce their stock before stock-taking they are showing a quantity of tapestry, Brussels, Axminster and Wilton carpets very much below last season's prices; four lines in hemp stair carpets at job prices; several lines of seamless velvet squares greatly below regular prices, sizes 3x3½, 3x1, 3½x4; a line of 8-4 British linoleums at 7½c. per square yard, under the regular price; six lines 16-4 linoleums at popular prices. They report repeat shipments of all the best selling designs in tapestry and Brussels squares.

W. H. Barry & Co., Montreal.

Walter H. Barry & Co., one of Canada's up-to-date ribbon houses, have vacated their old premises, 234 McGill St., and have removed to larger quarters next door, corner of St. James and McGill Sts., Montreal. As they have foreseen the scarcity of ribbons, this firm anticipated requirements early, and have one of the best assorted ribbon stocks in the country. Although this is a very strong statement to make they are willing to back up their remarks. A visit to their new premises would be appreciated.

Greenshields, Western, Limited, Winnipeg.

Greenshields, Western, Limited, Winnipeg, emphasize the importance of early buying for Fall and Winter. They state that the factories will be unable to take care of repeat orders in many lines and that the retail trade will be well advised if they plan their orders early. Greenshields, Western, have a good stock of all staple lines at present, in spite of the unsatisfactory traffic conditions, and they are prepared to fill orders promptly.

They direct special attention to a bargain offering of 1,000 pieces of dress gingham. This is a job line and they are offering it below mill prices.

PLEASE MENTION

In their men's furnishing department they have some new fancy lines of hosiery and shirts, etc., intended for the particular trade. They have many exclusive lines. Stock in all departments is complete and they invite enquiries.

Debenhams (Canada) Limited, Toronto.

There is an increased and increasing sale for linings, and Debenhams are specially noted for their big ranges, and for their exceptionally low prices. This is a feature that this Fall they would specially bring under your notice, as many of their well known lines were bought before the great advance in cotton goods. Black electro satin is a big seller, and this firm specially recommend ranges 9-80 and AE as being the best, and would also draw your notice to the range of stripes and checks in black electros. They are showing ceemsylk in black only. This cloth has a waterproof finish and is slightly heavier than the ordinary electro. Taffetine is a popular cloth at a popular price, and the qualities this firm is showing even with the slight advances they are asking, are especially cheap, as the advance is nothing in proportion to the rise in the market. Taffetine I is exceptionally cheap, but will hardly run the season out at its present figure, and is shown in a magnificent range of shades. Samples of moire skirtings are not yet to hand as manufacturers are not ready to show. The difficulty in obtaining grey in all cotton goods is a serious factor in the market to-day, and so long as this condition continues prices will be well maintained; in fact, Debenhams look for still further advances.

Clothing Cabinets and Show Cases.

The Grand Rapids Show Case Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., have opened a new office in New York City and are showing there a line of their latest styles in show cases. The representative in charge id G. L. Weldon. We are in receipt of catalogue D., issued by this firm, in which are illustrated splendid sectional clothing cabinets, and a variety of dry goods show cases.

The W. R. Brock Co., Toronto.

The W. R. Brock Co. report that their travelers are now out with a full range of dress goods for Fall, and they strongly advise all their friends to make no delay in placing their orders, as deliveries are going to be the most difficult in the history of the trade. It is only the man who places early orders who can be sure of getting the goods this Fall. This firm have every confidence in the range they are now showing, as their buyers have made a most careful selection from the Fall fabrics shown by the leading manufacturers and finishers of the world. Plain cloths will be a strong feature, and this company are showing a most comprehensive range of venetians, sedans, chiffon box cloths, wool satins, poplins, etc. Other leaders are dark over-checks and stripes in tweed effects, and in bright-finished cloths. There is every evidence also that clan tartans will again be in high favor. Bright-finished serges and cheviots in blues and black give indications of coming strongly to the front. Special attention is drawn to diadematis, a particularly fine make of Henrietta serge, guaranteed all pure wool, and free from gum and filling. Experience has taught this firm that this is the most satisfactory cloth a lady can wear.

When examining Brock's sample line the trade is advised to see their special Kruso and Radio tweeds in the popular dark colors and stripes. Another favorite is the Shepherdess in large black and white checks, with colored over-line. Blouse materials will be in good demand in printed flannels, embroidered flannels, embroidered albatross, and in printed delaines. In the last mentioned, coin spits and polka dots are the correct thing. They would call attention to the new black materials made by the same firm that manufacture their popular Hucar cord-de-soie, chamois cloth, and all wool mayos in a range of qualities, to retail from 75 cents to $1.50.

The W. R. Brock Co. could call the attention of all buyers of ready-to-wear goods to the fact that they now have their new skirt factory in good working shape. Their representatives have a full range of these goods for present and Fall and as the class of goods is a decided departure from the goods they have been carrying in the past, a few remarks about them would not be out of place. In the first place, down to the cheapest skirt, all goods manufactured must be perfect to the smallest detail. The best of findings are used; the mohair bands are of the finest quality; the thread also, and even the hooks and eyes. All the hems are hemmed, none being faced, and although this takes more cloth and requires careful, experienced help, it makes the garment more sightly and easier to shorten or lengthen, if needs be. All these goods are examined and measured three times in the course of manufacture, and the value of this will be seen in the fact that although over 7,000 skirts have been sent out since the beginning of this season, so far not one has been returned on account of any defect in the making or fit. But, over and above all this, the point they are especially proud of is the fit of their garments, and they claim "Her Ladyship" skirts are the best made and the best fitting garments on the Canadian market. With their system each operation in the course of making checks the measurement and it is next to impossible for a skirt to come out wrong. No ready-to-wear skirts will fit every woman, but "Her Ladyship" skirts will fit more women than any other brand of skirt on the market. These goods are not made to sell at a certain price, but they are cut and made perfectly and then a legitimate profit is added and the result is an article on which the merchant can make a good profit and feel when he sells it, it is sold and will be kept and will give his customer the greatest measure of satisfaction.

The W. R. Brock Co.'s men's furnishing department has just passed into stock several shipments of men's Summer neckwear. These include all the novelties in men's washing silks in light designs in both derby and teck shapes. They are showing a very attractive range of men's Summer vests in white and fancy, to sell at popular prices. All sizes in German and French balbriggan underwear to retail at 50c. are now in stock; also two lines of natural wool underwear to retail at 75c. and $1, which are special values. Some novelties in men's neglige shirts have just been received, also two clearing lines of manufacturers' overmakes to retail at 50c. and 75c., which are regular 75c. and $1 values. Notwithstanding the recent heavy advances made by the manufacturers, they are still offering white shirts at old prices. They have three lines to retail at 50c., 75c., and $1, which are exceptionally good value. All styles of "Success" collars are carried in stock. This is the best line in the trade to retail at 2 for 25c.

The W. R. Brock Co. report the following scarce goods in stock for May trade: Long kid gloves in glace or undressed; tan hose in cashmere or cotton; Persian lawns, India linens, Swiss and cambric embroideries; all-overs; matched sets and selected novelties; all the latest creations of the St. Gall manufacturers. See their special carton lots referred to in last issue. The lace section has just passed into stock a shipment of fine valenciennes sets and other lace novelties. Pearl button cabinets are shown in a large variety of makes and styles. If you want the best value in plain or ribbed cashmere hose see what Brock's hosiery department is showing. Their contracts were placed before the recent advances in cashmere goods and you get the benefit of their advantages. White spot muslins are shown in all prices. A special line of spots is offered, to retail at 12½c. and 15c., also "Bestvalue" white victoria lawn. See Brock's rainproof coats, mantles and umbrellas for the wet weather. Their handkerchief department has captured and cleared out for spot cash, 4,000 dozen ladies' and men's hemstitched linen handkerchiefs. The value of this lot is the value of the year 1904, and all linen experts know how many advances have taken place since, and what goods are worth to-day. These are the snap of the hour, and can be retailed with big profit at from 10c. to 25c each. A novelty in Brock's smallware department is a line of hosiery and vest dryers. These can also be used for showing hosiery and underwear to advantage. The price is very low. Send for sample lot, assorted sizes and kinds.

TO THE TRADE MAY, 1907

Two Essentials to Success

One is to have the goods that are in demand and the other is to have customers demanding them.

Both are very much in evidence in our warehouses at present.

Our insight into the requirements of the Canadian Trade and our foresight into the state of the Foreign Markets places our stock of

Carpets, House Furnishings,
Men's Furnishings, Haberdashery,
Silks, Dress Goods, Hosiery, Gloves,
Ready-to-Wear Goods, Linens,
Staples, Woollens and Tailors' Trimmings superior in value and salableness, and the large assortment we are showing makes buying for your assorting trade easy.

All orders have our careful and prompt attention. Rush Orders----either through the mails, over the telephone or by telegraph----have extra special attention.

This is the month we prepare for our semi-annual stock-taking (May 31st.) There are always some clearing lines at this season. Call and see us when you are in the city.

MEN AND METHODS

A Home-Made Fixture for Displaying Rugs — Keeps Eaton's Catalogue Handy for Purpose of Comparison of Prices — Smith's Falls and Gananoque Stores.

GETTING AWAY FROM CREDITS.

Williams & Vanluven, Smith's Falls, carry a general stock and do a good trade among the railway employes. Their store is located about half a mile from the business section of the town, and near the station and roundhouse. Boots and shoes are a good line with this firm. "We are rather old-fashioned," said Mr. Williams to The Review, "and follow the practice of handling everything that the prople want." We hardly agree with the term "old-fashioned," for the store is neat and well equipped, and the firm sent out, some time ago, the following circular, which, in itself, shows an appreciation of modern methods :—

"To Our Patrons :—We feel it but just to our patrons and ourselves to issue this reminder, and draw attention to the past and present of business relations.

"On opening business in Smith's Falls over thirteen years ago, our aim was to stand honestly between our customers and the wholesaler or producer, considering customers' interests with our own. This we have continued to do.

"Many have appreciated our efforts to do the right, and given us their continued support, for which we are grateful. On the pther hand, the failure of some to meet honorable obligations has been, to say the least, disappointing and discouraging.

"To obviate and lessen, if possible, this serious drawback, we first adopted the thirty-days payment in full as cash ; and, secondly, out five per cent. off for spot cash, or if account paid in full in thirty days, or every pay-day.

"These efforts had some good effect, but failed in some cases to cure the habit of allowing the monthly account exceed the seeming ability to pay.

"Inasmuch as the five per cent. off means less profit to us, and a material gain to every customer meeting the conditions, we have decided to draw the line, viz., payment in full every pay-day, with a firmer hand. This is only just to ourselves and our customers who comply with the conditions. Kindly, therefore, from this ——— observe these conditions without fail, and do not be offended if we firmly hold to the rule. This is intended to stir those who have failed to observe the rule.

"We need this system strictly observed to save our business from peril and ourselves from endless worry.

"We are still with you and our aim is the same—to do justly and honorably. We ask everyone to help us carry out these principles."

A GOOD SMITH'S FALLS STORE.

The A. B. Scott Co., Smith's Falls, has been established only four years, but in that short time it has attained a prominent place in the dry goods trade of the town. Groceries are carried, but in an exclusive store.

Millinery business is good. Usually two openings are held in the Spring, one in May, to introduce Summer goods. However, trade is not held off until the formal openings ; the firm advertises that its milliners will be ready to fill special orders just as soon as they are back from the city. This is found to be a splendid idea.

A home-made fixture is used for the display of rugs, and it is well worthy of description. In the first place, a barn-door track was put up. Then the rugs were attached to twelve-foot wooden strips by screw hooks. Each of these strips was equipped with a barn-door pulley, from which the bottom had been cut off, and which was attached to the strip by a pivot. The pulleys run on the track in a way that is familiar to everyone, and the pivot arrangement makes it possible to carry a good many rugs in a very small space, and run them out for display with the use of only a short length of track.

Lace curtains also are displayed on a fixture, and Mr. Scott tells us that since putting it in they seldom miss a sale.

Carpets are carried on rolls placed in a heavy wooden fixture along one side of the department.

The firm does very little credit business. What there is is chiefly confined to the grocery department, but accounts seldom run longer than fifteen to thirty days.

A lot of attention is given to the trimming of the windows. Displays are changed at least twice a week. No advertisement is ever repeated, for, as Mr. Scott says, "If the public will not read news twice, they may reasonably be expected to treat stale advertising matter in the same way."

The firm hears little of mail order prices, but is ready to meet them at any time..

We asked Mr. Scott if Smith's Falls had a Merchants' Association. He replied that one existed, of which he is an officer, but he has not been able to get together a sufficiently large meeting at which to resign his office. The last time a meeting was called four members turned out.

This store does some mail order business of its own. In the clothing department boys' lines, but no men's, are carried.

HANDLES BANKRUPT STOCKS.

J. R. Curry, Smith's Falls, deals principally with bankrupt stocks, and sells on a strictly cash basis. One year he brought six or seven stocks into the town, but they have been scarcer lately.

BEAT EATON FIFTEEN CENTS.

The Wright Co., Gananoque, was formerly Robinson & Wright. They have an excellent store and are constantly planning improvements in it. The second floor is particularly well lighted by prisms, back and front. Here the house furnishing and ready-to-wear departments are located.

For the purpose of comparison, when mail order prices are mentioned by customers, as Eaton catalogue is always kept in the store. Often it has been brought forward with splendid effect. In one instance recently, where a sample of dress goods bought from Eaton's, was presented to see if it could be duplicated, the Wright Co.'s regular price per yard was fifteen cents below that of the mail order house.

Business is mainly cash. For years the firm has given five per cent. off for spot payments, and it pays them to do so.

Ready-to-wear garments were only put in last Fall, but they have moved satisfactorily.

Hosiery is carried in stock boxes, of tin, with wooden ends. Just how convenient these are has been most apparent at Christmas time. One Christmas eve all hands in the store started at eleven o'clock to wrap up hosiery lying on the counter. They worked hard till one-thirty, and Mr. Wright spent two hours more finishing up the next morning. The following year the stock boxes were in use and one girl cleared up everything in half an hour.

Down the centre of the ground floor is a row of shelving, which is found very handy.

LITTLE DEMAND FOR CHEAP LINES.

A Geenhill & Co., Smith's Falls, find business increasing rapidly on all ready-to-wear lines. The most striking feature of their waist trade is the steady sale of better goods than ever before. For this season a lot of the 50-cent line was ordered, but up to the time we visited this store, had not been delivered. "Other years," said Mr. Greenhill, "we would have been in an awful stew about this, but really, we haven't felt the need of these cheap goods ; there has practically been no call whatever for them. Now, you see those two girls who just went out. They are employed in one of the hotels and command excellent wages, which they spend liberally ; in fact, they buy stuff that is above the price which wives of comparatively well-to-do citizens are willing to pay."

Goods are well displayed in this store. Belts, neckwear, ribbons, notions, etc., are located near the entrance, where they are sure to attract the greatest amount of attention.

Mr. Greenhill received his dry goods training at Murray's, Toronto.

NEED MORE SPACE.

Shepherd & Cullen, Smith's Falls, have a nice, bright, well-equipped store, which they would find more suitable to their trade if it were twice as large. They started in business in the Spring of 1906, but both had a good connection in the town, for they had been employed in another store there for about twenty-two years. They handle general dry goods, house furnishings and men's furnishings. Hosiery is kept in stock boxes, and neckwear, ribbons, etc., are shown in an up-to-date case near the entrance. This firm shows a decidedly progressive spirit.

IN BUSINESS FORTY-SEVEN YEARS.

Mr. McGillivray, Smith's Falls, has been in business there since 1860, and is probably the oldest merchant in the town. He carries general dry goods, house furnishings, some ready-to-wear garments, mainly skirts and jackets, and groceries. Business is getting round more and more toward the cash basis. All accounts are rendered monthly at least, and some every two weeks.

"I have been paying cash for my goods for thirty years," said Mr. McGillivray, "and I tell you the discounts amount to something."

COMPARE PRICES WITH EATON'S.

Mackay & Co., Smith's Falls, keep an Eaton catalouge handy and do not miss an opportunity to show how favorably their prices compare with those quoted by the catalogue houses. They say a great many people from the town and vicinity have a mania for buying through mail orders. They are well supplied with catalogues and other literature calculated to keep alive that tendency. Mackay & Co. know that they and all local merchants sell numbers of lines cheaper than Eaton's, and are determined to impress that fact on just as many people as possible.

This firm sells very little on credit. The town supports several manufactories, which pay their employes every two weeks, a circumstance which assists all merchants to get very close to the cash system.

The lines carried are general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments, house furnishings and men's furnishings.

LOOSE-LEAF ACCOUNTS IN COURT.

John A. Green, secretary of the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States, says that on account of the many devices being placed on the market for keeping a record of credit between the retailer and consumer, many letters have reached his office regarding the validity of a loose-leaf system before the courts.

The following result of a thorough examination by the authorities of this question was made public in the Banking Law Journal for July, 1905, and which we reproduce herewith, confident that it will be interesting and useful to readers of The Review. The report was as follows:

"A correspondent writes asking 'As to the admissibility in evidence of loose-leaf books' and for citation of any decisions which have been rendered by the courts on this point. We find no decisions of any of the higher courts bearing upon the admissibility of loose-leaf books as a distinctive form, but believe they are admissible as evidence to the same extent and for the same purpose as bound books of accounts, while having certain decided advantages in respect of convenience.

"A notched stick, pieces of board sawed out of a corn crib, and boards upon which the measurements of lumber were kept, all have been held good books of original entry, and receivable as evidence.

"The manner of keeping the accounts, and their purpose, is the important consideration, rather than the form of the books themselves."

Mr. Green continues by stating that where accounts offered in evidence as books of original entry had been started in a small pass book and continued on sheets of paper attached together, and were objected to on the ground that the entries made upon the sheets were not made at the time of their respective dates, the dates not being in chronological order, and the ink having the appearance of being fresh, indicating that the entries were made simultaneously, it was held the account was admissible for whatever it was worth, going to the jury subject to criticism and cross-examination.

Where account books have become shopworn, the outside covers and some inside pages lost, the threads binding the leaves in some cases loosened, and leaves fastened together with a pin, held admissible, their condition being a matter going to their weight and credibility with the jury.

Corrigan & Co., Gananoque, have operated on the cash system for eighteen years and would not think of departing from it. They carry general dry goods lines, but no millinery.

Robt. Taylor, Gananoque, does a cash and credit business. He finds the demand among his customers running very decidedly on the better class of goods. Only a small stock of ready-to-wear garments is carried. Fancy goods and notions are located right at the entrance.

It goes without saying that our preparations for the Fall trade were made long ago, made satisfactorily as well as extensively, and therefore made in the best interests both of ourselves and of our customers.

The sample lines of goods for the season referred to are now in the hands of our travellers, and speak for themselves as regards range of variety, quality, style and price.

Owing to enlarged premises and increased staff, our equipment in the matter of shipping facilities leaves nothing to be desired, and this fact places the question of "quick delivery" on a perfectly assured basis.

We beg to emphasize the following lines for the inspection of the trade as exemplifying all the truest essentials of strong "business-bringers" for Fall:

Staples, Domestic and Foreign
Household Linens at old prices.

Dress Goods, all staple lines at former prices.

Complete range of Silks,
Velvets and Velveteens.

We would also direct attention to our full showing of Muslins and Wash Goods for present trade requirements.

Laces, Embroideries, Smallwares,
Hosiery, Gloves, Underwear,
Fancy Woollens.

How to Produce It

Brief Talks Given Monthly
By T. Johnson Stewart

"Some fellers can't tell a truth with a straight face any more than an advertiser can always sell below cost." —Rusty Mike's Diary

Blessed art thou, Rusty Mike! Once more you have provided the text for our advertising talk. You may be the rustiest-looking proposition on the Pacific slope; but your quaint philosophy is always pleasing and sometimes profound. Keep on living and ousting Solomon from the hearts of the populace as king of the proverb business. And if I may not attend your marriage, may I be permitted—in the fulness of time—to write your epitaph. Both are sorrowful jobs for men who have peered into human nature, as we have done; but I never go back on a pal. Let's dismiss 'em and all other phases of life which our all-important subject—Advertising—does not embrace. But when we ponder o'er our subject for a moment we discover that there is nothing which we can dismiss. History is the fulfilment of advertising, and without advertising there would be no history at all. Nor will there ever be. Joseph was the first genius to jump into the business. So shrewdly did he advertise his own excessive goodness that, even while quite young, his father presented him with a "claw-hammer coat of many colors." Thereafter, Joseph strutted about in the sun like a peacock and bossed the old man's business. But the other boys didn't like the eccentricities of this genius one bit. They objected to the inception of the feudal system. Jacob backed up Joseph, and they decided to sell the autocrat of young Israel. They sold him for three dollars and a quarter, but that young man was the essence of history. He couldn't be hushed up. And he wasn't three weeks in the land of the Pharaohs until he was major domo of a government official's household. Good fortune seems to have befuddled this daring dreamer. He tells the story himself as picturesquely as Ananias could have done. The governor's wife, so Joseph said, made goo-goo eyes at him and the Egyptian betrayed his approval of the young Jew's revelation by clapping him in the calaboost—that's the Hewbrew word for Sing-Sing. Joseph had advertised the situation very injudiciously. He should have asked the lady to meet him in the summer house in the S.E. corner of the garden at the rise of the waning moon. There was no necessity for his highly improbable yarn until he was perfectly certain of the lady's good intentions. Joseph profited by his mistake. He caused a rumor to be circulated that he was pretty near the whole push as far as mind-reading and dream-interpreting were concerned. He worded his advertisement in this case with consummate art. The rumor of Joseph's remarkable ability finally reached the ear of Pharaoh as verified truth. And the most benevolent of all barbaric kings called Joseph before him and related two night-mares he had had. Joseph sized up the situation. He quizzed Pharaoh. And he interpreted the king's dreams just the way the king wanted them interpreted. Consequently, Joseph was raised to the peerage and made governor of all Egypt. I'm going to dismiss Joseph, although I'd like to dwell on his characteristics as an advertising man. I never did accept the theory of his goodness. The over-lord of Egypt might have taken a few weeks' vacation for the purpose of running up into Judea to see his father and explain a few things to the founder of Israel. He didn't do that. And even his remarkable advertising ability cannot save him from the condemnation of this court.

Let us return to Rusty Mike's statement. Are you one of the drygoodsmen who sell—not infrequently—below cost? There's a big percentage of retailers doing that very thing in this Canada of ours, according to their own public announcements. Miracles don't happen in business, and, unfortunately, I belong to a considerable class, which one may discover in any community, which does not believe in impossibilities. Already this class is too considerable for you to ignore. And it is expanding. We believe in "Sweet reasonableness" in all things. Fifty per cent. of the merchants in Canada have been selling goods below cost for years. These generous gentlemen are not the sons of bankers. When many of them started business all they possessed was in their wives' names. And they go on selling goods below cost—just to oblige the public and demonstrate the art of living on nothing, minus less than cost. Gentlemen! that game is amusing; but we—the public—have little faith to place in the business rectitude of men who are nearly always selling below cost. Only the ignorant, poorly paid people of a community, the people who have little to spend, attach any significance to that brand of advertising. There are rare occasions when a merchant can advertise goods at less than cost. Shrewd merchants seldom do so and when they do they are quite frank in their reasons for holding such a sale. The only kind of advertising which pays for long is of a common-sense order. Untruthful advertising will not do. Exaggerated statements are worse than printed fables. Because, if the merchant cannot make good his customers grow dissatisfied. Absolute distrust is of slow growth. But false or exaggerated notes about advertising is bound to bring it forth.

We have pleasure in reproducing another of Thomas Symington's ads. because of its "unmatchableness." Of course, we have reduced it somewhat. Mr. Symington is certainly a unique advertiser. I have traveled all over the Empire and the United States, and I can safely affirm "that, as an advertising man, our friend from Sarnia stands in a class by himself." If I didn't know that Mr. Symington was actually doing a good business, in spite of his advertising, I would arrive at the conclusion that he was desperately afraid of competition. There really is no "scramble among the drygoodsmen of Sarnia for 'some' position in the trade," although one might infer as much from Mr. Symington's ad. It must be trying for an honest merchant, like our friend, to live right in the centre of so much "rotten commercial putrefaction," and the people of Sarnia undoubtedly appreciate Mr. Symington's stern and prolonged fight for upright business methods. Of course, any retailer on earth can advertise as he pleases. There is no reason—no compelling reason why he should accept our advertising philosophy, and, after all, his methods may be really more effective than we deem. So may it be with Mr. Symington. His advertising may pay, and as that is the only excuse for advertising, our arguments are null and void. World wonders should be preserved. That's our only excuse for reprinting this ad. In all friendliness and good faith, I believe that kind of advertising is destructive. Should Mr. S. care to call the next time he is in Toronto, I will try to place before him solid reasons for my belief Moreover, although I cannot conceive of such a state of affairs, there may be good and sufficient reasons for Mr. Symington's queer brand of advertising, to call it by no other name.

"NOT ONE FALSE NOTE NOT ONE."

Sarnia, April 15th, 1907.

Case of 12½c. Dress Ginghams for 7c. Come.

There isn't a false note in the whole aggregation. The splendid "chorus," "charm," "style," "beauty" and "exclusiveness" which "characterizes," "encompasses" and "controls" our "silk and dress department" is a revelation to "dress goods" buyers of every circumstance. You've never once been disappointed here, never will be. The panorama is ever changing. You can't come "once" or "twice" and see all that's to be seen—daily visits are imperative. If you're to intelligently understand and appreciate all that this store is to you, visit our dress department, visit every department.

Whoever you are or wherever you go, the precise "carpet" you "admire" is here, from the "ordinary" to the most "luxurious" "mats," "rugs," "linoleums," "oilcloths" in "endless variety." Hundreds of pairs of different styles of "curtains" are here, and have that distinctive individuality about them that cannot be mistaken, and that are only obtainable in our carpet department. "It's yours to investigate," to participate."

Everyone looking our way. A tremendous scramble among anxious imitators for "some" position in the trade, and what can't be said verbally in "truth," is printed in——. It's unnecessary to remark the fact, you're all on to it. You know, everyone knows that only a store occupying a position financially and commercially can hope to live or compete with this store's —unmatchableness."

If you dote on "fakes," "coupons," "premiums," "side shows" and other "rotten commercial putrefactions" don't come here. You'll have no difficulty in being accommodated elsewhere. On the other hand, if, after intelligent comparison you find you can match our money's here for the asking. "We mean it." How do you like the suggestion? Come in the forenoons.

Moore & McLeod's ad. is a winner all the way. The main difference between this ad. and ordinary advertising lies in its attractiveness. The ladies of Charlottetown will be unlike the ladies of any other place if they didn't notice this ad. just as soon as they turn over the pages of the Guardian. As a rule newspaper advertising is far from being as attractive as it might be. It is improving in this respect; but it is still much inferior in rivetting the attention of the reader when compared with the publicity pages of our best magazines.

Moore & McLeod believe firmly in introducing eye-catching ads. We have been watching their advertising for some time, and it is only fair to state that we are not producing the most attractive ad. we've seen over their name, because the one we use suits our purpose and space much better. The writer of that ad. did not consider it necessary to use any general introduction. He has a good "waist" story to tell and he proceeds to tell it very effectively. There are some descriptive items throughout the ad. which are worth considering. The price is displayed just enough to be pleasing. Some ad. men display price too much, i.e., they use too big figures. There is never any necessity for that. Price should be always plainly and uniformly displayed, but never too large. There is just a symptom of exaggeration in that wall paper item; but it is really so slight as to be scarcely noticeable. Altogether Moore & McLeod deserve credit for their brand of advertising, and undoubtedly they are getting it in a material way. The world's most successful merchants endorse that kind of publicity—because it pays and pays well.

"The Home Economist" is the name of a house organ of considerable merit "published now and then in the interest of better business and closer acquaintance. Subscription price—your attention. Payable by reading fifteen minutes. Single current copies for the asking." This, in many ways, unique little organ, is published by W. W. Mann & Co., Stittsville, Ont. My opinion of house organs is based entirely on conditions. As a general rule they represent so much wasted money, sometimes, like a few political organs we could mention, they have no fixed principles, and, on rare occasions, their existence is warranted by actual cash returns. "The Home Economist" strikes me as the production of a man who knows his business. It is more than a house organ, and in that fact lies its pulling powers. The organ contains items of local interest and some pretty good selected matter. "The Home Economist" does not look like a house organ. It is better arranged than some weeklies I've seen, while the advertising matter is surprisingly good. "The Economist" is worth the price.

Mr. Meredith! Your three ads. have been received and to say that they are better than most forwarded to this office for criticism is to say little. The arrangement calls for special notice. It is about perfect. Come again with bigger samples of your stuff and we'll tell you more about your advertising ability.

There are a number of ads. still lying on my desk which should be criticized, but space forbids and the editor is inflexible. However, we'll get even with him next issue, even if we have to monopolize ten pages of the special. Send along your ads. and trust in Providence. I'll attend to 'em.

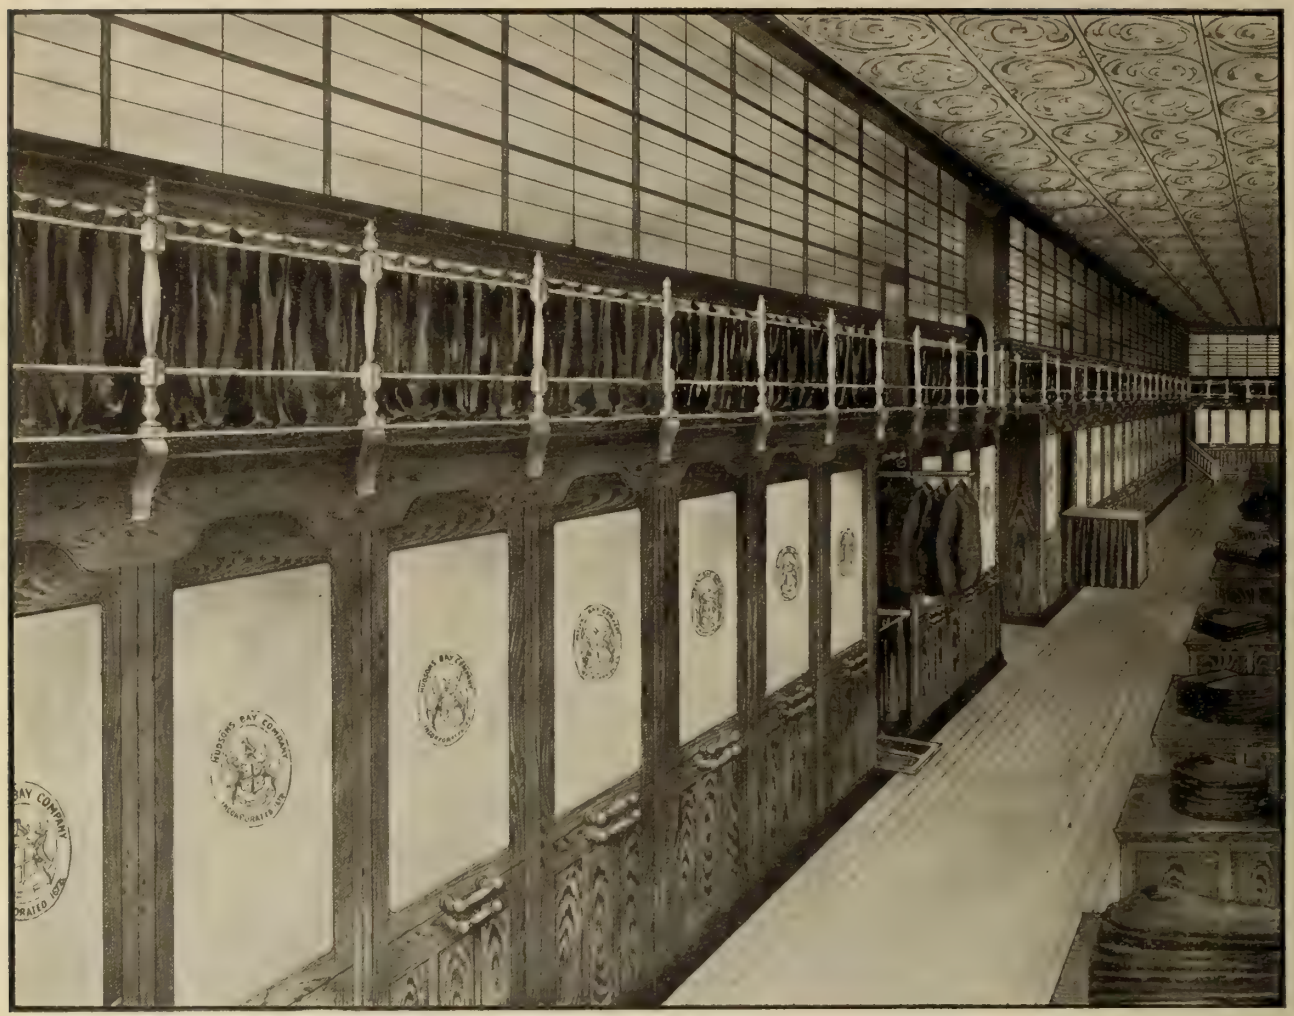
WINDOW DRESSING

THE ART OF DISPLAY

INTERIOR DECORATION

Summer Trims

Sales Windows and Displays of Seasonable Lines — Mark Various Events by Special Trims.



With June, again comes round the season of sales, and though it brings plenty of work for the window trimmer, on the whole that work is of an easier nature than when the season is at its height. Sales windows do not require handsome and elaborate backgrounds that call for so much planning, and for so much skill and care in execution. Nor are original drapes, and the careful arranging of beautiful new goods necessary. Though of course goods must be shown attractively, it is easily made, quickly arranged, stocky trims that are now wanted. Much of this work can be done by the trimmer's assistants, with a little help and supervision from the head trimmer himself, and he can get a little of that welcome and necessary relaxation that every man must have once in a while if he is to do his best work.

Quick work is desired now, when every buyer is either trying to reduce stock or has gotten hold of some attractively-priced snap that he wants to feature. Therefore easily arranged and familiar drapes should be used, as window space is much too valuable to be left dark for one instant longer than is absolutely necessary to change trims.

There are, however, certain lines of legitimate Summer goods that are not included in the sales category. These are outing goods, etc., goods that appeal to the tourist trade, and certain high novelties, that are too eagerly sought for to require to be sold at bargain prices. These must have a representation in the windows, and the fact that they are not included in the sales lines should be emphasized by the way they are placed upon display. Backgrounds should be used, and the windows should be carefully trimmed, and up to the beginning-of-the-season style in every respect. This will not only attract extra attention to the goods you are showing, but, also, from contrast, to your sales windows. It will form a relief, as it were, to the monotony of these displays. Special events, that can be turned to advertising use, by calling out special decorative displays, serve the same purpose ; for a window, occasionally, that is out of the ordinary, particularly if it refers pointedly to some event that is an absorbing topic in your town, is always a drawing card.

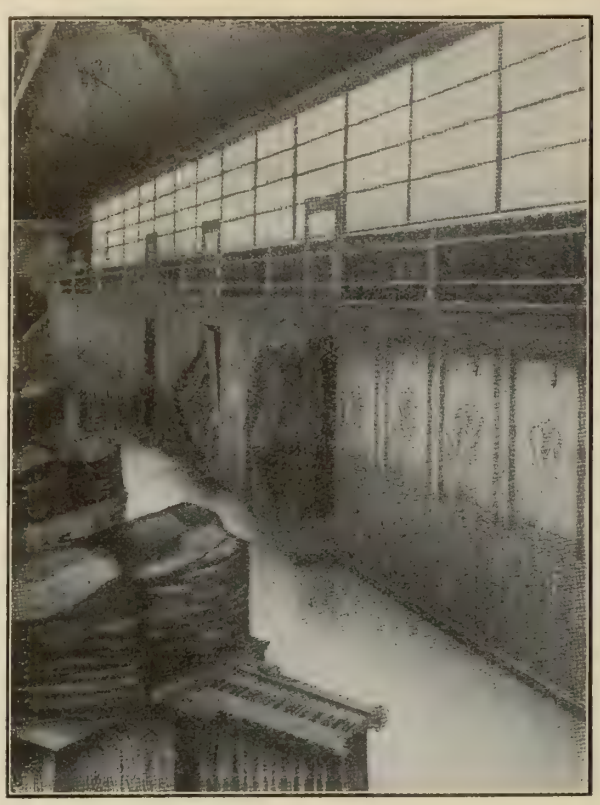
This is just how the Horse Show came in in Toronto the beginning of last month. The cold weather had had a decidedly chilling influence on trade, and special sales were being resorted to to liven matters up, and the windows were largely of the sale type during the latter part of April. Coming after windows of this class, those dressed for the Horse Show were particularly attractive. Following their usual custom, W. A. Murray & Co. and the Robert Simpson Co. did not put in specially designed Horse Show windows, but contented themselves with carefully dressed displays showing high class merchandise. Wisely, the T. Eaton Co. took the opening given, and their decorator put in a really splendid window, save for one by no means unimportant item. This window was a great attraction and the sidwalk before it was crowded for all the four days of the show. The dark panelled oak background was enlivened with trophies of whips, etc., and large yellow asters, tied with bows and streamers of blue and yellow ribbon. Other trophies of whips, spurs, bits, bridles, etc., dotted the floor of the window, which was covered with a moss-green carpet. The central feature was a closed carriage and pair of horses. The carriage door was open, and a lady wearing a handsome lace robe and Paris hat was just preparing to alight. Wax figures wearing evening coats and handsome suits were grouped around. Two very effective and out-of-the-ordinary show cards were used. These were of large size, say 10x16 in., and were done in water colors. One showed a group of ladies and announced that only a small portion of the store's exclusive stock was shown in the window. An invitation to make a further inspection was given. The second showed a group of men, and called attention to the harness department.



This window, save for one feature, reached a high plane of excellence, and that one feature was important. A display of this kind should be a fashion authority, but how could it be so regarded when the mounted figure wore a side-pleated walking skirt. Surely it was possible to obtain a yard or two of black cloth to drape in the form of a habit skirt. To say that this one slip weakened the display, and lowered its tone greatly, is putting it very mildly.

THE LAW SAYS YOU MUST

Do you know that a man is obliged by law to keep a proper set of books?

The law says:

"Any man who fails and has not for five years before his failure kept proper books shall be liable to a fine of $800.00 and one year's imprisonment."

Since you must keep books of some sort, and as the law insists that you keep proper books, why not keep them properly?

It is just as easy to do a thing right as it is to do it wrong.

MONTREAL HORSE SHOW WINDOW.

Montreal's thirteenth annual horse show was held at the Arena from May 9th to 12th. A good deal of its success was due to the co-operation of leading Montreal retailers in the way of appropriate window displays.

As usual, prizes were donated for the most attractively dressed windows by the management of the horse show. As a consequence, keen competition was aroused among the various trimmers. The W. H. Scroggie Co. had the first prize window. It was trimmed by J. P. Doyon. Other prize-winning displays appeared in the stores of James A. Ogilvy & Sons, The Wright Floral Co., Henry Morgan & Co., Martel Stewart, H. Lamontague & Co., and G. A. Holland & Sons.

Business Management

By HOWARD R. WELLINGTON.

The Management of a Retail Store.

In introducing a subject of this nature a few general remarks might not be out of place as to the recognized value ol method and system in every business, not only as to the recording of transactions from a bookkeeper's point of view, but in every department of the business. The young man who lacks "order" will, nineteen times out of twenty, fail to succeed. The merchant should cultivate systematic habits in his own work. If it is known among his clerks and employes that the same hour each morning will find him in his store or office, this very fact will infuse punctuality throughout the house. The work should be systematically distributed among the clerks and each article of goods should have its special place, convenient of access and ready to handle. The clerks should be so thoroughly familiar with their stock that all reasonable questions can be answered promptly.

Buying.

The old maxim "Goods well bought are half sold" is truer to-day than ever before. Nearly every mercantile failure finds about half the stock so old and shopworn and dusty and dead as to be almost unsalable, even under the hammer. An elaborate system of stock records may be installed from which the merchant may know at any period just what stock he carries of each line of goods, but as a usual thing neither merchant nor clerk, especially in a small store where all the work is done by two or three, has time to post up the sales of goods. A practicable method would be to have an indexed book arranged alphabetically, in which might be entered the goods required from time to time to assort the stock depleted by sales. These goods may then be ordered by mail each week or through traveling salesmen, if they call regularly.

Of course in a large store it is advisable to keep a complete record of all goods bought and sold, also prices, both cost and selling, and this may be done by means of stock cards arranged alphabetically and ruled in some convenient way, such as the following :

VELVET — (BLACK SILK)

Date.	From Whom Purchased or Total Sales.	Bought.	Sold.	Balance.	Cost.	Selling.	Profit.
Mar. 25	J. S. & Co.	10 yds.	.....	.....	$1.00	$1.50	50
" 28	Sales	.....	5	5	.....	.....	.....

This card would be filed alphabetically, the purchases posted up from the purchase invoices and the sales from the sales files for the day, week or month, whichever is thought advisable.

The Character of Your Business.

Strive to maintain, as far as possible, a reputation for sterling values and moderate prices. The customer, who leaves your store feeling that he has secured an article which is good value, is the best asset a merchant has in building up a business. Nothing will create a better impression on the mind of a customer than attractive display of the stock, keeping to the front such articles as are likely to attract trade ; remanants and "dead stock" instead of being put out of reach on the top shelf are carefully sorted, specially marked down, and so displayed and advertised as to be easily worked off. Always bear in mind that "the first loss is the smallest loss" on goods which have been carried in stock too long.

The Location of Your Business.

In the retail trade the location is a very important matter. Trade centres around centres. People do not like to go out of their way to buy things. An inferior or small store in a good location is preferable in every case to a fine large store poorly located. Jut a little around the corner is not as good as on the corner. Two or three steps up is not as good as on a level with the sidewalk. A rent of $400 on the main street may appear high as compared with $40 a month three or four doors from the main street, but the rent is only ten times as great and there may be twenty-five shoppers on the main street for every one who passes up a side street. A Boston dealer made money enough in a little three-angled room scarcely big enough for three customers at once, but located on a famous corner, to build one of the largest and finest business blocks for which the city is noted.

Selling.

Endeavor to impress upon your salespeople the absolute necessity of cultivating a memory for faces and names. A customer who is addressed by name feels a certain personal interest in the store where purchases are made, and it goes a long way toward making a sale. It is not the quantity, but the quality of speech, which tells. The successful salesman knows how to talk, what to talk about, and, more especially, when to stop talking. To say the right thing at the right time is not nearly so difficult as to say nothing at the right time. The seller should only talk enough to keep the buyer talking. The faculty of holding trade, or of selling repeatedly to the same people, is the highest attribute in the qualifications of a successful salesman.

Understand thoroughly what you are trying to sell. Know your goods, believe in yourself, and you are sure to inspire confidence in the buyer. There is an old maxim :

"When you buy, keep one eye on the goods, the other on the seller ; when you sell, keep both eyes on the buyer."

WE would like to show you the new Fur Samples, and let you make your selections from amongst the myriads of styles we manufacture right in our own factory.

When we say "manufacture" we mean it! We do not buy the furs ready dressed and dyed and make them up at an enormous expense, which the retailer must help to pay—if we did, we'd have nothing unusual to talk about. We buy the skins in the raw—dress them and dye them ourselves, and then make them up in our own workrooms—every process being carried on under the one roof.

PAQUET FURS

Remember, this is the largest Fur Factory in Canada, and one of the largest in the world. We employ only the most up-to-date processes of dyeing and every one of our vast army of workers is an expert in his line.

This is because Fur has been to their fathers and grandfathers what it is to them—a life study.

It stands to reason that, with all our advantages, we should be able to turn out the very best Furs on the Canadian market, doesn't it? And that we do is testified to by thousands of satisfied Fur Men from Halifax to Vancouver. These men know that it pays to handle "Furs that Stay Sold." They know that when they sell Paquet Furs they can turn over the proceeds immediately. No dissatisfied customers—no "come-backs"—no disappointments—simply solid satisfaction, increasing sales and handsome profits.

If you're not now on our visiting list, drop us a line and you'll be on immediately.

THE CANADIAN FUR TRADE

SEASON 1907-0 8

Travelers Have Had Good Trips All Through the Country—The Price Situation — Care of Furs During Summer.

At the present time many travelers are straggling back from every section of Canada, while others are still on the road. So far, they state that orders have been fully up to the mark, and in numbers of cases even better than was anticipated. Except where old connections have held for years, trade in the Maritime Provinces has not been as good as last year. Ontario and Quebec have been much better, although, throughout these two provinces there seems to be a good deal of doubt as to what are going to be the proper styles in ladies' garments for next season. For many years past merchants, in most cases, have used fur garments. Now the tendency points more towards fur-lined goods. Owing to these present conditions it is extremely difficult for manufacturers to estimate correctly the requirements of the trade.

Prices show no indication of getting away from the present level. If anything, the more active demand, as at this busy manufacturing season, gives the holders of raw material good ground for higher prices. One of the features of the fur market is the extreme top-notch price to which the good old-fashioned muskrat has been driven. Firms who have been quoting this fur at low prices stand a good chance of losing money before the season is over. All fur lines, without exception, remain firm in price. The advance, on most lines, as compared with figures ruling a year ago, average from ten to twenty-five per cent.

Many houses, in anticipation of a brisk demand in early Fall, are making up a fair quantity of furs to keep factories busy during the Summer months. This will aid materially in keeping supplies up to the mark.

Demand, so far, has run strongly on all staple lines. Ladies' fur-lined garments have been the leading feature of this season's bookings in the better grades. Some particularly nice novelties in long muskrat jackets have also sold exceedingly well.

Men's fur coats have been active, especially in the cheaper grades. Wombat and Wallaby have done well with one house and other houses report good sales for the cheaper Bulgarian lamb coats. Profits on this last-mentioned article are just as good as on other lines, and less care is needed in their manufacture. Coon coats are also to the fore. Another tendency in the fur trade is the sale of both Moscow and Prussian lamb coats. These coats are procurable at prices ranging from $22.50 to $35.

Fur neckwear runs along staple lines. Stoles, ruffs and scarfs of mink and sable continue to be popular. Caperines, in the cheaper grades, are also prominent.

The book muff is good, and another style, the Columbine, is doing better than usual.

Jobbers state there is a satisfactory business in imported furs.

Alaska sable has been selling, but, so far, has had no great demand. This fur has sold much better than in previous years. As it is rated as one of the best and most durable of its class in Canada, and also owing to the present high level of the fur market, it should continue to do so for some time to come. The heavy decline in the price of Alaska sable has not seriously affected the demand.

CARE OF FURS DURING SUMMER MONTHS.

The care of furs during the Summer months is a very perplexing problem with progressive retailers. Manufacturers from time to time have the same conditions to face. Therefore, we have secured some of the methods employed by a large wholesale fur house. These ought to be used to advantage by Review readers.

In this matter precautionary methods should be the aim of retailers if they intend to keep their furs in good condition. If given proper attention, the time expended should not be considered wasted as it prevents untold damage by moths. Some lines do not need as much attention as other grades. In electric seal and Persian lamb skins the dye is so strong that moths cannot do any damage. It is a very rare case, indeed, where a moth is to be found in either of the two above-mentioned furs.

A. J. Alexander, in discussing the care of furs during the Summer months with a Review representative, stated that the main point was to leave them free from all encumbrances, and let the articles hang naturally. Where it is possible, dark and dry rooms are preferable during the sultry weather. If the room should happen to be damp and warm, everything is liable to go wrong, as moths are sure to thrive in such an atmosphere. Another method employed by Mr. Alexander is to have his stock rooms well sprinkled with mothelene. Under all the racks containing furs of every description he has applied a coating of these crystals. For muffs and small pieces he has had special racks built and mothelene is well sprinkled on the top of these fixtures. Owing to these conditions the atmosphere of the room is so permeated with the odor that moths absolutely cannot live. In Mr. Alexander's opinion, any merchant who can afford the space to do this would find it to his advantage to give the method a fair trial.

It might here be stated also that mothelene can be supplied by nearly every wholesaler in Canada. Some houses have even gone so far as to make offers to merchants to store their furs free of charge during the Summer months.

Another method employed by a Montreal wholesaler is a mixture of cayenne pepper, moth balls and camphor. If well applied to an article or garment no trouble should be experienced.

The jurors at the Fashion Exhibition, just held in Vienna, have awarded the gold medal to "The New Album of Modes," published. The editor of this journal is Miss Meehan, who was formerly a contributor to The Review.

Manufacture of Cloth from Paper

Several months ago their appeared in a German newspaper a brief description of the appearance of garments for men and women the principal constituent of which was paper. In regard to this, the following report has been written by U. S. Consul Hurst, of Plauen, who has also furnished samples of the paper textiles :

"To the ingenuity of a well known Saxon inventor and manufacturer, Herr Emil Claviez, is due the production of a paper yarn, termed 'Xylolin,' that has been successfully used in a wide range of textile fabrics. The utilization of paper wood fiber in this new and practical way and the extreme cheapness of the new material compared with other yarns now in use is really a remarkable achievement. It should be said that this is not a haphazard discovery, but rather the logical result of years of painstaking study and experimentation. After the final development of the theory at first in mind into tangible material for all manner of uses in textile industries, the paper thread and yarn, loose or tightly spun, of all thicknesses, have since been woven into almost every conceivable fabric and tested and re-tested, until the invention has become an important commercial success. The paper yarn has extraordinary wearing properties, and as the full scope of its usefulness has probably not been determined, it will, in all likelihood, lend itself to other purposes yet to be discovered.

Methods of Manufacture.

"It should be understood that xyolin is wood fiber spun into a paper thread or yarn, and may be woven into any desired fabric. Although of the same material as paper, xyolin is not used in sheets and has nothing whatever of the nature of papier-mache or any substance such as may be molded or cut in blocks. It is primarily a thread or yarn and is employed exclusively in weaving. The looms used in the manufacture of most textiles do not have to be especially constructed for this substance, although they may have to be slightly adapted for its readier manipulation. A carpet loom of almost any kind can employ this new yarn. A loom that is used for weaving linen or cotton fabrics of fine or loose mesh can readily take the finer kinds of the paper thread. The thread is not brittle, it does not have a hard surface, and it neither shrinks nor stretches to any appreciable extent. Having certain resilient qualities, it cannot be readily crushed or dented like paper, and on it moisture has practically no effect. It is a serviceable substitute for cotton, jute, linen, and even silk. When bleached, the yarn or thread is of a snowy whiteness, and at a first glance cannot be distinguished from cotton. It can be woven to appear as homespun linen. It combines the good qualities of cotton and linen at one-third of the price of cotton and one-tenth of the price of linen.

More Readily Dyed Than Cotton or Linen.

"Being paper, it can be more readily dyed in delicate shades, far outmatching the range of colors to which cotton or silks are susceptible and vastly more than those of linens. The process of dyeing the thread or yarn is patented, and appears to be of such perfection that no colors, from the daintiest nuances to the richest hues, are affected by strong light. If it should be the wish of a manufacturer to combine the paper thread or yarn with other materials to gain the cheapness of the new substance, it can be readily done. It can be run in greater or less quantity as may be desired. Ninety-five per cent. of the material used in the thread is cellulose, such as is used for newspapers, and five per cent. cotton, but, of course, subjected to entirely novel treatment before spinning. The crude materials in this proportion are consequently very cheap compared to other vegetable fibers used in weaving, and this alone will make its place in the textile market permanent. Already factories are busily at work in England and Bohemia, as well as in Saxony, turning out the paper thread and yarn, which is bought by textile manufacturers for use in their mills. It is the business of the inventor to supply the spun paper and not, with the one exception of floor coverings, to make up the multituhe of articles which can be woven from xyolin.

Rugs and Carpets.

"Among the various fabrics in which the greatest amount of work has thus far been accomplished is the making of rugs and carpets, and at the factories of the inventor paper floor coverings are woven in great quantities, and are already being exported to the United States and elsewhere with marked success. Here the yarn of heavier quality, woven into beautiful designs, is found to possess advantages over certain classes of floor coverings. They can be turned out in any thicknesses as rugs, mats, or carpets. They are elastic to tread, do not retain dust readily, and are easily cleaned by beating or washed without fear of injury. Unpalatable to moths, they are not eaten by these insects. The paper floor coverings naturally do not possess the properties of rich Persian carpets, but are adapted to uses to which oriental rugs can be ill put. Although they can be made in pile, they are at present manufactured chiefly after the manner of an ingrain carpet, but finely wrought, artistic patterns. They are clean and fresh, and particularly suited to Summer homes and verandah use.

"Another great field for the paper yarn is the manufacture of bagging, being a practieal substitute for the more expensive jute. It has been found best, however, in making sacks to mix one thread of jute with two of paper. The combination secures the advantages of jute gunny cloth and the lightness and cheapness of wood paper. Closer woven, equally strong, and at one-half of the cost, it can replace with advantage the jute sacking now in general use. Inasmuch as the production of jute is localized and the demand for it steadily increasing, xyolin used in place of jute for sacks will make those who have hitherto used jute sacking in large quantities more or less independent of the jute market, with the high prices now prevailing. Sacking made of the combination of xylolin and jute seems to be a cleaner and a neater fabric and not as heavy. The output of this combination paper sacking is already of great proportions, and it is estimated that in the near future the new sacking will be a formidable rival of the jute now in use the world over.

"The spun paper fiber has been woven into outing hats for men and women. Canvas shoes and slippers have been made of it at nominal cost. Some idea of its adaptability for towels may be gathered from the fact that last year alone 7,000,000 pieces were made and sold, and it is likely that not one purchaser in a hundred but thought he was buying linen towelling at bargain prices. These are wholesaled at about 24 cents a dozen, medium size. It should not be thought that the new fiber is put upon the market as a crafty imitation, but makers of many sorts of textiles have found it so serviceable that they use it for mixing with other thread and yarn or weave it alone.

"Wonderfully successful have been the essays in making wall hangings and furniture coverings. When used for mural decoration, the material may be either nailed or applied with paste, and the delicate coloring that the paper fiber takes renders the effect of the tapestries singularly effective. For upholstering veranda furniture the material has an unusual advantage beyond its merits of decoration because it is not subject to injury by light or dampness or even by rain.

Adapted to Wearing Apparel.

"For certain grades of wearing apparel the new paper fiber has in itself an important sphere. The readiness with which yarn can be made up into cloth of any design or shade makes its use in this regard easy and successful. One peculiar feature when the paper thread is used in garments for clothing of medium thickness is the resultant warmth. It possesses the advantage of lightness in comparison with an equal bulk of linen or even cotton. The cost of the material for a full three-piece suit of clothes of average weight is not over $1. In lighter weights it is particularly adapted to outing costumes. It can be made to look like a good grade of ducking and is an excellent material for wear in the tropics. For workmen's jackets and blouses and overalls it can be made up in brawn and blue at half the cost of the material usually employed. There have been articles in the market made of tough, narrow strips of paper sewed together, making vests and light jackets to be worn under clothing, retaining the warmth of the body, but allowing little or no ventilation. This has nothing in common with xylolin. The new paper fiber, however, being woven, possesses sufficient porosity to make a hygienic garment. It seems well suited for underwear. In consideration of the fact that loosely woven underclothing is replacing to a certain extent the heavier flannels of an older generation, the paper fiber has been found to be very serviceable, combining warmth and lightness, and is fine enough to be worn by the youngest children.

"Although there seems to be no limit to the uses to which the paper yarn can be put, fashion will have to take up the new material before it can be worn as gentlemen's and ladies' clothing. While possessing most of the good qualities of fashionable stuffs, it may lack in finish and style the appearance of finer grades of woolen goods; but it really makes little difference whether the paper-woven garment becomes the vogue or not, as its many admirable qualities, coupled with excessive cheapness, are bound to make it an article of practical and far-reaching beneficence.

"The process of preparing the new thread and yarn is a secret one and is patented in all civilized countries. It is of interest to note that the inventor intends starting mills in the United States, where the necessary raw material is abundant and of fine quality.

"A full line of samples of the paper textiles referred to, as far as made at the inventor's mills, has been forwarded by me to the Bureau of Manufactures for the inspection of American manufacturers and others interested."

NEW STONE IS INVENTED.

"As soft as silk, as white as milk," and it does not burn. It is made of milk, and it is a new stone—milk stone. A considerable industry is being built up in the manufacture of galalith, or milk stone, which is cheaper than celluloid and is non-inflammable.

The raw material is skimmed milk from the large co-operative dairies. To this in large tanks is added rennet, coagulating the casein, which is pressed, dried, and powdered, and freed from its cheesy odor by repeated washings and finally is hardened by a chemical. The product is more brilliant, more solid, and a trifle heavier than celluloid.

It is as easy to work as wood, and can be made into a great variety of articles, such as combs, hairpins, piano keys, buttons, knife handles, umbrella handles, backs for brushes, paper knives, dominoes, inlaid ornaments for furniture, and almost any object requiring solidty and fine polish. It can be given any color or made to imitate marble, coral, tortoise shell, etc.

NEW COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS' ASSOCIATION.

A new commercial travelers' association, composed of city travelers only, has been formed in Montreal. The association, as it stands at present, comprises travelers for every line of business, and has been formed for mutual protection. It is quite independent of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association. At the inaugural meeting B. Charbonneau was elected president; Alphonse Moisan, first vice-president; H. Pinet, second vice-president; I. Jacob, secretary; Will G. Wise, assistant-secretary, and J. A. Cartier, treasurer. Apart from these gentlemen, the board of directors comprises A. Dessane, H. H. Hardy, J. L. Filteau, Alex. Michaud, Eugene Hamel, Eugene Chevrier, J. A. Dery and J. E. Turtubose. The auditors are E. Falardeau and P. V. Guay. The membership at the beginning of May had reached 250, and at a general meeting held May 14, at 149 Berri St., it was increased to 400, and is growing every day. It was also decided at this meeting to hold a picnic on July 1, at Newport, Vermont.

HORSE SHOW AND RACES

Many Handsome Gowns—The Value of these Events to Merchants, from a Fashion Standpoint.

HORSE SHOW POINTERS

From June, 1906.

The growing favor of black and white is clearly shown. White is worn most, but a decided tendency is manifested toward dark shades.

That broadcloths are held in high favor was one of the points clearly brought out at both the Montreal and Toronto Horse Shows. Dark shades and black were worn in the daytime, while soft silver and dove greys and pastel shades were worn at night. All materials were very light in weight. Chiffons, silk muslins, nets, chiffon voiles, chiffon broadcloths, etc., being much in evidence. White serge was well worn by the younger women and children, and many gowns of white linen, printed net and organdie were seen.

In silks for daytime wear little coat suits of black taffeta, or black and white check silks, were most worn. Lovely gowns in rich lustrous silks in white, pale rose, ceil, helio and maize were a feature of the evening dress parade. The majority of the evening gowns were of soft sheer fabrics.

It is not necessary to enter into The Review's reasons for giving so much space to the fashion side of the big Spring gatherings in Montreal and Toronto the Horse Shows and the races. Horse shows and races all the world over are the big fashion events, and dressmakers, milliners and others connected with the trade look to them for ideas sartorial, and also as places for the launching of new fashions. We do not mean to say that the Canadian events have the authority of those held in the old world centres, or in New York and Newport, but merely that they bring together a big crowd of handsomely dressed women from all parts of the Dominion. As every merchant knows, the Canadian woman has decided tastes of her own and oftentimes she turns down styles that have made good over the line. This tendency towards individuality is increasing and is becoming more of a factor each year. At Montreal and Toronto the merchants of the Dominion are afforded an opportunity to see personally which of the new styles appeal most strongly to the women of his own country—the women who shop in his stores.

Many of our merchants, as opportunity presents, make a journey to New York in search of fashion pointers as guides to future buying. There are many others who, though recognizing the great value of such a trip, are kept from taking it by the big expenditure of time and money required. To these merchants The Review says, take advantage of the events above-mentioned, to which cheap railway rates are offered.

There seems to be more of a tendency to draw a marked line between the walking suit and the dressy gown. The fact that the new walking suits are in such plain and severely-tailored styles may account for this. Fancy check and striped suitings, worsteds and tweeds, serges, particularly navy blue, velvets and broadcloths are universally used for these suits. The fancy cloths and serges are made with pleated skirts and semi-fitting hip-length coats in pony and poniato styles. Some few velvets and broadcloths are made in this style, but in gorwns of these fabrics the short bolero coat and also long coats are seen. Jumper and bretelle suits, with wide Japanese sleeves, are also a new touch.

Silk gowns, and dressy gowns developed in voiles and the many veilings so much in vogue, show the remakable hold the Japanese styles have obtained in a very short time. One reason for this is that they accord so closely with gowns of Empire and semi-Empire type. Very many of the handsomest gowns, both at the Horse Shows and at the races were made Empire fashion.

Evening coats and handsome wraps have already gone a step ahead and either the loose, shapeless mandarin coat, or a coat that while loose defines the outline of the figure is worn. The kimona or wing sleeve is used for both types of cloak. Though the white cloak, or to be more accurate, some shade bordering on white, is well worn. More colored cloaks are seen. Very many light yellowish tans are in evidence, and not a few blues, pinks, mauves and deeper colors are used. At the Toronto Horse Show a much admired coat was in a dull blue soft finished cloth. The back, front and sleeves were fulled into a square yoke made of bands of Japanese embroidery in many shades of blue on a gold ground. There was no collar, the neck being left square. Another coat noted was of rich oyster white brocade with large bunches of bright-hued flowers scattered over its lustrous ground. It was partly fitting in the style of a Louis XIII. coat and was profusely trimmed with deep yellowish lace. Many coats were lace-trimmed and had lace sleeves. A remarkable fact for which The Review was not prepared was the many velvet or velveteen gowns worn. In the afternoon many velveteen tailor-mades were worn—brown, green, blue and bordeaux being the colors chosen in about the order named. Several evening cloaks were of velvet, notably a very handsome one worn over a fawn gown in grey. Several handsome black velvet gowns were worn, and at the Toronto Horse Show one of the most admired gowns was a beautiful Empire of peacock chiffon velvet, and at the races several gowns of this shade were seen, made in Empire or semi-Empire or princesse style.

Taking it all together, the strongest fashion development at these functions was the number of gowns worn in the various shades of brown and fawn. Brown can hardly be said to be a coming color in smart circles—it has arrived. This should point to a great sale for this shade in the coming Fall. Blue certainly rivalled brown for first place, tailor-mades of navy and lighter shades of blue being very much worn. Quite a number of our fashionables chose royal blue for the races, and with this color black hats were in evidence. Ciel blue, baby blue and many odd shades of this color were worn. Green, both in dark and in very pale shades, was in evidence. Wine and rose shades were well worn, while the number of women who chose mauve shows that this color is still in good standing with the better dressed classes. A new note was the many corn colored and yellow dresses worn. In silks tailored and jumper suits of white Rajah silk were much seen. Jumper suits of plain taffeta in black and colors, and also of satin-finished silks in black and navy with white spots, and in white with black spots. White ground silks with stripes and checks of black were much in evidence. The idea that the elbow sleeve and the long glove is doomed in the Fall received little support. The elbow sleeve was universally worn, and The Review representative saw no long sleeves either, that is, among the smartly gowned women, save on decidedly tailored suits.

In the millinery field the crop of mushrooms was a large one, decidedly too large for this shape to be much of a factor next Fall. The newest shapes seen are very large and loaded with plumes. The helmet or bell-shape is another late style, and there is a flat shape with the front brim rolled off the face that promises to have some vogue in the future. Many flower-laden hats and many black hats were worn.

The cold weather brought out many furs, ermine being evidentl the one chosen for wear with dressy gowns. Feather and tulle boas were well worn and all classes of women seem to be wearing some kind of necklet, generally of pearls.

White was very much worn and with the all-white suit, or with the blue, pink or mauve the shoes and stockings were to match.

Lace was universally worn—the lace blouse with the tailored suit, the lace guimpe with the jumper. Other gowns and coats were lace-trimmed. Some handsome Irish lace coats were seen. Many gowns were of chiffon, the new printed chiffons in floral patterns and large spots being much in evidence.

BROCK'S NEW MONTREAL PREMISES.

The W. R. Brock Co., Ltd., Montreal, is removing to premises opposite, in St. Helen street. Alterations are being rapidly pushed and the warehouse, when finished, will be one of the finest in the country. The corner premises have been connected with the quarters, formerly occupied by Brophy-Cains, Limited. The area of the building is 9,800 square feet. It runs east and west, and comprises five storeys and basement. Every modern improvement is being installed. Additional space has been given many of the departments.

The fifth floor will be occupied by the house furnishing and carpet departments. The fourth floor will be given over to men's furnishings. The third floor will accommodate hosiery, smallwares and dress accessories. On the second floor will be found dress goods and ready-to-wear garments. The ground floor will be given over to cottons, prints and linens. The offices are also located on this floor. In the basement will be the reserve section for staples and linoleums.

"Jack Rose handed in his resignation as a bluff to make the firm raise his salary," said the first clerk.

"Did they raise it?" asked the second.

"Yes, but another man is drawing it."

Hosiery

Retail Trade Brisk—Goods Bought for Fall—Prices Still on the Advance—Acute Hosiery Situation.

The present conditions in the hosiery trade at retail are up to expectations. Trade has been brisk throughout April and May, notwithstanding the bad weather.

Among the best sellers at the present time are cashmeres and lisle thread. The latter is expected to sell better when the warm weather sets in.

Retailers are showing large varieties of colorings just at present, with tans and blacks predominating. Enquiry discloses a brisk demand for tans, and this is substantiated by the large stocks of tan shoes displayed and worn.

Lace ankle goods are doing well already, and window displays contain a large quantity of them. In the better class goods, silk embroidered lace ankle effects are favorites, along with the plain embroidered hose.

For the Fall and Winter trade, woolen, worsted and cashmere hose is being stocked largely by the retailers. Lace hosiery in lisle thread, and a few lines of cotton goods, in ankle and all-over lace effects are also bought freely. Colors predominating for Fall are blacks, navies and a few whites. A noticeable feature is the tendency towards colored hosiery to match costumes.

Prices are still on the advance, and most lines, as compared with figures ruling a year ago, average from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. higher at the present time, with an upward tendency. With some of the foreign manufacturers all prices have been withdrawn for Fall. The present conditions with the domestic manufacturers are very acute. They state that wool is still a very scarce article, and that goods are going to be somewhat difficult to procure. They also state that deliveries are likely to be somewhat delayed on this account, with the exception of orders that have already been placed.

A large Montreal hosiery buyer states that cotton hosiery from the Chemnitz markets has had another recent advance of ten per cent. since March quotations. For Spring 1908, the price advance, as compared with figures ruling last August, average twenty-five per cent. He also states that merchants are picking up all the present stock in the wholesale district, largely owing to the incapability of the mills to accept any repeats on orders already placed for Fall. Some of the mills are filled up altogether and will not accept anything in the form of an order unless for very late delivery.

It would be next to impossible to exaggerate the troubles that German manufacturers are having in the production of goods for Fall, owing to the abnormal scarcity of yarns, not to mention their troubles with independent help.

England, Switzerland, and other countries have been drawn upon largely for yarns, and still there is a heavy deficit.

In conversation with The Review, a wholesaler stated that hosiery yarns are almost impossible to obtain from spinners except at top prices, and even then deliveries are not to be depended upon. Both domestic and foreign hosiery, on this account, is scarce.

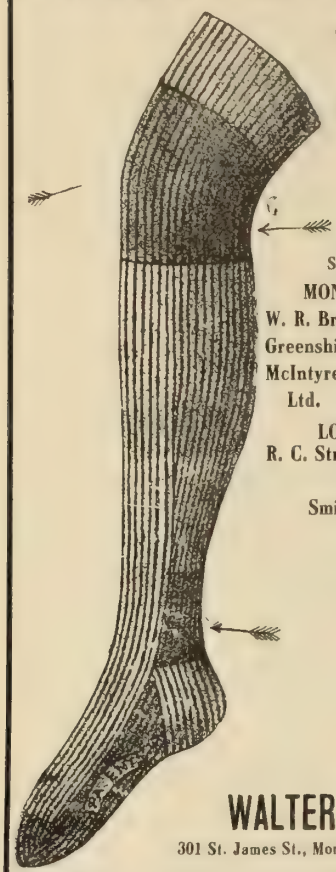
Underwear

Trade at Retail—Fall Orders of Good Volume—The Price Situation.

In retail realms last month, owing to cool weather in all parts of Canada, initial underwear displays, except in medium weights, did not bring the full amount of business expected. Now that the warm weather has set in business has brightened up immensely. Fine Swiss underwear, with fancy yokes, also short and sleeveless underwear, is very much in demand. Lightweight Spring wools are also favorites. Combinations have hardly started at retail, but the expectations are for a very good season. The cheaper lines of domestic manufactured goods are also in demand, and are handled freely by the retailers.

The deliveries of imported goods for Spring are mostly all in stock. Canadian goods are somewhat behind schedule, as the mills cannot get materials to fill orders.

Merchants are exhibiting lines of underwear at the present time from the cheapest grades at 10c. to the better and higher class lines up to $10 per garment.



Fall orders, except in widely scattered districts, are all in, and the volume is by no means discouraging. Jobbers whose practice it is to take stock at the end of May, did everything possible to reduce stock in order to give room to initial Fall deliveries from the mills.

Fleeced lined cotton stuff, and ribbed wool goods, both in white and natural colors, have been bought freely. The demand for pink, blue, tan and various hues of underwear cannot be said to be on the increase.

The price of underwear has advanced, on most lines, as compared with figures ruling a year ago, about 10 per cent. Many manufacturers are filled up for Fall and cannot accept any orders unless for very late deliveries.

Spring lines for 1908 are just beginning to make their appearance. As far as can be learned, values are about on a par with the present season.

Golfers and Sweaters

Advance Orders Good—Strong Values this Year—Prices Remain Firm.

The golfer and sweater season is now under way with the wholesalers. They state that good advance orders are beginning to arrive and that many merchants are asking immediate deliveries. As there are a good many of these lines used for summer and seaside resorts for boating or driving purposes during the hot weather, jobbers are looking forward to a very good season on these goods. They have shown their true position by placing large orders with the mills, with the expectation that a rush for these garments will ensue when the season progresses.

Values are similar to a year ago. This is accounted for by the fact that manufacturers anticipated their wants early and covered themselves accordingly before the general advances took place. On this account, they are in a position to offer just as good values as last year, with very slight difference in price. As usual, the collarless model is featured for early Fall in Canadian, English and German lines. In men's sweaters the monotone idea is a decided favorite, with preference shown for white, closely followed by gray and dark red shades.

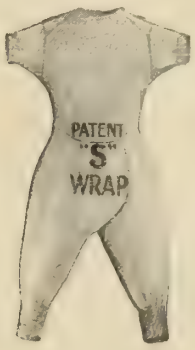
Norfolk jackets continue to be as popular as ever. Fancy stripes have given way to plain grounds in blacks, whites and reds. Jobbers anticipate a large business on these jackets as the season progresses. Prices of both domestic and foreign goods remain very firm.

AUSTRALASIA'S WOOL EXPORTS.

The London Statist gives figures which show that the increase in the exports of wool from Australasia for the nine months ended March 31, 1907 amounted to 215,000 bales. In 1904-5, the banner year, Australasia exported 1,595,652 bales and New Zealand 364,159 bales, making a total of 1,959,811 bales. It is estimated that the exports from Australasia at the end of the current year to June 30 will reach 1,700,000 bales, and as New Zealand has already shipped 366,000 bales, it can be safely reckoned that on June 30 next all records will have been broken and more than 2,000,000 bales will have been exported from Australasia.

Australasia is now pasturing over 20,000,000 less sheep than in 1904, and yet the increased output for the current year will be approximately 250,000 bales. The average shearing, particularly in Australia, is nearly two pounds per head more than fourteen years ago, due to the improved class of sheep.

IN LARGER PREMISES.



John Gordon & Sons, manufacturers' agents, Montreal, have vacated their old premises, 17 and 19 De-Bresolles street. They are now in possession of much larger and commodious warerooms at 316 St. James street. This building was previously occupied by Stevenson, Blackader & Co. It is equipped with every modern convenience to carry on their business. It is 50x100 feet, five storeys and basement. In the basement is to be found the reserve department. The offices will have exclusive use of the ground floor. The first floor will be used for samples of the Standard Shirt Manufacturing Co., the Anchor Knitting Co., and James H. Wylie. The second floor will be given over to Penman's, Limited, sample department. Smallwares and threads, etc., will find permanent quarters in the third floor, and the fourth floor will be used for storage.

Importance of Knowing Selling Points Illustrated — The Man Without Confidence in Himself is not in Demand.

SALESMEN SHOULD KNOW THE POINTS.

A customer has confidence in the salesman who talks confidently, who evidently knows what he is talking about. Let me illustrate the importance of this by relating an incident which came under my observation not long ago in a store which I was conducting. A salesman was having his troubles with what in the clothing business is called a "tough customer"—that is one difficult to please, hard to convince, skeptical, wise in his own conceit, who looked upon the salesman as a glib liar ready to make any statement to sell a suit and who gave that "line of talk" familiar to salesmen about always having his clothes made to measure, etc., while the suit he was wearing was palpably a cheap ready-made. He said: "These hand-me-downs always shrink out of sight" and "They won't keep their shape," and so on, says Clayton A. Turner.

Well, I overheard the salesman say: "That may be true about ordinary makes of clothing, but it is not true of ours; they will not shrink."

"Why won't they shrink?" demanded the man.

"Because they are not simply sponged as a tailor sponges his cloth before cutting, but the cloth is put through improved processes that thoroughly shrink it."

"Oh, that will do to tell," replied the man, skeptically; "but I guess you folks ain't any different from others. Your clothes will shrink just the same as any ready mades."

"But I tell you they are different; they are better," was all the salesman could add; and his customer was edging toward the door with a you-can't-fool-me look in his eye.

Here I saw in a minute that he would be a case of "another good man gone wrong," so to speak, and I quickly stepped up to him and asked him if he had found what he wanted.

"Well, I dunno," he replied. "That suit fits me all right, I guess; but I'm afraid in a month or two, if I'm out in a rain or something, it will like as not all shrink up so that it will be another of 'papa's pants will soon fit Willie,' and I guess I'll stick to my old tailor."

"But the cloth in our clothing is all London shrunk," I said.

"London shrunk," he replied. "Why, what's that?"

Then I proceeded to describe the London shrinking process.

"Now," I concluded, "one result of this expensive method of shrinking is to so shorten a bolt of cloth that several suits less can be cut from it than under the cheaper process; perhaps that's the reason others don't use it; but we find it pays best, because our customers learn to have confidence in what we tell them."

To make a long story short, the result was that the man not only bought that suit, but in a few days he came in again and purchased a fine overcoat.

Now, that salesman was a good average man as clothing salesmen go; but he lacked specific knowledge on the one "selling point" that would appeal to and convince his customer.

And right here I want to emphasize the point that the salesman should always dominate his customer; he should never let the customer dominate him. The salesman should respectfully assume a quiet superiority of expert knowledge—a firm and confident command of the situation; and to do this he must know his goods—the materials, the making, the fashions; he should have at instant command all kinds of information and "selling points" which would tend to enlighten his customer and convince him that the goods are especially desirable.

Lack of faith in or interesting facts about their goods is often the cause of weak persuasive powers in salesmen. A customer's adverse suggestions tend to undermine the salesman's confidence in himself. He gets nervous, "rattled," and the customer sees it. The result is frequently a lost sale, where a cool head and the confident manner that comes from faith in and familiarity with the special merits of his goods would have counted in the cash drawer.

Salesmen should remember that an opinion against an article is less often due to real knowledge than to prejudice or hasty judgment. People are often whimsical, vacillating, in choosing.

The personality of the salesman should be a positive psychological force. He should study his man—influence him by mental suggestion. Never consider his opinion except as something to be changed favorably to your view. Nine-tenths of what people see they see through other people's eyes, anyway; why shouldn't they see through yours? Their opinions are really only what other people have told them.

TREATMENT OF EMPLOYES.

It is undoubtedly the fact that one of the most important qualities in an employer is the ability to obtain from his staff the best work of which it is capable. It is largely a question in the retail trade of the treatment of salespeople. And as a rule the policy adopted by the employer is the exact reflection of his ability as a business man. Each salesperson should be trained to become an essential part of the business. It is a mistake to treat men as mechanisms for the performance of the allotted task. When this attitude is defended at all, it can only be logically upheld on the ground that the task itself is purely mechanical. There are very few details of work in our trade that can be justly so described. This being so, it is obvious that the salesperson can execute his work either as a hearty admirer of his employer, and with enthusiasm, or as a discontented and disheartened servant, and with the least effort necessary to save him from dismissal. Between these two extremes lies the success and failure of many a business. It is frequently because he entertains an unwholesome fear of dismissal that a salesperson adopts a servile and cringing attitude. That attitude is not the attitude of a good employe, and the employer who desires it is handicapping himself. If the employe is worth employing he is worth treating with respect, which should be mutual between employer and employe. This does not spell any indulgence of carelessness or laziness, but, on the other hand, leads to a higher standard of efficiency in every section of the business, and a higher standard of life and thought for all those engaged in it. If this can be achieved not at the expense of practical business, but can be held to be conducive, as it certainly is, to the best results, materially as well as morally, we have a business policy which is inspiring and beneficial in every way.

Advance Ideas for Spring, 1908.

Manufacturers' Samples Now Showing — Light-weight cloths of a Deeper Color Indicated.

Manufacturers' sample lines for the Spring of 1908, which are now being cautiously shown, reveal the fact that they have arrived at the conclusion that the day of light-weight fabrics is not yet over. Apparently European cloth makers were of the opinion that the time had arrived for a change, when fabrics were made up for the present Spring, and they confidently put forth light colored materials in heavier weights than had been selling. These goods did not take, for, as the season developed, the tendency was seen to be for light-weight fabrics in somewhat darker tones, and realizing that an error had been made for this Spring, fabrics for the Spring of 1908 are both light in weight and darker in color.

It is true that there has been a good deal of clearing at reduced prices of light-weight fabrics, both in silk and wool mixtures, and in woolen veilings, etc. This has been due, in a great measure, to the over-buying of light colors and fancy shades—buyers taking whole pieces of such shades when cut lengths would have sufficed.

Cream and black have been wholly absent from these sales, and when dark blues and staple shades have appeared they have been placed there with a view to helping the sale of the other colors.

Veilings, particularly in black and cream, and also in navy and brown, are in very good demand now, and may be confidently looked upon as good sellers next Winter.

The cloths shown for 1908 are darker in tone. They still have the white ground, but it is better covered. Stripes are expected to lead, and the novelty is grouped stripes formed of fine lines in dark, dull shades on white, light tan or pastel grounds. These stripes very closely resemble the patterns used for men's cloths. In checked and plaided effects the white ground is still retained, but it is better covered, and little of it shows through the intersections of the plaid. These suitings are developed in fine worsted cloths, and though light in weight they have a firm finish that makes them suitable for the development of the tailored suit.

Panamas, particularly with the garment manufacturers, are strong sellers, and, besides the plain, piece-dyed cloths, fancy effects, showing unobtrusive stripes and checks produced by the use of a white twist thread, are shown.

Broadcloths seem to have reached a staple place, and those of chiffon weight and of spotless finish will occupy a large place in the trade.

Color developments cannot as yet be spoken of, but it is expected that fawns and kindred shades will have consideration.

The position of cream fabrics, upon which some doubt was shed in the earlier part of the present Spring, has been gradually strengthening, and cream serges are put out for the Spring of 1908 in fine light weights and in mill or cheviot finish.

White for Summer Wear

White Again the Big Seller in Wool, Silk, Cotton and Linen Fabrics.

Just as The Review predicted many months ago, white fabrics are the leading sellers for making up into Summer gowns. Just now, and also for wear in the cool days and nights, white woolen fabrics are selling. White or cream serge in light weights, and in smooth or milled finish come first, and cream voile is a very free seller. Veiling and Landsdownes are selling for children's wear, and there is some talk about cheviots and chiffon panamas.

Light-weight mohairs are being taken by the better trade, but in these materials the cloths with a hair-line stripe or check of pale color are better sellers than pure white. Printed delaines in this class of patterns have been much inquired for since the season opened, and these patterns particularly are likely to be a strong feature in Summer selling.

Rough-finished cream and white oriental silks, such as pongee, etc., are chosen for many of the attractive jumper suits now so much worn. They are generally supplemented by jaunty little jackets in bolero, Eton, or the new kimona form.

The linen suits are built much on the same lines as the silk suits, and many of them have the three pieces, skirt, jumper and jacket. Occasionally a long linen coat is noted. The latest of these are loose and have the kimona sleeves. The embroidered linens are the most popular. These come in the heavier varieties and are combined with Cluny and other laces. The cutaway-coat style is wonderfully smart in linen.

In thinner materials, lawns, checked, striped and embroidered muslins, batistes, Swisses, dimities, etc., are all sellers. The skirts are tucked or flounced and the waists are made blouse fashion, the newer ones having

DRY GOODS REVIEW

Montreal and Toronto.

Dutch necks or V-shaped openings and draped fichu effects. Very swell gowns are made of white chiffon.

Note should be taken of the growing favor with which spot patterns are being regarded in wash materials and in certain classes of silks. Soft satin-finished silks, satin foulards, pongees, etc., with spot and ring designs, are showing increasing favor as the season advances. Brown ground foulards with ecru coin spots and natural shades in pongees with spots of black or blue, are particularly good. Navy grounds with a white spot, black with white and white with black are becoming very fashionable. The coin spot is the leader, but other sized spots, and also ring patterns, are very much liked. This fancy has extended to the wash department, and there is a call developing for jumper suits and outing waists of spotted and striped materials.

Advance Fall Selling

Brown Gaining Ground Rapidly, Particularly in the Cities—Blue Series the Leading Sellers.

Orders received so far show that broadcloths lead in the Fall selling, and that plain and fancies are both selling, though in yardage the former, as is to be expected, predominates. Just at present stripes and checks seem to be equally favored, but stripes are expected to lead as the season advances.

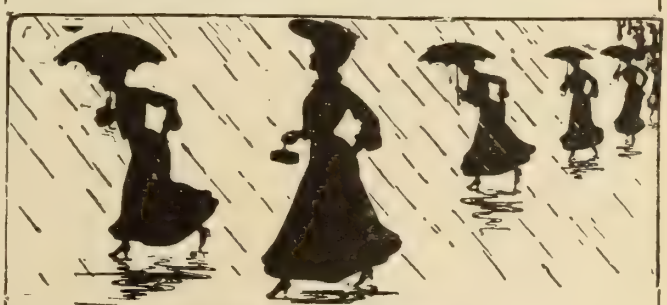
Though brown cannot be called a Spring color, it has steadily grown in favor since the season opened, and the many shades, which the extra numerous—the wood browns, leaf browns, copper shades and other red browns, tans, beiges, champagnes, etc.—are increasingly worn. Not only is brown used extensively for day wear, but proof of its growing vogue is given by the fact that, though it is by no means a good evening color, it is now much worn at any evening event when a high-necked gown is permissible. A feature of the dress parade in the evening, both at the Toronto and Montreal Horse Shows, was the many brown gowns worn. At the afternoon performances, and at the races, brown and shades of brown were very much in evidence. This growing interest in the large cities should be carefully noted as it is most probable that it will influence the trade in favor of this color in the coming Fall. Many city buyers have great faith in brown for the Fall, and it will be featured as a leading color in many departments.

Blues are strong favorites, not only the staple navies and light shades, but royal blue, old blue, delft blue, etc. According to the class of trade done, a fair representation of these colors will be wanted in the department.

Many buyers put a good deal of faith in green for the coming Fall and there is do doubt that good business will be done in this color.

A color that has not as yet made its appearance in the popular trade though it was featured to some extent last Fall in millinery, is peacock. This has been shown to some extent in the exclusive trade and some handsome gowns of this color have been seen lately. Though it may not make much headway in the coming Fall it gives promise of some prominence later. When worn before it proved very popular.

Grey is showing a steady refusal to be put on the popular list, and advices from Paris say that it has a strong following there. Greys in neutral shades are likely to sell to some extent, and there is some showing of darker mixtures. Grey is well represented in the suiting class.



Reds and plums, and other novelty colors, complete the list.

DRESS GOODS PROBLEMS

By J. T. BURNS, of The Hamilton Co., Montreal.

Up-to-Date Display—Remnants—Refunding Money and Exchanging Goods—Treatment of Customers.

The most up-to-date method of displaying dress goods, silks, wash goods, etc., when arranging them on tables, is to confine each table, as much as possible, to a showing of one shade. Have a table for each of the most popular shades for the season—the colors that most interest the people. The present season these would include browns, reds, blues, greens, purples, creams, etc. We find this the most effective way, and it has the desired weight with customers, who conclude that these shades must be correct or we would not make such special efforts to display them effectively. They will go at once to the table containing the color in which they are interested, and the sale is half made. It is a well known fact that ladies going out shopping, and desirous of purchasing a dress or costume, as a rule have not made up their minds as to what shade they will buy. They say: "We will go and see what they are showing."

The same idea applies to trimming your fixtures (the tops) of dress goods, silks or wash goods departments. They should always, to have the best effect, be trimmed with one shade at a time, as too many are confusing. Sometimes poor taste is used in making combinations and one shade will clash with another, giving a very bad effect. Our system is to dress our tables and fixtures fresh every day, showing entirely different goods. On our fixture tops, counters and tables this practice has many good features, as every drygoodsman will admit:

1st. It prevents the goods from getting soiled and looking shop-worn.

2nd. Clerks don't get tired handling the same goods from day to day. By doing so they would lose interest in them, and would not feel like showing them as new goods when opportunity presented itself.

3rd. This is the most essential point. If we did not maintain this constant change, customers, and especially shoppers (I must say the shopping habit has a strong hold on our Montreal ladies, and it seems firmly established in New York) will say: "They have no new goods here: they are always showing the same thing, so let's go somewhere else."

You can see the danger of showing the same thing too often, particularly on the same counter or table. If you have to show them, change the location, and they will look different even to yourself. Always remember that customers of to-day are as well posted on the dry goods question as you are yourself.

Remnants.

Remnants, as a general rule, are a loss. We try as much as possible not to make them, but in some cases it is impossible to do otherwise. Our system is to try and induce the lady buying the last end to take the balance, whether it be one, two or three yards. We always offer her a special inducement, perhaps half price, on the remaining yards over the quantity she requires. As they are more useful to her than to anyone else, five times out of every ten you get rid of them. No clerk under my charge is permitted to cut remnants without first consulting me and having his or her bill signed. In this way we can keep track of the remnants. Customers sometimes say they do not want any more of the goods, and won't take it, and in such cases we cut off the remnants and make them feel we are delighted to do so. Then at the end of the season, every July and January, we have a special sale of ends and remnants, which we get rid of at any price. We start the sale at 25 per cent. off, then offer 33 1-3 per cent. and 50 per cent., finally clearing them out. We do not talk remnants again for six months. In this way we manage to kep our stock pretty clean and fresh during the business season. Remnants in all cases more or less reduce the profit.

One of Our Cast Iron Rules.

Each employe is instructed by shopwalker in charge (and it is his duty to see that the instructions are carried out) that customers coming to the department and asking for goods which may not be in stock, or which for one reason or another we may not carry, or to match or sample, sometimes an odd shade, etc., must in every case be asked if they will permit the salesperson to take their names and addresses, and send samples the next day of the nearest we can procure in the trade—wholesale or retail—to what they are looking for. We insist on them remembering that it is no trouble to send samples, and in many cases it leads to a sale. It also makes the customer feel kindly towards the store, and that you have exerted yourself to help her. We have a young man engaged for the purpose of going round town procuring goods which we do not keep in stock. We find this is most satisfactory, and not only holds our present customers but makes new ones.

Refunding Money and Exchanging Goods.

We are always pleased to exchange goods when customers are not satisfied. With very few exceptions this rule exists throughout the house. We will cut a dress length for a customer, and should same not prove satisfactory we will willingly exchange same for something else or refund the money. We find in dress goods this plan works very well, as it is easier for customers to see the effect of goods at home than by sample. Samples in many cases are very deceiving, and the goods very rarely look as well as in the piece.

Damaged Goods Sold by Accident.

In taffeta silk, sometimes we run across lines where we have sold a blouse length or dress and somehow it has proved unreliable—cut, pulled at the seams or split. In cases of this kind we not only refund the money paid for the goods, but also the amount expended to have them made up, thereby relieving a customer of all loss, except, of course, the trouble she has been put to. These things we do willingly, and make customers feel that we are pleased to make right any such matters.

Treatment of Customers.

Truthfulnes is one great feature of our store. Each and every employe under my charge has been instructed by me personally. They are told that we want them always and in every case to tell the truth to our customers, even though by so doing they sometimes lose sales. I will not have them tell a customer that a material is all wool when it is a union, all linen when it is mixed with cotton, pure silk when we know it is not, or guaranteed goods to be fast color or to wash unless we are positive that they do not come up to that standard. Should we make a mistake and warrant a material to wash or retain its color, and same should fade, me in all cases, and without hesitation refund the money or replace the merchandise. This we find the only true way to build up a business.

DRESS ACCESSORIES

Ribbons.

Retail Situation—Plain Effects in High Favor for Summer Trade—Prices Continue Firm—Silk Market Conditions—Deliveries Slow for Fall.

In retail circles the present condition of the trade is very good ; in fact, the demand is almost greater than the supply. Trade throughout the last two months has been up to every expectation, and present indications are that this will be a record ribbon year. This season ribbons will be used more than ever for trimmings, and for every other purpose for which they are in demand.

Just at the present writing, fancies such as Dresdens and stripes are the strongest feature. Velvets are also to the fore. A retail merchant states that it has been a common occurrrence to see worn two or three rows of Nos. 1½, 2 and 3 on fish net veiling. He says further, that the wider widths are largely used for millinery purposes. Moires are also favorites with the public in fancy effects. Roman stripes are fair, and plaids are somewhat behind schehule. It might here be stated to advantage that velvet ribbons in Canada are very scarce and that many jobbers are entirely sold out and cannot get any deliveries for months to come. Greens and blacks are very scarce, and the brown velvet ribbon in particular is about the scarcest thing in the ribbon market at the present time. With one or two exceptions, there is very little of it to be had.

As the season progreasses plain effects are sure to command attention in retail centres, especially where sailor hats are sold. The general opinion is that plain goods will hold first place for the Summer months.

While the leading color just now is golden brown, Alice blue and London smoke also continue to be strong sellers. Blacks and whites, which are always good in staple lines, are selling steadily.

Prices continue to advance and as raw silk remains a very scarce article, they are likely to be upward in tendency for some time to come. Owing to recent advances, prices on most lines, as compared with figures ruling a year ago, average from 10 to 25 per cent. higher, with a continued upward tendency. The general opinion of retail merchants is that the prospects for Fall are very poor, both as regards delivery and prices.

Deliveries for Spring with the retailers, in many cases, are months behind. Up to the present time they are from four to six weeks overdue, and are still not complete by any means. Manufacturers cannot get sufficient quantities of raw silk to fill orders booked.

Silk markets abroad continue very strong in tone, and it is clearly evident that the supply of the raw material is not adequate to meet the manufacturers' wants. In conversation, a silk buyer stated that the market, as regards the price question, had never been so acute during the past twenty years. Reasons for this heavy advance are the short crop and the largely increased demand for silk fabrics. Continuing, he said, a noticeable feature helping the advance in European markets, was the number of large contracts placed by the American trade with Swiss manufacturers. Still another reason lies in the immense quantities of silk used for electrical purposes.

Orders are being placed for plain ribbons for delivery in Spring, 1908. Many foreign manufacturers of plain taffetas refuse to book orders at the present time, except for November and December delivery.

Prices of raw silk at the present writing are very firm and they will remain so. As there are no prospects of a decline for twelve months to come, and every indication points to another advance in the market, merchants should anticipate their requirements and order early and liberally.

In wholesale circles, travelers are now on the road with Fall lines, and are booking large orders. Taffetas and failletines are very popular, and have been bought freely. Dresdens in fancies are also to the fore in millinery widths.

Looking towards the Fall, as regards prices and deliveries, the situation will be very acute. Many importers are beginning to wonder where they will fill in many lines.

Some of the domestic and foreign manufacturers are asking very long dates for deliveries.

Neckwear.

Warm Weather Needed to Start Brisk Selling — Silk Samples Not Yet Withdrawn.

Cool weather has, in a measure, checked the selling of wash neckwear, and Summer business, which ought to be in full swing now, can hardly be said to have commenced. So general is this condition that no idea can as yet be formed as to the acceptance of the many dainty novelties brought out by the manufacturers for the present season. There is a wealth of new ideas in turn-down collars, both starched and soft, but they do not as yet seem to have penetrated beyond the counters of the stores. The weather is certainly largely responsible as furs and heavy wraps are by no means discarded yet. Pleated and fluted frills decorate the latest collars, and are much in evidence on all the season's neckwear.

Soft turn-overs, with an unlined band, are a later development, and to wear with these there is an endless variety of shield bows shown. These come in almost every material, in louisene, taffeta, fine Swiss embroidery, chiffon, maline, lace, etc. The Vesta Victoria, made of pieces of ribbon cut en bias, and drawn through a small pearl or gilt buckle. is a late bow novelty in the States. There are many dainty ideas in straight stocks, and in tab and pointed stocks. Hunting stocks in white and colored linen and mercerized goods are selling, and Windsors in lawn and lace, and in plain, plaid and embroidered taffeta, are shown.

Tab collars are good as ever, and the double tab is again included in sample lines. Embroidered stocks, both tabbed and pointed, and also a few lace stocks, are featured.

Collar and cuff sets, and coat sets are expected to make good, and the better trade has some call for maline and chiffon boas.

Owing to the cool weather, silk neckwear is still selling, and a good deal of the business that is now passing, is being done on these goods, from samples that were made up for the early trade, and have not yet been withdrawn.

Buyers for neckwear houses, who have just returned from Europe, or are still abroad, report that in New York and Paris neckwear is more than ever in evidence, and is selling freely. No one idea or style, they say, stands out with special prominence. Anything that is pretty and dainty sells, and Canada, they say, has little to learn in neckwear styles from either city. Frillings are strong sellers in chiffons and in pleated and fluted nets and laces. The Gretchen or fedora frilling, both in the plain and scalloped effect, made on the Gretchen machine, which has hitherto had to be imported, is now being made in Canada.

Chiffons, laces and nets have advanced materially in price, but as yet there has been no corresponding advance in the price of frillings.

Gloves.

Retail Trade Brisk—Fall Import Orders Placed Freely —Continued Scarcity of Fabric Gloves—The Price Situation.

At retail the demand for gloves throughout the Spring months has been up to every expectation, taking into consideration the cool weather experienced throughout April. Glace effects continue to hold first place, with suedes somewhat behind schedule. Fabric gloves, where they are to be had, are also to the fore, but these goods will sell better during the Summer months. Colors predominating at the present time are blacks, browns and tans. Cream and corn shades, which have sold freely in New York, have proved very slow sellers in Canada. In lengths, the 12 and 16 buttons have again had preference over the other styles.

Among retailers Fall import orders were placed freely throughout April and May, and many good bookings are now in the hands of the wholesalers.

The retail glove people have ordered largely in 12 and 16-button lengths in long gloves for Fall. The general opinion is that the elbow glove will continue in style for some time to come. Wrist gloves in glace effects are also to the fore, and have been ordered even more largely than the longer lengths. The expectation among retailers for Fall is that both will prove good sellers.

Fabric gloves continue very scarce. A large number of wholesale buyers have been in Chemnitz markets for a period of from four to six weeks trying to place orders for Spring, 1908, in the interests of their respective firms. As the price of fabric goods continues to soar, buyers state that manufacturers are indifferent as to whether orders are booked or not. They also state that the manufacturers do not care to bind themselves to any agreement, or to accept any large orders, on account of the steadily rising market. Labor has advanced 10 per cent. and there have been increases in nearly every branch of the fabric glove business since the beginning of the year.

Confidence is still maintained in black, as the leader. Tans and light shades of brown have been also ordered quite freely at retail. Many orders contain a few whites, navies, greens, reds and greys.

Prices continue to advance, and it is expected that they will go still higher for Fall. The general price advance on most lines as compared with figures ruling a year ago, averages from 15 to 20 per cent. up to the present time. For Fall the expectations are that they will average an increase of from 8 to 10 per cent. over figures now ruling.

The advice from the wholesale trade is that in view of the conditions now prevailing, merchants who have not anticipated requirements, should do so at once and order liberally, as no relief in the fabric glove market is in sight. They also recommend that preference be given to gloves already in view, as against placing orders for goods which are yet to arrive, as it is quite certain that quantities of gloves ordered for Fall in these lines will never be delivered.

Lace.

Big Orders for Valenciennes Placed Now for Present and For December, January and February Delivery—More Lace Than Ever Used.

Retail business, at present, is only fairly active, the big call being for narrow valenciennes edgings and insertions, with the stock of desirable patterns decidedly limited. Fine valenciennes is the best seller, though there is a fair demand for the heavier makes. It is the pattern that really counts, good patterns in both classes being much sought after. There has been a heavy call for insertions, and edgings to match.

Valenciennes is still the leading lace, and promises to keep its position, advance fashion news showing that Parisian designers are still making free use of it in their trimming schemes. The trade's confidence in the future of this lace is shown by the big orders that are now being placed, not only for present delivery, but for December, January and February delivery also.

There is a growing feeling for net laces of all descriptions, and embroidered nets strike the newest note. There is little novelty in this lace, as the heavy patterns on a light net ground, and the darned effects have frequently been the vogue before. The patterns now brought forward are much better designed, and are a big improvement over those shown when these laces were previously sold. The Empire patterns are particularly good. Filet laces are still in good standing, particularly filet combinations with other laces. Irish, guipure and Venise are fairly good sellers, and a representative stock will be necessary in the lace department to do business in for the coming season. Combination effects are specially attractive, and Venise, Irish, and net is the one that seems to be best likes. The exclusive trade is favoring festoon effects and medallions for trimming gowns and evening coats. For this purpose heavy Clunys and Arabian laces are selling, and also narrow galoons.

In silk laces point d' Argentan, a lace closely resembling Chantilly—the only difference being in the raised cord employed to edge the pattern—is expected to be a good seller.

Not only all-overs in the different laces, but plain and fancy nets, are in big demand, as the coming styles in costumes, are mostly in Japanese effects, which call for not only the yoke of lace or net, but the sleeves also.

There is a growing feeling for butter and ecrus, particularly in nets and all-overs, no doubt owing to the increasing vogue of tans, browns and other colors that tone in better with tinted laces than pure white.

At the Toronto horse show, when the gown was of tan, or some shade of brown, the lace used for yoke, sleeves and trimming was either butter or ecru shade, and these colored laces were used with the novelty colors, such as bronze, dead leaf, peacock, etc. Yellowish laces were much used to trim evening coats, and not just those of tan, but also those in pale colors. An extremely smart evening coat seen was of white brocaded pompadour satin, made in the Louis style, and lavishly trimmed with yellowish lace.

Trimmings and Buttons.

Pull Braids the Big Sellers—The Garment Manufacturers Making Free Use of Soutaches.

In spite of the fact that pull braids are hardly to be considered as a Summer trimming, orders are coming to hand from the counter trade that call for immediate delivery. This shows the very strong position that pulls occupy. They are being ordered out in large quantities for the Fall and in a big variety of shades and colors, and a large business is evidently anticipated.

In the big retail stores, the braid counter is one of the busiest, and even on off days a crowd will be found there. So great is the demand for black pulls that in order to facilitate business, the different widths are placed in bins on the counter, with a price ticket at the back of each.

The garment manufacturers are buying both pulls and soutaches, and over in the States the cloak makers are buying handsome and high priced trimmings, and standing or side-sewn soutaches are much in evidence on the new sample garments shown on that market.

The English braid manufacturers are commencing to compete with the German makers of artificial silk braids, and a line of these made by an English firm has met with a very good reception in Canada. There is some talk of the surtax dropping at the end of the fiscal year, but even in event of this happening the preference should be a material help to the Britisher in this market.

Leather is the latest trimming novelty. It is used for collar, cuffs and vest effects on tailored suits, and also for trimming coats of pony, caracul and the imitation plush furs that are coming into favor. The leather is in colors to match the cloth, and is specially dressed so as to be extra soft and easily penetrated by the needle.

Metal buttons are selling fairly well, but the covered button is the big seller. It can be had either silk or cloth-covered, in a big variety of standard shades. Any shade not on the list can be easily procured, and orders can be placed through the medium of most of the wholesale houses. Hitherto only plain buttons in cloth or silk have been made in Canada, but machines have been imported from Germany, and all kinds of fancy combination buttons can now be ordered, and any combination of materials and colors procured on short notice.

Embroideries.

A Wealth of Novelty in the New Patterns—Lace Effects the Leading Idea.

The new patterns for the Spring of 1908 are now showing, and both from their novelty and richness the fact that the manufacturers of Swiss embroideries are determined to keep their product to the front is apparent. The new patterns are all executed upon soft finished lawns and batistes, and approach more closely to the heavy laces than ever before. Heavy blind embroidered effects are used in connection with the lacy motifs and the result is something that is both decidedly new and pleasing. Indeed the new patterns are far handsomer than any that have been placed upon the market before, and should do much to keep embroideries in the high place they have now in fashionable favor.

Manufacturers are still finding that it pays to produce their best patterns in sets, and wide flouncings, different widths of edgings, narrow and wide bandings, galoons, medallions, and all-overs can be had to match. For yoke effects and for the benefit of the waist-makers all-overs with graduated patterns, with a space of plain material between that can be tucked, are shown. There is a big showing of this class of goods and also an almost endless variety of styles, sizes and shapes in motifs and medallions.

Veilings.

The Lace and Chiffon the Leading Summer Veils—Filet Mesh the Novelty in Mesh Veils.

Those buyers who have stocked novelties in veils have had no reason to repent of their action, as there is a good inquiry for, and a decided lack of, desirable high priced goods upon the counters of the Canadian stores. The Review is assured upon good authority that because of the limited assortment shown, even in the larger stores, many women have had to send over the line to fill their requirements in novelty veils. The retailer must bear in mind that the number of people who are able to buy expensive goods is increasing rapidly in Canada, and that such stock as it would have been folly to purchase only a few years ago is necessary now. Though in buying high priced novelties a good deal of caution is necessary, now that the trade is expanding so fast, over-caution is often as disastrous as the lack of this quality. We venture to state that, this season at any rate, many sales have been lost at the veiling counter just because the goods offered were not up to the standard of the pruchaser's requirements. In almost every case of this kind, where the desired goods could not be had there, the order has gone to stores in Chicago or New York.

The handsome flowing veil of lace is now sold with the hat in many millinery establishments and the individual veil, rightly handled, promises to approach the vogue of a few years ago.

With the approach of the Summer months the white veil is becoming the leading seller, and there is also a good inquiry for pale shades, particularly in chiffons. The lace and the lace-bordered veil are the most fashionable, but because of the price the popular trade is being done largely in individual veils of fancy nets or meshes. These are variously bordered. A row of ribbon velvet about one inch wide, or two rows of a narrower width, are very much worn. A heavy silk embroidery is another popular edging, and a hem of printed chiffon is also seen on some new lines.

The colored veil is decidedly the leader. Brown and ceil blue are very much in evidence at the present moment.

There is a big sale of automobile veils, both made up and in chiffon by the yard, and practically every fashionable color is wanted in these lines.

Prosperity in Nottingham

Review of the Lace and Hosiery Trade—Lace Has Been in Big Demand.

The lace industry continues, as for many years past, to be Nottingham's chief industry. For several years, however, the tendency has been to establish all new factories in outlying villages, and some old concerns have moved bodily thither. This shifting has been caused by the cheaper lands and cost of labor in the villages, and by the more rigid trade-union demands and restrictions in the city. But Nottingham still retains the work of finishing the raw product, which employs much more labor than the factories. The condition of the trade in 1906 is fairly stated by a large lace manufacturer, who says he "can not remember a time when lace in general was so much in demand or when it was so easy to sell." Business has been too good, from one point of view. Lace manufacturers have had much trouble in getting a sufficient supply of yarn, and orders have consequently been delayed. But had yarn been sufficiently obtainable, customers would have had to wait, for the utmost capacity of the machines could not possibly have filled orders promptly. In any event, the machines would have been months behind with some kinds of orders. The inevitable result was several advances in prices during the year, aggregating from 10 to 25 per cent. on different varieties of lace goods. This has tended in a measure to lessen the complaint about "doing business for nothing," so much heard in recent years.

Styles in Demand — Yarns and Embroideries.

Respecting varieties of laces, the demand for narrow Valenciennes was extraordinary. Orders came from all parts of the world, and included all grades from finest to coarsest. Brabants, Clunys, Maltese, and Torchons were also in great request. The only dull line was silk laces, but this has become a chronic condition so far as Nottingham is concerned. The net trade was exceedingly active. All machines were constantly filled, and enough orders are now on hand in some cases to keep them busy all through 1907. Even the curtain branch, which has disastrous competition to face in late years, was fairly healthy in 1906, but prices were not wholly satisfactory. The only serious complaint heard during the year related to the price of yarns, which in some cases is about double that of a year ago, but similar conditions existed in the other textile trades. Employes also had a prosperous year. Indeed, one must go back at least twenty years to find its equal—not in wage scale, perhaps, but in steady work for good pay. Every lace workman could find employment, and the demand for skilled operatives was beyond the supply.

Embroidery laces have not been largely produced in Nottingham, but this branch has been growing in the last few years, and particularly in 1906. Those in the trade are now encouraged to thoroughly develop it, and the coming year is expected to witness a large increase of outzut. Plauen and St. Gall embroideries are made upon nets imported from Nottingham, and it is therefore reasoned that Nottingham should be able to produce embroidery laces to at least as good advantage as those places. While the home trade in lace goods was exceedingly active, the export trade was beyond precedent. Practically all the British machine lace is either woven or finished in this locality, which exported during 1906 $21,407,957 worth, an increase of over $3,000,000 in comparison with 1905.

The term hosiery in this country includes socks, stockings, underwear, knit jackets, and practically everything which is knit, in contradistinction to fabrics that are woven. For some years this industry has not flourished in England as in former times, but it still continues to be second only to lace-making in this district. The export trade has varied little during the last four years. Manufacturers in this district had a fairly satisfactory year in 1906, and could have done exceptionally well had they not been hampered by difficulty in getting yarns, and, besides, the uncertainty of yarn prices, which promised to fall at the beginning of the year, but which steadily rose instead, led them to defer making contracts that were offered. Makers still preserve that attitude at the opening of 1907, and the year is full of uncertainty.

The high price of raw materials and consequent small profits to manufacturers has led some of them to experiment in making cheap products look like the very best, and they have measurably succeeded. This does not mean that they have fraudulently substituted inferior for superior goods, but only that they have succeeded in making cheap goods more attractive to buyers and consequently in giving them a higher market value.

As to the different branches of the hosiery trade in 1906: The demand for cotton socks and stockings was fairly active, but fitful and not well sustained. The merino and wool branches were well employed, and fairly remuneratibe prices ruled through the year. Black cashmere hose were firm in value and the machinery was well engaged. Natural wool combinations sold in fair quantities. Manufacturers of merino, cashmere, and lamb's-wool vests and shirts did a good trade, though competition prevented the realization of adequate profits. The silk branches did not do a satisfactory business. Limited quantities of embroidered goods were sold. Elastic goods and surgical hosiery were in average request. Openwork lisle-thread gloves and fancy hose were selling to a moderate extent, but there was much competition. Motor scarfs and Tam O'Shanters, a comparatively recent addition to the hosiery product of this district, were produced in enhanced quantities and found ready sale.

The home trade showed marked improvement during the year and was relatively satisfactory. The total of the foreign trade increased over 20 per cent. in comparison with 1905 and about 25 per cent. compared with 1904. The value of the total foreign sales in 1906 for the Kingdom is placed at about $10,100,000. Cotton hosiery cut a relatively small figure—$1,500,000—greater than in 1904, but less than in 1905. The increase in the total exports is credited to the "wool and mixed" branch.

The competition of Germany, more particularly in the cotton branch, is severely felt by British manufacturers. Not only is it encountered in foreign lands, but also upon the home soil, which is well instanced by the fact that Germany's best customer in its hosiery export trade, next to the United States, is Great Britain. British India is Germany's third best foreign customer, and Australia is not far below in the list.

The Fall Coat.

Advance Indications — The Long Coat a Sure Feature— A Useful and Comfortable Garment.

There is always some controversy at this season of the year as to just what form the Fall coat will take. On one point, however, the trade seems well agreed and that is that the long coat, from 48 to 52 inches, will be a big feature. Some makers, because of price considerations, often at the beginning of the season strive to push the shorter lengths, but almost invariably when selling commences the call comes for the long, easy-fitting coat.

This is because women find this coat both a useful and comfortable garment, and one that she can make serve for many occasions. Most women own gowns of very lightweight fabrics, and even if she buys a suit a long coat is a necessity as well. That there will be a diversity of styles is assured, for the time has gone by when one model will serve. The new models that are more shaped to the figure than those shown last year, are highly favored. Though looser than semi-fitted styles, these coats are very far from tight. Many of them are very mannish in cut, much like the sack coats men are now wearing. They follow the figure line from the arms down, and while defining the fit, have graceful, flaring skirts.

American garment firms are bringing out coats made of imitation fur. There was some feeling for coats of this class last Fall, but the supply was limited. Samples are again showing and the belief is that more business will result this year. The shapes most generally seen are in the pony and Prince Chap styles, from 24 to 27 inches long, trimmed with braid or leather. Imitation furs are also used for lining the longer wrap coats, taking the place of high priced furs.

Summer Models.

Outing Models — The New Sleeves — Lace and Net Blouses.

Though the weather has not been propitious, lingerie waists have had a fair sale. There is no question about the demand picking up when once the warm days arive. Lingerie waists are the big sellers and their vogue is further increased by the many bretelle or suspended, and jumper models sold.

Outing waists will be a feature of the Summer trade. These are a line that promises to come up each year, for the outing season, as the plain tailored style in which they are made, does not crush so easily, and it will stand constant laundering better than the elaborate lace trimmed models. Tailored waists come in Gibson, Peter Pan, and in Marie Antoinette styles, with plaitings trimming the front plait. Pongees, Summer silks and wash fabrics, with coin dots in black, brown and blue, are also being worn.

Some late models in lace, net and silk show the new Japanese sleeves. These are rather extreme as yet and look as though they would need to be further modified for the popular trade. There is a big demand for lace and net blouses, and one that will also extend over into the Fall season.

Location of Corset Department.

Advisable that it Should be Close to Garment Section — Push the Better Class of Goods.

Corsets have had a good deal of attention bestowed upon them in the past few years, and the manufacturing methods have been greatly improved. Some retail departments have not kept pace. Departments are badly located, not a few are badly managed and bought for, and in many more the selling staff is not equal to the task of disposing of better grade lines.

Corsets should be located close to the garment department, and then the same fitting room will do for both. If this is on the second floor, so much the better, as women will feel more freedom in handling the goods, and, also, the department can be made more attractive. Many good stores carpet this department, which is a big help to its appearance. Wherever located there should be a certain amount of privacy, but it need not be poked into any corner as it often is. Ledge trims and show cases containing new models should be freely used as they are of great value in drawing attention to the department.

The stock must be well selected and assorted, as well as attractively displayed. Capable saleswomen must be engaged, and a good campaign of advertising employed.

Conditions are now favorable to the building up of a good department, one selling standard and profitable goods. The trend of fashion and the general prosperity is making it exceptionally easy to do this, if only the right steps are taken. "Push better goods and sell only the cheap models when a sale can be made in no other manner," should be the standing orders for the selling staff, the buyer, on his part, being careful to stock only well cut, well made, and well finished lines, and to always keep a proper assortment.

A Big Fall Suit Season.

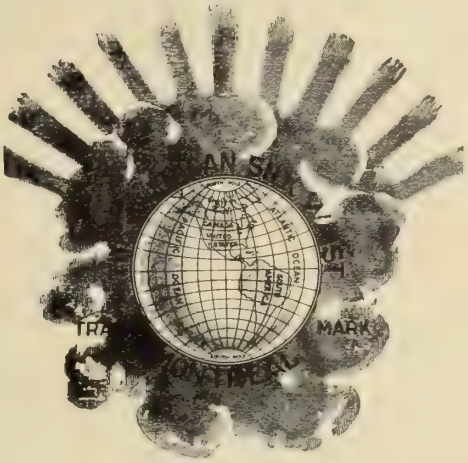
The Tailored Suit in High Favor Now in New York and is Expected to be a Big Seller in the Coming Fall.

Slow business due to the backward Spring means that a campaign of price cutting is now in force in the retail stores, in order to reduce the too heavy stocks of Spring garments. The knife has gone specially deep in the case of all kinds of Spring coats of fancy stripe and check tweeds, and every effort is now being made to clear them out of the department. This class of coat is being even more strenuously pushed than those of fawn covert cloth, which are also heavily stocked in many departments. This may be because a certain class will always purchase a fawn covert coat, at a price.

Suits are being sacrificed, but it is those made from the more loosely woven, rougher tweeds, etc., that are falling victims to the knife.

Though it requires some courage to follow, this policy of forcing out stock that does not sell freely, it is the only one to follow to build up a successful business. A department that is run upon modern lines must be clear of stock at the end of the season, and be able to start selling again with all new goods. It is the poorest of policies, and one that will sooner or later wreck the department, to attempt to carry garments over from one season to another.

The absence of the expected Spring repeats ought to improve deliveries this Fall. The advance orders placed for staple lines have been very large, and when the Spring repeats did not arrive, manufacturers turned their factories over onto the making up of Fall orders.



Tailored Suits for Fall.

Tailored Suits Universally Worn in New York Now — Should be Good Sellers Next Fall.

The plain tailored has secured a strong hold in New York. Not since its introduction has it been so universally worn, nor for such a big variety of functions. It is not only for street wear that it is in evidence, but at fashionable weddings, teas, etc., and on other occasions where an elaborate costume is generally worn, the tailored suit is now the choice of the smartest dressed women. The general adoption of this class of suit by the society woman is sure to influence strongly the Fall trade, and a very good business should be done.

That the tailored suit is also favored by the smartly dressed ladies in Canada was shown by the large number worn at the Toronto and Montreal Horse Shows, and also at the Ontario Jockey Club's meet. At the horse shows, tailored suits, both of cloth and velvet, were very much in evidence, not only in the afternoon, but in the evening also.

The new cloths shown for the Fall season, the broadcloths, serges, cheviots and suitings, in pattern, weight, and finish, strongly indicate that manufacturers had such a development in view when they put out their sample lines for the coming season.

THE JULY SPECIAL.

The special Fall number of The Review will be issued the first week in July, and we may promise our readers that, in every respect, it will surpass anything we have yet turned out. The January special brought us many letters of commendation from the trade, but we hope to make this one still more worthy of appreciation. To accomplish this end no efforts are being spared by the editorial staff.

Among the features of particular interest will be a comparison between mail order prices on a number of lines and those received by local merchants in every province of the Dominion. Actual figures have been collected, so that there is no retailer to whom the information will not be of direct practical value. We find in it a great deal of encouragement for the man who is exerting himself to conserve his home market from the inroads of the catalogue houses. Facts regarding the latter's methods of doing business will also be given.

"Men and Methods" will be written from information gathered by the editor in the Kingston, Brockville, Lindsay and other stores. In "Business Management" Howard R. Wellington is to discuss "The evolution of book-keeping methods." He will also criticize an eastern store's system of operation and suggests several ways in which it could be improved. T. Johnston Stewart's talk on advertising will be of more than usual interest. The reading matter and illustrations in "Art of Display" and "Show Card Writing" will be of a high order. For each one of our regular departments—dress goods, ready-to-wear garments, etc.—articles dealing with buying, selling and display are being prepared by buyers for some of the large city stores. Exterior and interior views of splendid German, English and Canadian dry goods houses will be given, along with several diagrams showing arrangement of departments. Up-to-date store fronts will be illustrated, with details of cost of constructing one of them. The editor will write of "Merchants I have met." Without enumerating further, we may say that every section of the paper will carry out the idea of making the July issue a "special" number, indeed.

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE AFFECTS DRY GOODS TRADE.

Montreal in particular, and the trade throughout Canada generally, has felt the long struggle in the port of Montreal between the longshoremen and the large shipping companies. In spite of desperate efforts on the part of the shipping companies, after the longshoremen quit work, demanding increased wages, not enough skilled laborers could be found to adequately handle the incoming freight and clear vessels for sea.

Notoriously slow shipments in imported dry goods have been made worse by this condition and practically every jobber and manufacturer has been affected. Retailers who are impatient concerning delayed shipments, and are beginning to cancel on this account, can appreciate the difficulties manufacturers and jobbers have. Fortunately, the strike appears at an end and a settlement will soon be effected.

SHORTER HOURS IN HOT MONTHS.

It is a good practice, during the months of July and August, to close the store for one afternoon each week, or at five, instead of six, o'clock, every evening. Some merchants may prefer the former and some the latter, but we would strongly advise the adoption of either one. The hot days are very trying, and your salespeople will thoroughly appreciate any extra consideration you may show them. Their vote would undoubtedly be in favor of the half-holiday, but that cannot be granted if your competitors are unwilling to close also. However, even if you stand alone in your desire to do something, you will be able to give your employes the extra hour each evening. They will do better work as a consequence, and your customers will think more of you for it. No trade need be lost if you announce your intention through your newspaper space.

504. Embroidered Silks.—An embroiderer in silk, in Japan, wishes to obtain connections in Canada. Especially for embroidered habutae, after the French pattern. Samples will be sent upon request.

512. Agents.—A Birmingham firm manufacturing studs and sleeve links wishes to appoint suitable firm at Toronto or elsewhere to act as sole agents for Canada.

According to advices from the leading cotton mill centres of southern New England, fully 85,000 operatives will have their wages advanced about ten per cent.

The catalogue houses have small liking for trade newspapers. One does not have far to seek for the reason. It is simply that The Review and papers devoted to other classes of trade are exerting a strong influence throughout the country.

TRADE NEWSPAPERS AND CATALOGUE HOUSES.

Mail order business is a parasite on the trade of local merchants throughout the country, and, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, there is scarcely a district from which it does not draw sustenance.

Let us take a look at the conditions that exist in the town of ———. When the mail order idea was launched the stores there were of a pretty poor class, and a large amount of business was attracted to Toronto. Each merchant had to buy on credit and sell on the same basis. The catalogue houses purchased large quantities and paid spot cash. They did not give a cent's worth of credit, and the discounts, immunity from bad debts, etc., made a substantial difference in the prices they were able to offer. The local merchant was at a great disadvantage, too, as regarded assortments. People who were desirous of getting something a little different from what anyone else had, invariably sent away to the big city stores. They were spurred on to patronize the mail order system more and more by advertising matter forwarded regularly. This matter was all prepared by experts and was decidedly of the business-getting kind.

What a difference there is in these stores to-day! For some time The Review has been telling unprogressive merchants pretty plainly what it thinks of their standing in relation to the catalogue business. It has impressed upon them the value of bright, well equipped premises and published illustrations of up-to-date stores as samples of progressiveness. The drygoodsmen of —— have made extensive improvements, and one of them has put up a splendid building to accommodate his business. We dwelt at length upon the matter of larger assortments and our views have been widely endorsed. Through our pages ——— merchants became aware of the fact that the cash plan was being succesfully operated in other places of even smaller population. Two of them have since adopted it wholly, while the others have cut their credits down to a very small amount. They are able to take their cash discounts, and in many cases offer better prices than the catalogue houses. We have made them familiar with the latest and best methods of display and advertising. Two out of the four formerly had small space in the local newspapers. As a general rule it was filled with a very poor quality of matter, that seemed to have been scribbled off in a spare moment and without serious thought as to whether or not it would bring business. We secured the services of an advertising expert and he has been instructing our readers in the most effective way of telling the public about their goods. We realized that this department offered scope for very useful work and we have devoted a good deal of space to it. Among other things, the news of what many stores are doing in the advertising line is given each month. "Descriptive Advertising" is a topic that we have kept warm for a considerable time, and we intend to discuss it further until we have convinced every merchant of the force of what we advocate. All of the dry goods stores in ——— are advertising regularly now, and as they use good, straightforward, convincing arguments they are finding their money well spent. The news which we supply, from all branches of the trade, furnishes a reliable guide in buying. Our correspondents in Paris, London and New York give them the latest style and market news from those centres.

The result of all this is that the business which catalogue houses formerly took out of ——— has fallen off greatly, and the same may be said of all other places where similar methods have been adopted.

We are not writing this in any bumptious spirit, but merely for the purpose of explaining why it is that the catalogue houses have developed such a violent dislike for The Review, and trade newspapers in general, as they have recently shown. Of course, they have never hoped for the growth of our influence, but it was not until lately, when we stood effectively between them and the obtainment of legislative concessions, which would enable them to greatly extend their operations and compete unfairly with local merchants all through Canada, that they set out to do us any actual harm.

Mail order interests were immensely pleased with themselves when they managed to convince our postoffice officials that Canada was very badly in need of a better parcel post service; in fact, that the Government should step in and take away a great deal of the business now done by the express companies, give the people the benefit of cheaper rates, and establish a c.o.d. service, whereby every postmaster in the country would be the agent of the mail order houses. Although great precautions were taken to keep the matter quiet and have the change made without any public discussion, The Review and other MacLean trade newspapers took it up and organized such opposition that it had to be dropped.

The miscarriage of their plans put the catalogue houses in a nasty humor, and they hope to "get back at us." They want postal rates on trade newspapers raised, with the object of reducing our circulation by forcing the advance of subscription prices. They have got close to some officials of the Postoffice Department and are attempting to inspire the adoption of a new regulation to accomplish their purpose. They hope by handicapping trade newspapers to injure one of the strongest agencies that is operating against the expansion of their business.

GOOD STORE FIXTURES.

That up-to-date fixtures are an exceedingly valuable aid to business is a fact that permits of no argument. The days when counters and shelving contributed the principal furnishings of a dry goods store are past. They waned as the great doctrine of display gradually received the recognition which is its due. With its acceptance came a demand for facilities with which to put it into practice. The small counter show case was developed into the handsome piece of furniture now in use. For every class of merchandise there was placed on the market some fixture or fixtures that would enable the retailers to take samples of his stock off the shelves and from beneath the counters, and arrange them, in the windows or about the store, so that they would introduce themselves to his customers in an effective way. "Goods well displayed are half sold" is no exaggeration providing, of course, they are offered at fair prices.

People generally have developed the shopping habit to a marked extent. They go from store to store, and the more stock a merchant has out where it can be readily seen and examined the more of their attention he will claim, and the more likely he is to attract their trade. Goods displayed in the proper way very often sell themselves. This is particularly true of such lines as notions and fancy goods, which invariably are given the best locations in all really progressive stores.

Every merchant realizes that money which he expends judiciously for fixtures, of what might be termed the standard variety, represents the best kind of an investment. Of these most stores have a fair number and are looking forward to the purchase of additional ones. There are others, however, that should commend themselves to the consideration of merchants whose ideas are keenly progressive. Take, for instance, hosiery stock boxes. Comparatively few stores use them, while we know that nearly all find their adoption profitable. A merchant in a small town upon whom we called recently has a rack for showing curtains, and he tells us that since putting it in he has lost scarcely a sale. In another store veilings were formerly kept in the millinery department on the first floor. Now part of the stock is carried on the main floor, and by the aid of a fixture for display, sales during the first week after the change was made were run up to a larger amount than for the whole month preceding. We might go on and give many instances of a somewhat similar nature to show that "goods well displayed are half sold," and that good fixtures generally pay for themselves in a short time.

A CONDITION WORTHY OF EMULATION.

We visited Kingston a short time ago, and one of the things which most impressed us was the nice, friendly feeling that exists amongst the dry goods merchants. Each one of them had a good word to say for his competitors, and after what we have seen in numbers of other places, it was like stepping into a new atmosphere. However, it was not always so. At one time Kingston retailers held aloof from one another, just as those of a great many other small cities and towns do now. They were forced to meet and discuss the trading stamp evil several years ago and that opened the way for the present relationship. "I found out that the other fellow was not such a bad chap, after all, and I suppose his experience was very much similar," one merchant said to us. Going on to speak of the advantage of encouraging this feeling of friendliness, he said: "Some time ago I thought of opening a millinery department, and was prepared to lose $2,500 on it the first year. My chief competitor gave me exact figures to show me how his department was panning out, and I abandoned the venture. Had I not been able to go to him I would have lost money, and so would he, through my competition."

There are no "dry goods wars" in Kingston. When a store puts on a sale it generally has a good, sound reason for so doing, and the others do not interfere with it.

POINTERS FROM CITY STORES.

It will not be long until your salespeople take their vacations, and it would be a good move for you to encourage as many as possible of them to visit the city, if only for a day, and have a look round the big stores. There may be no definite information that you can instruct them to gather, but they are almost sure to pick up some helpful pointers. Among other things they could compare some of your prices with those which these houses are offering, see how stock is kept and displayed, etc

FANCY GOODS AND NOTIONS

Sales Booming at Retail — The Price Situation for Fall — Push These Lines During July and August.

Now is the time to look out for new ideas in fancy work, for as soon as My Lady gets settled in her Summer home, whether by lake or sea, she is sure to require a piece of fancy needle-work to fill in her spare moments.

Business has been so brisk at retail that many merchants continually find it hard to meet the demands, as deliveries from manufacturers are still very slow. Prices continue to soar and up to the present no reaction in the market is in sight. The price advance at retail, on goods bought for Fall, in most lines, as compared with figures now ruling, average from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. The tourist trade is now receiving very much attention in the way of preparations. Everything which is likely to appeal to a traveler visiting Canada is being stocked, and when the season arrives good business is expected on all lines. Retailers are also busy buying up jobs and making general preparations for the June and July clearance sales.

The belt field admits of a great exercise of inventive faculties. Much of this trade from year to year is dependent upon originating new designs which express utility and effectiveness. The tendency in this line at present seems to be toward higher grade goods. There is a new belt recently put on the market. It derives its name from the well-known actress, Margaret Anglin. It is manufactured from leather and silk elastic. It is about 1½ inches wide, and is mounted with gilt, gunmetal and French gray buckles. This belt is a novelty and ought to become very popular. Leather belts in all lines, including tinted leathers, continue favorites. White and embroidered washable belts have been selling well at retail for the Summer trade.

The demand for brilliant-set combs is exceptionally strong at present. There are several varieties of existing styles now being manufactured. Among the new features in the comb market which are rapidly drawing to the front are the imitation cut steel goods. These are produced to sell at retail for popular prices, and are shown in extensive lines. The effect is surprising, as they give an appearance of expensive cut steel. It is an ideal line for the dry goods trade, and many jobbers are showing these combs in both back and side styles. The demand for Orientals has been falling off to some extent, with plain combs to the fore. High back combs, up to the present, have not met with the success anticipated by retailers.

In Japanese fancy goods a large range of small baskets is shown. They are manufactured from decorated straw and bamboo. The styles are elaborate and every conceivable shape and shade is to be had. At retail these baskets are sold from 5c. up and net the merchant a very handsome profit. Silk fans are also to be had in beautifully hand-painted designs. They retail as low as 10c. and as high as 35c. Suit cases, manufactured from straw, bamboo cane, etc., neatly finished on strong frames, with leather corners and bindings, are especially good for the Summer trade. These suit cases will suit the most limited purse as they are to be had from as low as $1 to as high as $10. Beaded portiers for the Summer trade are also a good thing for retailers to carry in limited number.

In large departmental stores smallwares are one of the best lines to make a special sale of during the two quietest months of the year, July and August. At this time of the year, the average lady is always sure to require something in these goods. Have special price attractions in smallwares throughout these months and the average lady attracted to the store will see articles which she otherwise would not have thought of, and through these special sales many larger orders are given.

The postal card trade throughout the Dominion continues very bright. The sale of these cards continues to increase year by year. Manufacturers are turning out many new and various designs for the use of Canada exclusively. These are sure to be of great interest to the collector and post card enthusiast. One of the new lines now under preparation consists of provincial seals, Canadian flags, and celebrities influential in bringing about Canadian confederation. A line of numerous scenes in the Canadian Rockies, finished in many gorgeous colors, ought to have a fair share of the trade this Fall.

New Sunbonnet—Shown by Ladies' Wear, Ltd.

Holly cards and holly and maple leaf tags are now receiving the utmost attention from the manufacturers, and many pretty lines may be looked for when the holiday season arrives. Calendars, consisting of maple leaves, and representing Canadian sports, will also be shown.

A novelty that promises to be well taken up, and which has sold wherever shown, is a patent sunbonnet. This bonnet is attractive in shape and comfortable to wear, as it is kept on the head by an elastic arrangement that does away with the necessity of ties under the chin. There is a starched, wide brim that shades the eyes and face, and a full, soft mob crown. The idea is a good one, and they are selling freely in all the towns where a summer colony is located.

The present mode of dressing the hair is resulting in a big call for hair barettes, many of the newest being studded with brilliants, and a late novelty is to have the barette and comb match. These are shown now with the wearer's initials on them, done in gold or in brilliants.

Now that the Summer season is close at hand, tourist cases for holding toilet articles are good sellers. The more expensive are of leather, but a very useful and practical traveling case comes in waterproofed cretonne. There is a special pocket, flannel-lined, for holding the wash cloth, toothbrush and any other article that is damp. This case will appeal to travelers by boat or rail, as it folds up and goes into a small space.

The latest fad in the necklet field is for jade beads. This is developing now in the States and most probably will follow at a later date on this market.

NO GUESSERS WANTED.

When I hire a man I want a hustler—a man who will really do something. I presume most employers are the same way, says a writer in Department Store That.

For five or six months I have been trying to get a place for an acquaintance of mine—and I cannot get him a thing. He's a good man, too—knows his business, is a good worker and has as clean a record as any man on earth.

The whole trouble in his case is that he says: "I guess so." And he does not say it promptly or positively, but sort of drawly way, like this: "I— guess— so." Now that doesn't sound as if it amounted to much, and it has knocked him out of a round dozen of good jobs.

An employers asks: "Can you do this?" The answer is: "I guess so." That settles it right there—it's not guesses the employer wants. He wants to know. You may have ability to burn, but unless you can show some confidence in yourself you will get little chance to demonstrate the fact. Don't guess—be sure, and, being sure, don't be afraid to say so.

TORONTO CUSTOM TAILORING CO.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Toronto Custom Tailoring Company Ltd., Toronto, with a capital of $40,000, divided into $50 shares. The incorporators were: Walter D. Gregory and H. F. Gooderham, barristers-at-law; Robert Weir, insurance agent; John F. Boland, student-at-lay, and Ida B. Lynn, bookkeeper, all of Toronto. The object of the company is "to buy, sell and manufacture clothing and clothing material, and deal in all kinds of articles and things which may be required for any of the purposes of the said business."

"I hope you try to push business, John, even after office hours," said a coal dealer to his clerk.

"I do, sir," replied John. "I call upon a different friend every night and never leave till late, and see that they have a big fire going all the time."

OUR LONDON LETTER

Another convincing proof of the satisfactory progress of the trade revival in the Old Country is the publication of the annual balance sheets of the leading retail London firms. Of the twenty-one companies included in this report only two or three of these record a decline in trade of any consequence, and in these cases special reasons are given explaining the decrease. The combined net profit of these firms totals £811,100, or $4,055,500 for 1906-7, as compared with $3,784,500 in 1905-6, or equivalent to a return of 12½ per cent. this year against 11½ the year before upon the aggregate paid-up share capital.

There is little doing on the London silk market, as there is little stock on hand, and prices are not such as admit of much business.

From reports received from the Yokohama Foreign Board of Trade, a considerable advance has taken place on that market. The business done is chiefly in contracts, as there is very little silk for present shipment, and what is available is of indifferent quality. A good deal of business is now being done in advance contracts, and many reelers are now pledged for the whole of their new season's produce.

Bradford.

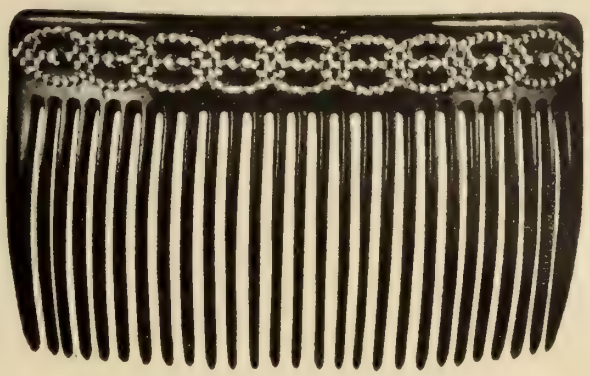
The best Spring season in years, is the general report of the trade here, and there is little doubt that every loom for which a weaver can be obtained is running to the full limit of its capacity.

Tweeds have been again the big sellers this Spring, but they have been produced from finer yarns. Owing to the fact that the season opened late, and that the mills were extra busy, repeats have been difficult to obtain. Mohairs in black and colors have also been in good request. For the Fall, milled cheviots and chevron cloths promise to be a big feature.

Figures can now be given relating to the size of the 1906-7 wool crop. Australia has marketed 1,555,000 bales and New Zealand 366,000 bales, being an increase for the two colonies of 215,000 bales over 1905-6. This is a heavy crop to finance, and while there is as yet no financial pressure apparent the danger period is not yet passed. When the wool year finishes on June 30th next Australia will have turned out its record clip, notwithstanding the fact that the sheep returns are still over 20,000,000 behind that of the early nineties.

Belfast.

Spinners' rates now are nearly up to those obtained during the American Civil War, but the demand for yarns is still considerable and contracts are reported not just for 1908, but into 1909 also. The demand for linens, from Canada and Australia, is increasing.



Nottingham.

Manufacturers here are still complaining of the shortage of the yarn supply, and claim that this is the underlying cause of much of the delay in lace deliveries. They also claim that it is the Lancashire cotton spinner that is getting the cream of the profit out of the present lace boom. The curtain and heavy lace makers are specially had hit by the present yarn situation, as they use more yarn in producing their goods than those who manufacture the lighter laces.

GEO. H. EVANS & SON

Mills are fully occupied, and there is still a big call for Nottingham goods. Cotton nets are free sellers, and tulles are in active demand in black, white and all the fashionable shades.

Manchester.

The boom in the cotton trade continues, but it is the spinners who are profiting most by the present high prices, and manufacturers who have to buy their yarn are only making a narrow margin of profit. Mills, however, are busy and orders now in course of execution were in many cases placed months ago. Just at the present moment most of the markets abroad are fairly well supplied, and though business is satisfactory, no orders of any magnitude are coming forward. Reports are current from time to time that the spinners' position is weakening, but stiff rates are still demanded for good twists, and early deliveries of wanted numbers are difficult to obtain.

The making-up trade is extremely busy.

THE ORME FASHIONERS, LTD.

An Ontario charter has been granted The Orme Fashioners, Ltd., Toronto, with a capital stock of $20,000, divided into $10 shares. The incorporators were: Mabel A. Orme, married women; Wellesley R. Hampden, engineer; John E. Roelofson, broker; Andrew H. Pepall, manager, and James H. Fitzgerald, merchant, all of Toronto. The object of the company is "to manufacture and sell form perfectors, chafe preventors, toilet articles, corsets, abdominal supporters, belts, hose and skirt supporters, and all articles of wearing apparel."

Discourage the Plain Sailor.

Many Sailor Shapes are Selling, and Among Others the Banded Sailor.

Many sailor shapes are coming to the front now, besides the mushroom sailor, which has sold all Spring. The new shapes are mostly large and with a slightly drooping brim. These made a pretty and practical Summer shape, and are trimmed in a great variety of styles. Stiff wings and stiff taffeta bows make the best trimming, but wings and velvet ribbon, fancy ribbon, birds and fruit and flowers are also used.

The trimmed sailor, coming as it does this season, at a late period, offers a good method for adding to its length. These hats can be attractively trimmed with millinery materials that the department is anxious to clear out, and by this means smart little creations at tempting prices can be produced.

These hats can be used to serve two purposes. They can be made to clear out stock, and also to hold the trade to a later date in the department.

The banded sailor is again making its appearance, but it must be said that it is by no means freely shown. Milliners are wise in handling this hat in a cautious manner, for when it obtains a strong hold it simply kills off all other trade. A limited number shown and sold as an outing hat at the end of the season may net some profit, but do not show this hat until the season is well nigh over or you will have difficulty in clearing out the remaining portion of your trimming stock. The banded sailor is death to the sale of trimmings.

Mid-Season Styles.

The New Models in Paris and New York Furnish Ideas for Fall.

The season has, on the whole, been a fairly satisfactory one, in spite of the backward Spring. Millinery sales are always greatly influenced by the state of the weather, but in spite of all drawbacks experienced, many authorities place the selling record higher than that of the Spring of 1906. There is no doubt, if the weather had been anywhere near normal, that there would have been a much larger trade done.

In some respects the conditions were, perhaps, opportune, for if the anticipated demand had fully materialized the difficulties in the way of supplying goods would have been enormous.

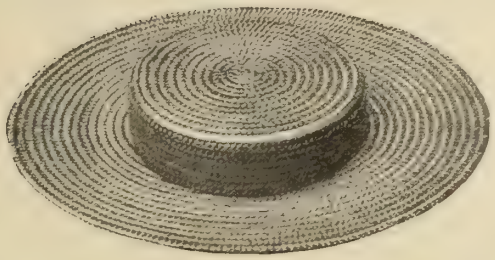
In the retail trade, though Summer models and outing novelties are still coming to hand, and the selling of these lines is by no means over, end-of-the-season tactics are being resorted to. Though the knife has not as yet gone in very deep, efforts are being made to force out ends of lines and slow sellers, and certain goods are being kept well to the fore, and quietly but persistently pushed.

The season has reached such a stage that novelties put forward in the big fashion centres are of great importance now, as it is upon these models that the advance ideas for Fall will be based.

There never was a millinery season in which it was easier to gratify the individual taste, in spite of the fact that the mushroom is all-pervading. Though Summer models are decidedly large, small shapes are also seen. Hats may be either a veritable flower garden, or may be trimmed with wings and ostrich plumes. Feathers and flowers are occasionally used in the one hat, though it must be confessed that the best milliners do not advocate this union.

The dernier cri in hat trimmings just now seems to be grasses of every description. They are usually seen in dull shades of green, and are used in bunches, and without much regard to what the rest of the trimmings may be. To illustrate : a hat of fine black crin, short in front, but widening out considerably at the left side and back, had for the only trimming, around the moderately high crown, a twist of soft chiffon taffeta ribbon in framboise color, while small French roses of the same shade were massed under the brim, and directly over the face was a bunch of twisted green grasses.

Some of the later hats are very quaint in outline, many being on the poke, the cloche or bell shape.



Shot silk is coming to the front in Paris, both for making up into hats, and for trimmings. The cloche hats are made of pleatings and shirrings, etc., of silk, while while chous of the same garland the crown. If the hat is of straw the silk is a contrast. Broad-brimmed crin hats are lined with soft silk of a contrasting color. This lining is most frequently seen when the hat is either white or black, and not only does it contrast with the straw itself, but also with the color of the trimmings. Thus a hat of white straw will be lined with pale yellow silk, and will have a wreath of deep pink roses and foliage around the crown.

The high back and cache peigne is just about played out, and the bandeaux, when there is one, is either in front or at the left side. The manner of wearing both hat and hair has quite altered. The hat is worn tilted back now, some looking as though they were ready to drop off at the back of the head. A new shape that is beginning to be favored, is much like a large saucer, and has the brim rolled back onto the crown, a little to the left side of the front, and held by a chou of ribbon, or a round bunch of roses or other flowers. The new hats are trimmed, for the most part, at the back, and large bows of ribbon or feather mounts are employed. When ostrich is used, as many as seven, or even ten, short plumes are put in a row from the foot of the crown, and slanting over to the brim. Ostrich feathers, of about ten or twelve inches, are very much used. Three or four, often form the sole trimming of a hat. One way is to place them together in an upright mount. They are only stitched at the base, and are allowed to twist and turn with every movement of the wearer. Very many shaded ostrich feathers are used, and these are shaded in a new way now. The centre of the plume is of one solid color, and the edges are in transitions of shades of a contrasting color. Should the interest in shaded feathers grow, we may expect that they will form a feature of Fall millinery.

Notwithstanding the fact that many feathers are used, flowers keep their place. Though rose-trimmed hats are very much seen, other flowers are coming into greater prominence. Field flowers, such as clover, primroses, cowslips, buttercups, wild strawberry blossoms, and fruit, ferns, etc., and even dandelions and thistles, are also fashionable.

AFTER THE SHUTTERS ARE UP

A small office boy, who had worked in the same position for two years on a salary of twelve shillings a week, finally plucked up enough courage to ask for an increase in wages.

"How much more would you like to have?" inquired his employer.

"Well," answered the lad, "I don't think eight shillings more a week would be too much."

"Well, you seem to be rather a small boy to be earning a pound a week," remarked his employer.

"I suppose I do. I know I'm small for my age," the boy explained, "but, to tell the truth, since I've been here I haven't had time to grow."

He got the rise.

"I ran across a man here who is worth his weight in gold, if not in precious stones," said a guest at one of the hotels. "If I were in business in Manchester I would get that man if I had to chloroform and abduct him. The way I discovered his merits was this: I was standing in a shop down the street, waiting for my wife to decide what she didn't want when a tailor-made girl walked up and asked to see some golf clubs. The young man behind the counter showed her several, and in a few moments she found one that suited her, and went away with it under her arm."

"'Are there many golf players in Manchester?' I asked after she had gone.

"'Oh, yes; quite a number,' replied the clerk, affably.

"'Have you got golf links here?' I continued, getting interested.

"A look of real pain crossed the young man's face.

"'I am very sorry,' he said, 'very sorry, but the fact is we sold our last golf links this morning. However, we have ordered a new stock,' he added, brightening up, 'and they will be here in a few days. Which did you wish, the plain or the—er—fancy links?'

"A man like that is beyond price, sir; perfectly invaluable. Ten years hence I expect to find him a merchant prince."

"It is right to have a certain amount of ambition," said the school-teacher loftily, to a class of boys. "Every self-respecting boy and man should aim at a certain position and not be content until he gets there. Some men's ambition has proved their ruin as they have taken a pride in the very wickedness which has helped them to achieve their object. I'm quite sure all of you sitting here have a healthy and innocent ambition. Now, Tommy," he said to a bright, intelligent-looking lad whom he had often subdued by "fixing him with his eye," "what is your ambition?"

"Please, sir, I'd like to have people tremble and quiver like aspen leaves at the bare mention of my name!"

A certain busy merchant, almost worried to death by the persistent attention of a local life insurance agent, suddenly wheeled round in his chair and demanded:

"Is your life insured?"

"Of course, sir!"

"In the case of your death who benefits?"

"My wife, sir!"

"H'm. Send your wife to me."

Rather puzzled, the agent withdrew, but being a man who did not stick at trifles, he prevailed upon his wife to call on the merchant, who was sure, he said, to "do something big in the end."

"Mrs. Jones," remarked the merchant when the lady called, "I understand your husband's life is insured?

"That is so."

"And that you would be entitled to claim in the event of his death?"

"Certainly."

"Then, madam, if you can prevail upon your husband to visit me once more—only once, mind—I'll see that you don't have long to wait for your money. That's all. Good morning."

The insurance agent didn't call again.

"Here y'are now; two packages for two-pence!" yelled a seedy-looking envelope dealer in Holborn.

"Here y'are, this way; two packages for a penny!" howled another envelope dealer, almost hustling his fellow-merchant off the pavement.

Women out shopping noted the difference in prices, and soon bought out the two-for-a-penny man. Then both peddlers drifted round the corner, and the one who had sold no envelopes divided his stock with the other, remarking with a chuckle:

"It works beautifully, old pal, don't it?"

"Gibbs is in business for himself, isn't he?" asked Jenkins.

"For himself? Well, I should say he is in business for the benefit of an extravagant family," replied Yabsley.

Season's Hats Varied in Form and Trimming — The "Robes d' Interieur" — Evening Gown of Extravagant Novelty—The Tailor-Mades.

This season's hats continue to be as varied and diverse in form and trimming as when the first models appeared. No one particular shape has become, (as is often the case), universally adopted. Even the mushroom, or "cloche," as it is called here, rapidly shared public favor with the "mi-cloche," and now the latest shapes have the brim sharply raised at the left side, or made with becoming "undulations." Of course, the "cloche" is still much worn and on certain women, with the coiffure well dressed and very "bouffaret" it is particularly smart. The farette, or bandeau, is very slight and only employed with a view to utility, to keep the hat at a correct angle and to permit of it being securely fastened. One of the latest fads is to have a band of a becoming shade of satin sewn under the brim, carried all round the outer edge. This leads to straw and crin hats being made with a colored straw edging or lining to the brim. The idea has taken well and is likely to develop. Many of the round, wide trimmed hats are worn quite back on the head, making an aurcole to the face and this lining to the brim shows up with good effect, even under a "cloche" form. Other styles, also worn far back, are built with a very narrow brim in front or the usual brim bent back, or, in the case of small shapes which verge on the toque, with absolutely no brim at all. In this case it commences at the sides, gradually increasing in size to the back, where feathers "en panache," or heavy bows of ribbon, seem to weigh it down with their weight. Well worn, this little lat is particularly smart. For trimmings, many flowers are employed, especially roses, peonies and such like large blooms that can be arranged in large bunches covering a considerable part of the hat. Another flower that is very popular is the little pervanche, arranged in sprays or garlands. Certain wild flowers of the same description are employed in the same way. Lilac, digitales and wistaria are also much seen.

No. 2.

The wistaria is arranged in sprays over the top of a shape that is innocent of a crown. Feathers of great beauty and exaggerated length are much used on dress hats and with them are often employed a spray of large tips, so worked as to have a slight resemblance to a weeping willow. Aigrettes also are much in favor.

Motor hats follow to a very slight extent the general trend of fashion, but to be practical they must always be small and close-fitting to the head. Trimmings are limited to ribbons and wings or quills. Gauze is the only practical material for veils, as tulle or lace let too much dust through. A rather smart model, called the "Mercury," is a long-shaped toque, with two small wings fixed on the top at each side, pointing backwards.

The gowns which, at the present moment, lend themselves most readily to "Fantaisie" are those described as "robes d' interieur." These are quite a complicated and often as light and "vapoureuse" as a ball dress. Made of cloudlike gauzes, lace, soft silk and such like fabrics, they are certainly not made for wear, but anything more graceful and becoming for home wear can hardly be imagined. A good model is of gaze-de-soie, "blur-nattier" over a liberty blue, which is veiled with white chiffon. This chiffon, between the gauze and the silk, gives a curiously soft effect much in request just now. The style is a little "grec," with very high waist, the skirt being gathered slightly all round and hanging in heavy folds round the feet. The wide waist belt, which takes the place of a waistcoat, is of blue liberty drawn into folds. Above this is a little lawn vest trimmed with Valenciennes and encrustations of lace, through which is threaded narrow blue velvet ribbon. Over this dress is worn a very small bolero, not touching in front by two inches, and reaching only to the edge of the high belt. This bolero is quite round in form and edged with a band of Pastel Blue Cloth, Cloak and Cape.

Alencon lace, which again is ornamented with flowers "d' Irlande." The bolero is continued over the shoulders without a seam, forming short, bell-shaped sleeves, from under which shows a baby puff of lawn and lace, gathered into a narrow taffeta band just above the elbow. An extravagant novelty in the way of evening gowns is seen in a white crepe de chine model, made Directoire form. The trimming consists of an embroidery carried out in real ostrich feathers, representing large sprays of conventional flowers and leaves, almost covering the sides and front of the skirt. Each thread of the feather is taken separately, the head passed through the crepe de chine and the rest, to the tip, stitched down in a scroll design, much like the spring of a watch. The back is decorated with the same floral scroll, but in this case it is carried out in silks and mousseline. The high pleated belt is in chiffon taffetas, with a large taffeta rosette in front. Round the decolte and at the head of the sleeves is a cable formed of the feathers and the edge of the skirt shows a heavy band of feathers, with a narrow "depassant" of the crepe de chine.

The sketches show the extensive use to which ribbon is put. No. 1 is of a glace straw, natural shade, trimmed with gigantic bows of black satin ribbon, resting on the brim. At the back of the hat are two large, red roses and their foliage. No. 2 is all black, the brim having a black satin border lining and large bows of the same satin. No. 3 is a "cloche" in white paille de rize, with pale blue satin band and bow, and very long, white feather, with pale blue tips.

Vetement in Iron Grey Tussor, trimmed tucked taffetas of the same shade, the two fronts forming a cross-over vest.

In tailor-mades and working costumes one sees less novelty. There are, however, a few points of interest to note. Some of the models have "entre-deux" introduced at the seams formed of narrow tucks of the same material or of taffetas "ton sur ton." These are arranged either horizontally or vertically. One jacket opens in front over a white chimesette, with pleated front (as is shown in the first sketch) and short cloth waistcoat, fastened with one button at the waist and cut to fall over the shoulder line, the edge of which runs into the seam, which is continued down each side at the bust on each side. This seam opens in a point augmenting in width to the edge of the jacket, where it measures about two inches. This is filled in with very narrow horizontal tucks of taffeta. The two corresponding seams at the back are treated in the same way, and a five-inch-deep band of the same tucks is carried all round the skirt about half a foot from the hem. I have seen the same idea carried out at the back of a costume, only this time the tucks are vertical, the entre deux being carried from the waist line to the edge of jacket, and being about four inches in width, rounded off at the top. The back of the skirt is treated in the same way, the empiecement reaching from top to bottom. Three-quarter length jackets are undoubtedly "la mode." A model of a sacque coat of this order is made with a deep shoulder empiecement formed of tabs, each tab being brought to a point and finished off with a fancy button. The sleeves, which are slightly fulled into the shoulder seams, are mounted with the same tabs and finished with gauntlet cuffs. The roll collar is very deep and continues in reveres to just above the waist line. At the edge of this coat, which is carried out in beige-colored kersey, are four rows of stitching.

Sketch 4 represents a pastel blue cloth coat made with cape. An embroidered stole is carried round the neck to the waist, from which falls a short cape just falling over the shoulder line. The cape proper falls in folds and terminates in a rounded point at the back. Narrow bands of black braiding are carried round the edge of the cape and at the waist. From half way down the jacket the seam is left open and headed by an embroidery. This cloak opens over a full vest of embroidered tulle over taffeta. No. 5 represents a little garment, very popular just now, half jacket and half cape, which the French describe as a "vetement." Carried out in iron or elephant grey tussor, it is ornamented with bands of tucked taffeta, ton sur ton. The buttons are cloth-edged taffeta, and the glands, which decorate the points, are carried out in grey silk. The two fronts are cut with long ends, which are simply crossed in front and fastened by means of hooks underneath the cape at the back. Many of these little "vetements," which lend themselves readily to the creator's fancy, are being worn just now.

The lingerie petticoats are very dainty and wonderful works of art. Numberless flounces are edged with valenciennes, then an embroidered flounce encrusted with insertions of valenciennes, outlining the principal notes of the embroidered design. A wide ribbon passed through an insertion of lace and embroidery, with scalloped heading fastens the flounce to the top part of the petticoat. Many of these lingerie flounces are worn with a silk top. Both flounce and skirt will have a buttonholed insertion as heading, so that the two can be easily laced together and the flounce can be quickly taken off to be washed.

Silks

Fall Business Well Advanced — Good Orders Placed for Fancy Silks.

There is a decidedly better outlook before the silk department, and buyers generally are placing better orders than for the past few seasons. In fancy silks, plaids, and also fancy stripes, some of them in rather bold designs, are selling. There are also some warp prints in demand. These silks are wanted for waisting purposes. Black taffeta is selling fairly well, and in plain silks, satin-finished lustrous silks, such as messaline, and also satin duchesse are selling well.

Pongees in the natural color, and also dyed, as well as other rough weaves of silk, are in good request. Foulards have sold well, but the demand has been somewhat restricted by the scarcity of the plain cloth.

"Yes, I used to be in the insurance business. I once got a man to take out a £10,000 policy only about a week before he happened to be killed. He was a mighty hard chap to land, too. I had to talk to him for nearly six months before I got him."

"That was rough on the company. I suppose you regretted, after it was all over, that your persuasive powers were so good?"

"Um—no, I never felt sorry about it. I married the widow."

An extremely wealthy merchant, notorious for his miserly habits, while hurrying from the bank jolted a roll of notes out of his pocket. On arriving at his office the loss was immediately discovered, but his lamentations were speedily ended by the entrance of a boy who had found the missing notes. Carefully counting the roll, the owner put it in his pocket.

"My son," he said benignly to the boy, "I am rejoiced to see that you are guided by lofty principles, and as a proof of my approbation shall refrain from charging you interest for the time you have had my money!"

Still Higher Prices — Present Demand Taxes Stock — The Delivery Question — Fall Orders.

In retail circles trade has been fairly good considering the backward weather. Heavy goods have not sold as well as was anticipated. The demand for whites and grays has been fair. Prints and ginghams have sold well in some lines. Considering the season, flannelettes and wrapperettes have met with marked favor. Retailers find deliveries away behind, owing to the mills being filled up with orders. A large retailer, in conversation with a Review representative, stated that the price of cotton goods had, within the last month, advanced from five to twenty-five per cent. and that there was every likelihood of higher prices. In view of these conditions, merchants who have not already anticipated requirements should do so at once, and order liberally, as no relief from the present high rates is in sight.

In spite of cool weather May was a very busy month with jobbers on all desirable lines of staples. As far as manufacturers are concerned, the Summer season is at an end, and the extremely small number of jobs available well illustrates the present acute condition of the market. No jobs worth speaking of have been offered. Repeats have been placed freely, but on many lines mills will not accept orders except for September and October delivery. As most of the wholesale houses take stock on or about the 1st of June there have been a large number of buyers in Montreal and Toronto.

White and gray cottons continue active at wholesale, but deliveries are away behind schedule. The cotton market is very firm, and many manufacturers' agents predict that raw cotton will soon reach as high a level as 14c. per pound. Some mills have withdrawn quotations entirely. Demand runs strongly just now on cambrics. This is due to the fact that the average lady is now busy with her Summer gowns. The demand for white cottons is growing continually, and their adaptability to sizing makes values appear better. White and gray cottons continue to be very scarce articles. White cotton is estimated to be the scarcest thing in the present market. On all hands jobbers find the retail trade inclined to book up on all cotton goods as far ahead as wholesalers are willing to accept orders.

With the wholesalers, the print and gingham trade has been satisfactory throughout the Spring months, notwithstanding the backward weather. There are few jobs or odd lots of these goods offered this season as the demand has almost invariably exceeded the supply. At retail, many merchants are having difficulties in sorting up on lines which they have not covered in sufficient quantities when buying earlier in the season.

Canadian mills are turning out many new and original designs, with an improved finish. As a consequence good business should be looked forward to.

The Lining Trade.

The lining trade shows the largest advance in price of any of the staple goods, mainly owing to the large proportion of Egyptian cotton used. This is fully appreciated by the retailers as regards sateens, on which cloths the trade is perhaps better posted than on others. An important feature of the lining trade at the present writing is the willingness of many retail merchants to place orders at an advance of from fifteen to twenty per cent. Deliveries of these goods continue slow and they still remain very scarce owing to the increasing demand. Schreinered and mercerized cloths continue to sell well.

Wrapperettes.

The business on these goods, owing to the considerable advance in prices, was generally expected to be slow. Contrary to this, however, bookings compare very favorably with those of last year. The general advance on most lines, as compared with figures ruling a year ago, average from fifteen to twenty per cent. Patterns and colorings run strongly on light effects, although dark tones, as usual, have done a larger share of business. There seems to be a decided feeling for fancy tartans, in printed goods as well as in the staple woven lines. The big rise in the prices of all lines of linens has caused a much brisker demand than usual at this season of the year.

Flannelettes.

Fall orders in flannelettes have been good. Wholesalers' stocks are in good condition, with few exceptions. Deliveries for Fall will be all right to those who have placed orders early. The present situation shows an advance of from fifteen to twenty per cent. over last season's prices. Some manufacturers have withdrawn lines, while others have advanced them one-quarter and one-half cent. Other mills will not book an order, except for Spring 1908 delivery, and then only that prices which may then prevail be paid. In Saxony flannelettes there is a growing feeling from season to season for a larger proportion of whites. Staple patterns and colors are predominating. Jobbers have placed well.

CANADIAN COLORED COTTON COMPANY.

At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the Canadian Colored Cotton Company, Montreal, one of the most interesting points under discussion was the cost of the selling of products of the mills. This company remunerates its selling agent by a commission on sales, while other concerns carry on business under their own direction, apparently at much less cost. There was no immediate result of the discussion on that point, other than that the board of directors promised to consider the matter. The shareholder who introduced the matter was of the opinion that the company stood a good chance of saving money by following the example of other companies.

The financial statement was considered a satisfactory one by the shareholders, the net earnings of the fiscal year, ended March 31st, being $252,000. After paying interest on the bonds, and 4 per cent. on the common stock, there was carried to the rest account about $65,000.

David Morrice, the president, occupied the chair, and the following officers were re-elected for the year: David Morrice, president; Sir George Drummond, vice-president; E. S. Clouston, T. King, Hon. F. L. Beique, George Caverhill and D. Morrice, Jr., directors.

Retail Trade — Recent Price Advance — The Fall Trade —Place Orders Early.

Early in May the carpet business was at its height in retail circles, and throughout the month it continued so. Merchants everywhere report excellent business in almost all lines. Among large retailers, at the present writing, there is seemingly no cessation in sales, which, as stated above, have been enormous. This year, viewing the trade as a whole, an enormous increase in business in all lines is noticeable. People have had more money to spend in renewing carpets, rugs and floor coverings generally.

In spite of the fact that rugs have been in such demand, three-quarter goods are still to the fore. Manufacturers report a very large business, and that most jobbers have placed well in all lines. Wholesalers report good trade throughout the season. This, of course, signifies that trade at retail in three-quarter goods has been good. Axminsters, Brussels and Wiltons continue to hold first position. In the cheaper grades a much better feeling has been experienced for tapestries and wool carpets. At the present time, Brussels in three-quarter piece goods is largely used for bedrooms. Wiltons are having preference over the others for halls and stairs and two-tone Axminsters are in demand for drawing rooms.

The colors selling both in rugs and carpets cannot be said to show anything particularly striking, or very much different from what was expected. Light chintz effects, as decorations of the present time, harmonize well with the soft tones and shades in these qualities; greens in the softer tones and effects, and cream grounds, all of which, as previously stated in The Review, were good, and continue to hold first position.

Owing to the upward tendency of prices in the cotton, wool and jute markets, and everything else used in the manufacture of carpets, domestic manufactured goods have advanced recently three to five per cent. British manufacturers have found it necessary to advance their lines 2d. to 3d. per yard. The advance is a substantial one and applies to the various lines of Axminsters, Brussels and Wiltons alike. With British manufacturers the season just passed is stated to have been fairly good for the better qualities of Wiltons and Brussels. At the same time the keener demand has been for the various grades of Axminsters.

Canadian travelers are, almost without exception, all out, as they usually take to the road before the English representatives. The prospects for Fall so far are very bright. Brussels and Wiltons have sold rapidly, with wools and union carpets closely following in the cheaper grades. Latest reports from British travelers in Canada are that the demand is not confined to any particular line, but is general. Brussels, Wiltons, and especially Axminsters are to the fore in the better grade goods. Velvets and tapestries are selling well in the cheaper lines.

For Fall, reds, blues and greens are shown in floral effects, and the ever staple oriental designs are prominent.

In view of the domestic and foreign conditions in the carpet trade, merchants should anticipate requirements and order liberally, as no relief from the present high prices is in sight. Just now prices remain firm for Fall.

Rugs

Continued Demand for Rugs—Lines Especially Suited to the Summer Trade.

A general demand for rugs of all varieties still goes on. Manufacturers are very often hard put to supply their customers with these. The demand is not confined to any particular line, but is general. Everything in the shape of a rug is required. Wiltons and Smyrnas are favorites at present. These two rugs are of domestic manufacture, and the manufacturers claim a superiority over any others made, to sell at the same price. At the present time there is a comfortable share of business being done in rugs suitable for the Summer season. Ingrain art squares come under this heading, as do matting rugs and also rag carpet rugs.

For Fall. domestic manufacturers have turned out many new designs and color effects, both in rugs and carpets. Many elaborate patterns, which have heretofore been found in only the most expensive lines, are now being used in some of the medium grades.

Prices on rugs will remain firm for Fall.

A NEW FLOOR COVERING CONCERN.

Kitchen & Co. is the name of a new retail floor covering concern recently opened up in Montreal. This firm occupies the large establishment recently vacated by Thos. Ligget, Ltd., general housefurnishings, 604-606 St. Catherine street west. Mr. Kitchen, late buyer of the T. Eaton Co., Toronto, is sole proprietor of the enterprise. He was in the employ of this house for seven years, and was advanced by the company to the position of manager and buyer of the house furnishing department. Mr. Kitchen is young and aggressive, and his experience provides him with excellent qualifications for his new undertaking. Thus equipped, and with ample capital, he should reap a good measure of success.

The store in which the firm will carry on business is a handsome edifice of iron frame construction, having a frontage of 60 feet and a depth of 90. Its four stories represent a total height of about 100 feet, the ceilings on all the floors being exceptionally lofty.

The basement will be devoted to the display of oil-cloths and linoleums. The ground floor will be given over entirely to carpets, and the first floor to British, domestic and oriental rugs. The cutting and sewing rooms will find permanent quarters on the second floor.

J. Street, of McFaul's, Seaforth, died last week. We have a pleasant recollection of our meeting with Mr. Street when last we visited Seaforth.

Wall Papers

Wall Paper Situation Very Encouraging — Canadian Manufacturers Making Big Efforts for 1908.

Urged to greater efforts by the success of last year's designs, the wall paper manufacturers have developed patterns for the 1908 trade which promise exceptionally well. The beginning of June will see many travelers on the road with the new lines. It is almost impossible to enter into a discussion on the new offerings at this date, but another month will unfold the whole range. In anticipation of a greater business even than the present season's, Canadian manufacturers are putting themselves in readiness to meet the utmost demands.

The staple cheap lines do not show any great changes for the coming season. There are the usual number of new patterns, and some good designs rather out of the usual will be shown.

A few years ago mostly all wall papers were imported into Canada. Now, Canadian manufacturers are able to supply goods which in many cases far outdistance imported lines at the same price.

SOME OF THE NEW LINES.

The following information has been furnished us in regard to the new lines of one wall paper manufactory:

"One of the newest things is the metal background, which has so suddenly broken into favor in the leading art centres of the world. Chamber decorations in all grades, from charming Dresden stripes to elaborate crown effects in unique and handsome colorings are shown. Paneling in two-third decoration styles has been so cordially accepted during the past season that the new samples will have some elegant lines. Scenery friezes properly colored loom large. Silks and duplex papers have their right places, and in addition to the large line of well colored everyday goods, new ceilings in ivory and white will be shown in large variety. We were never so busy before, and we were never so enthusiastic as we are over this season's samples."

Curtains and Draperies

Good Retail Trade — The Summer Demand — The Price Situation.

At retail, trade in the curtain and drapery departments has never been better. As April, May and June are three of the best selling months of the year in this line, many retailers who anticipated their wants and placed orders early were in a position to meet the demand and reaped the benefits. On account of the great many removals throughout the last few months, many private houses are being refurnished, and it can be said with the utmost truth that curtains and draperies are having close attention in this respect. At the present time there is a general demand, no particular line or lines being favored. In the better class goods Brussels and Swiss effects are selling well. Plain cream and plain white Madras muslins, from 35c. to 75c. per yard are still having a fair good sale. A noticeable feature is the amount of these goods used for halls, dining rooms and sitting rooms. The guipure lace curtains have sold well with most merchants. The Summer trade is being catered to extensively by many progressive merchants who see that good business is awaiting development in this direction. There is an increasing tendency on the part of the public to use summer curtains, particularly noticeable among the holiday loving public who visit the sea shore and other resorts. The brisbis curtains are better than ever. These are obtainable in silk, cotton, wool and in silk and wool. They are shown at retail in a variety of patterns, all of which are very pretty. Linen taffetas, for bedrooms, and portiers in velours are also to the fore. Plain taffetas are shown by many city stores. Another strong feature of this season's business is the sale of valance and lambrequins, trimmed with galoons and having tapestry borders.

As regards colors this Spring, the light shades are seen more frequently than the dark. Creams and the like are favored most.

With the exception of the British manufactured goods, deliveries at retail have been up to the mark. Canadian jobbers have not found deliveries on time, and on this account many orders are slightly behind schedule. The price advance on most lines, as compared with figures ruling a year ago, average from ten to twenty-five per cent., with an upward tendency for Fall.

Oilcloths and Linoleums

Samples of Linoleum Up to the Mark—Prices Will be Firm.

Fall samples of Canadian lines of oilcloths and linoleums in the hands of the wholesale dry goods trade show the latest patterns and colorings in a number of designs. Jobbers are enthusiastic over the range, and on this account a large business is anticipated. Prices will be firm.

In retail realms inlaid linoleums continue to be popular. Cork carpets, both plain and printed, are also selling well, but natural cork continues to be the favorite.

Manufacturers of imported linoleums state that a better grade of cork and linseed oil has been used in their goods for Fall. The patterns comprise all the latest designs and colorings.

HOUSEFURNISHINGS.

William Swift, with T. F. Firth & Sons, Ltd., Brighouse and Heckmondwik, England, carpet manufacturers, is in Montreal at the present time. He will remain in the city until a permanent agent is appointed to fill the position of the late John Johnston, who had represented the above mentioned firm in Canada for a number of years. Mr. Swift is at present located at 208 Coristine Building.

A new customs regulation provides that where cash discount is specified in an invoice it shall be deducted and duty reckoned on the net amount. This will mean a good deal to all importers who pay cash.

DEATH OF R. R. STEVENSON.

In the death of R. R. Stevenson, at his residence in Montreal, Thursday, May 23, the Canadian dry goods trade, and cotton circles in particular, loses one of its representative men. His death was not unexpected, as he had suffered from a lingering illness for more than two years and retired from active business last March. Mr. Stevenson was 59 years of age and for 28 years was a leading figure in Canadian cotton circles. He was associated with C. H. Blackader, under the style of Stevenson, Blackader & Co., selling agents for the Montreal Cotton Co. for a great many years and the Dominion Cotton Mills Co. for a few years previous to the formation of the Dominion Textile Co. He was a native of Belfast, Ireland, and came to Canada about thirty-five years ago. His early Canadian experience was gained with the old dry goods firm of W. J. McMaster & Co., Montreal. Later he was associated with D. Morrice, Sons & Co., and in 1880 joined with Mr. Blackader in forming the firm of Stevenson, Blackader & Co., which played a conspicuous part for many years in the Canadian dry goods trade. Of a genial disposition, he made a large number of friends. Mr. Stevenson was prominent socially and was an enthusiastic member of the St. Lawrence Yachting Club, and also of the well known St. James' Club. For many years he was volunteer organist at St. George's church, and took an active interest in various musical matters. He leaves a widow, three sons and one daughter, the sons being S. W. Stevenson, mfgs. agent, Montreal; Rev. Herbert Stevenson, Gateshead, England, and Reginald Stevenson, at school. The funeral, which was largely attended by Montreal business men, took place on Saturday, May 25.

W. R. W. Bruce, manufacturers' agent, has established an office at 242 St. James St., Montreal. Mr. Bruce has recently come to Canada from a ripe English experience. Among the firms represented are Hamilton & Young, Glasgow, with lines of Shetland hosiery and motor scarfs; Soulter & Whither, Limited, London, broad silks, and A. K. Dyson & Co., Ltd., Manchester, prints and all kinds of cotton goods.

Men's Furnisher and Clothier

Hats.

Weather Has Greatly Favored the Stiff Hat Trade—Deliveries in Split Straws Hard to Get.

Backward Spring has benefited the felt hat trade considerably. It has given the dealer a chance to clean up pretty well on all felt goods, which have not been broken into by the straw hat demand as early as in former seasons. The tendency to fulness in crowns of men's hard hats have been the most noticeable feature in regard to style change this season. This fulness also made it possible to use 15 and 18 ligne brands to good advantage. Leading wholesalers in touch with the ever changing fashions have cleaned up a very satisfactory extra business on this style.

Following up the tendencies of the past several seasons, the lighter shades of Spring hats continue to be most favored. Brown continues to be very popular, owing to the large quanities of hose and shoes of this color bought for this season.

So far straw hats have certainly looked very much out of place in the window displays, yet they remind the passer-by of the fact that the time will come when the ever popular greeting will be "Is it hot enough for you ?"

Deliveries of split straws are extremely hard to get and the indications point to a complete shortage before the season is half over.

It is a little too early to speak authoritatively of Fall as yet. The indications so far point to a big stiff hat demand and the natural tendency to follow up the most popular Spring style will no doubt hold good. The flat brim stiff hat with full crown and wide band will run into Fall lines.

ENCOURAGE SMALL PURCHASER.

A retailer expresses the opinion that the small purchaser should not be given as much consideration as the larger purchaser. He has small use for the person who buys ten cents' worth of stuff. He says :

"I have seen many a man enter a shop and buy one collar. The salesman's face would beam. He would draw forth a mirror and aid the purchaser in adjusting his cravat. In fact, in every way the merchant has impressed me as appreciating highly that man's custom when he knew absolutely that his visitor bought only when he felt it unavoidable, and then in the smallest possible quantity."

Continuing further, he says :

"I do not advocate a coarse, rough treatment of anyone, yet I believe that by his manner the merchant and his salesmen may indicate their sentiments toward those who make a continual practice of buying the smallest amount of merchandise possible to carry them through the day or week."

The merchant who makes these suggestions is referred to as a "prominent retailer." He may be prominent, but it is hard to believe he is successful. If he is successful, it must be in spite of the methods of treating customers which he advocates, provided he practices what he preaches. Certainly his suggestion as to the proper way to treat the small customer is contrary to the spirit of successful retailing to-day. The most successful retail establishments of the country are conducted on quite the opposite principle. Any member of the sales force who treated the smallest purchaser with inattention would be called up before the manager and informed that he was acting in direct opposition to the policy of the house. The store which treats the small purchaser with courtesy will certainly outdistance the one which follows the suggestion of this man.

Shirts and Collars

Every Retailer Should Endeavor to "Trade Up"—Better Profits to Himself and More Satisfaction to Customers.

There is very little new to be said just now in regard to shirts. Deliveries are still slow and will be. Retailers who failed to heed our warnings to this effect, and have had difficulty in keeping their stock in satisfactory shape, have received a lesson that will prompt early buying for Fall.

The continued cool weather has effected the retail demand very considerably, but we surely may expect good warm days pretty soon, and there are few merchants who need fear that a great deal of stock will be left on their hands.

We have strongly advocated the pushing of better lines of shirts, and have given a number of instances where persistent efforts along this line has been very successful. Stores which, a couple of years ago, could not sell a garment at more than $1.50 now have no difficulty in doing a fine trade on lines up to $2.50. At the present time it is particularly desirable, in view of the market conditions, that each one should exert himself to "trade up." In regard to this subject Men's Wear makes the following forcible remarks:

"A rise in the price of raw materials should be followed by a rise in the price asked for the finished article. It is obvious, of course, that, quality being maintained, this policy would be forced upon any retailer who did not wish to find himself landed in the bankruptcy court. The point is that many retailers do not, in face of a rise in the price of raw materials, attempt to maintain qualities. They argue that the price of the finished article must remain the same, and, therefore, what they have got to do is to take it out of the quality. We believe this policy to be absolutely wrong, except under very exceptional circumstances.

"It should be the maxim of the wise retailer that he shall sell the best possible quality that he can induce the customer to buy. Not only does this course provide a better margin of profit than catering for the cheap class of trade, but it also enables the confidence of the customer to be retained. Assume that, with raw material at a comparatively low rate, the customer has been in the habit of purchasing an article which has given him satisfaction. The price of the raw material has since his last purchase increased considerably, probably unknown to him, and the time comes when he is again in want of a similar article. He goes to the retailer, and the retailer, if he is lacking in moral courage, as we are afraid is the case with too many, gives him what is apparently the same article, but which is, as a matter of fact, very much lower in quality. The result is that the customer finds that the wearing qualities to which he has been accustomed are non-existent, and he is accordingly dissatisfied. His custom may be lost altogether. If, on the other hand, the merchant had taken the bull by the horns, explained the position straightforwardly, and given the customer the option of simply sticking to his old price or paying the necessary increase to secure the same quality, we think in most cases the increase would have been paid; the customer would have been satisfied, and the retailer have obtained a better margin of profit. The cheap-jack attitude towards business is nothing less than a curse. It is better to pay a good price for one article that will wear a stated time, and give satisfaction during that period, than to buy inferior articles which will not wear so long, and which will give dissatisfaction, and, regarded from the practical point of view, cost more. The time is now fully ripe for the outfitter and clothier to make a bid for better pay by increasing the rates of profit. If one competitor chooses to work for nothing, that is no reason why others should imitate his folly. The retailer is entitled to a fair living profit, and it is altogether a mistake to suppose that the public will refuse to pay that profit. What the customer wants is, first and last, a good article which will wear satisfactorily, and is value for money. He may be persuaded by cheapness to buy a bad article which merely appears to be value for the low price expended, but in the result he is displeased, and takes his custom elsewhere. Nobody has ever had any satisfaction out of cheap articles yet, and nobody ever will. When we say cheap in this connection, we mean goods that are shoddy goods and merely cheap on the surface. The really cheap article, of course, is the sound article, and nobody but a fool expects to buy sound articles at unsound prices. The attitude of the man who sacrifices everything to the exaggerated worship of cheapness which is practiced by many retailers, is really an insult to the customer's intelligence; and it should be understood once and for all that there are other ways in which the retailer may display enterprise than in frantic and insensate undercutting.

"What is really at the bottom of the evil to which we have alluded is, of course, the want of moral courage. In other words, to use plainer English still, it is cowardice which keeps many retail businesses struggling on in the most miserable fashion from the commencement of the year to its end. The quality of pluck is needed in retail business life just as much as it is in other spheres of activity. We do not, of course, advocate any unreasonable charges for goods; on the other hand, between charging too much and charging too little there is the middle course which should commend itself to every progressive retail firm. If a man cuts the price of everything down to the very bones, how can he allow himself a proper margin for the conduct of his business? How can he afford, if he is to get a living profit for himself and to pay decent wages to his assistants, the necessary rent for a good store, and make any provision for advertising and other expenses? Cheapness is all very well, but one can have too much of it, and whatever may be said of a policy which attaches great importance to cheap articles when the prices of raw materials are low, there is absolutely no sense in trying to sell goods at low prices when the prices of raw materials are high. The object of the retailer, we repeat, should be to induce the customer to spend as much as he possibly can on every article bought. It is quite a mistake to suppose that the customer will object to this course in the long run. There is no reason why he should, for the simple reason that he will find himself equipped with clothes that are better than those worn by less well-advised people of his acquaintance; he will gain not only by the better wearing qualities of the goods, but add an importance to his appearance, and very likely betterment to his position, which would not have beeen secured—or, at all events, so easily secured if he had made the great error of wearing cheap and nasty garments. Our advice to the retail trade, therefore, is, as far as possible, to leave the cheap jack line of business for those who want it. The margin of profit in this business is always low, the continuity of custom in the cheap trade is always much less reliable than in the better-class trade, and beyond and above all this, the satisfaction of selling a customer what you know the customer will be pleased with, is almost entirely absent.

"We do not wish these remarks to be taken as meaning that every retailer should try to do a Bond street business. What we do mean, however, is that he should get as near to the Bond street style of business as he can, having regard to the class of the public for which he caters. Upon his judgment in this connection will depend the success or other wise of the policy we advocate, but that as a policy it is the right one we have no doubt whatever."

IN A COLLAR MANUFACTORY.

The first process in the manufacturing is the unrolling of cloth loosely into large tubs of water so that it becomes bleached and unshrinkable. From these tubs the cloth passes to the drying room and is hung up in lengths on moving racks. The oscillating motion of these racks in a hot dry air has the effect of keeping whatever chemicals that have been used at the mills from resetting into the fabric in spots. The soaking previously done to the material in the tubs has made the fabric softer and more pliable and takes out any wrinkles, so that it becomes easier for handling in the laundry. From the drying room the cloth is refolded and taken to the cutting room and is spread out on long low tables, where the cutters lay up as many thicknesses of the fabric as their short, sharp knives will penetrate.

and laid on the "lay-ups" (as the layers of linen are called) and with one hand firmly holding the pattern the cutter runs his knife through the several thicknesses of linen and closely follows the margin of the pattern until his knife has gone clean around and cut out the twelve or fifteen layers exactly like the pattern. Separate patterns are used according to style. Only one pattern is used if the collar is a straight standing one without band. For some styles, dies of steel are used, not unlike those of an ordinary stationer or publisher for cutting reams of paper, and the process of cutting is pretty much the same. The machine, however, can only accomplish the work on certain plain styles of collars and cuffs. There are in most collars certain curves and angles on which only the skilled hands of the workman can secure the essential accuracy. As each cutting comes from the dies they are tied in bundles and passed over to the machine operators. Some sew the bands, others the front, etc., taking up the required thickness, whether it is to be 3- or 4-ply, called "lining" the collar. The next operations are the turning of the parts so that the raw edges go inward, and the smooth outward; these are then stitched around the edge.

Sewing the band comes next. To put the band seam when the band is joined to the top and then the stitching follows, necessitating two operations, done by double needles working simultaneously.

Ready to Wear Clothing

A Good System of Keeping Stock—Trade Backward on Account of Weather.

We visited a store a short time ago where a very good system is used for keeping track of ready-to-wear clothing. A stock book has columns for date received, firm from whom purchased, number, name of purchaser, date of sale, number of salesman, cost mark and selling price. When a shipment of suits is received each one is entered up separately—as "1, 2, 3, etc." When sold the tag is removed from each and the purchaser's name and salesman's number marked on it. This goes to the office and the information it contains is entered in the stock book. The chief merit of this system is, perhaps, that it enables a merchant to know who were his customers last year, and whether or not their patronage this year would indicate that they had been well satisfied. A splendid mailing list can always be obtained from the stock book.

Cool weather has made clothing trade, at retail, up to the present, extremely slow, and travelers out for sorting orders have had a hard job picking up enough business to make any kind of a showing. Merchants ordered liberally for Spring and a good deal of stock will have to be cut in price in order to clear it out.

Travelers out for Fall have done good business. The trade has never before been in such good shape, if we leave aside the backward condition of the weather this Spring. Ready-to-wear clothing has been so greatly improved that even many particular dressers are giving it some attention. They, perhaps, decide to try an overcoat, and if it suits them the difference between the price and that charged by the custom tailor will attract their steady patronage. Drawing a lesson from conditions in the States, retailers are exerting themselves to build up a nice trade, for they know that ready-to-wear clothing must before long attain about the same position that it holds across the line. In Canada it was never so well thought of. The great care of the retailer should be that he gets the best goods in the market, for every garment he sells that is not of the best class will surely do him a great deal of harm.

Boys' clothing is a line that is not given anything like the attention it should receive. Many stores doing a good trade would find it to their advantage to make a separate department for it.

SUITINGS AND STYLES.

Fancy brown suitings are expected to do well for Fall. They are very smart and snappy, in fact, among the nicest materials that have been on the market in some time. We believe they will be well received as a novelty, but just here we want to predict one of the biggest seasons for black and blue that we have ever had.

As to styles, the long sack coat seems to be solid for some time to come. It will be here for Fall. The only change will be a slight narrowing of the shoulders.

Neckwear

Browns Will Likely Have a Good Position in the Fall Lines—Three-inch Widths Will Again be Favored.

Summer neckwear has been pretty nearly all purchased and already some thought is given to Fall. Of course, nothing definite can as yet be said as to what the features of that season are to be. However, browns are again under discussion and it seems that a good deal of confidence has been expressed in them. We do not anticipate that any manufacturer hopes to make much of a stir in plain browns, but we rather like the idea of fancies in some particular shades. A very pretty effect would be a medium shade with white or cream check in raised, irregular satin cord. Other effective designs could be evolved from this idea. Fancy brown suitings will be in demand for Fall and this strengthens the feeling that neckwear of the same color will take hold pretty strong.

For some time there has been persistent talk of cutting down the widths of four-in-hands. This, of course, has been done for Summer, but we believe that for Fall public favor will demand the three-inch width, which will mean that values in the fifty cent article will be pretty poor.

Retail sales have been very poor up to the present. This condition has helped manufacturers out very materially as regards delivery, but it does not put the retailer in very good humor.

Wash goods will soon be the whole thing—if the weather permits. Some exceedingly pretty effects have been brought out.

A batwing bow is one of the season's novelties, in shepherd plaid with black or blue edging at either end. The effect is quite pretty.

GOOD WAISTCOAT TRADE.

Fancy waistcoat trade is exceedingly brisk and Canadian makers are turning out some fine, snappy goods. The new idea spoken of for Fall is to have the pattern—stripes, of course—run on the bias. The three-button waistcoat with decided dip in front is still the best seller.

News From Various Points

ST. JOHN.

The very backward season has had an injurious effect on the sale of various Spring lines, and merchants have been forced to make a sacrifice in prices in order to clear out read-to-wear goods that could not be held over. Costumes, coats and jackets have been put on the marked-down list, but even at the reduction in prices they have moved rather slowly. The lateness of the Spring, which is out of the ordinary this year, will cause a severe loss to many of the dealers, who have not been able to make good on these lines. In this particular the retailers suffer mostly, as the jobbers made their sales early in the year. Except for the backwardness of the season, which, of course, has affected wholesaler and retailer alike in many ways, the volume of businses has been very good. Summer lines are being displayed and the outlook for a busy season is very bright.

The disastrous fire that occurred on Friday, May 17, by which Macaulay Bros. & Co.'s premises on King St. suffered to the extent of upwards of a hundred thousand dollars, has brought this enterprising firm the sympathy of the entire community. The fire started a few minutes after 12 o'clock, noon, in some cottons in the basement, and about three hours later it was all over, but the handsome building in that time had sustained great damage, and thousands of dollars worth of stock was destroyed. The basement and lower floor were completely gutted, and the stock on the three upper floors was damaged by the dense clouds of thick, black smoke that poured through every portion of the structure. Three or four of the young ladies employed on the third floor in the dressmaking department had narrow escapes from suffocation and were rescued by the firemen and carried down the big extension ladder in the rear of the building.

The building is undoubtedly one of the handsomest business blocks in this city, if not in the Maritime Provinces. It is built of brownstone and brick and was thought to be of fireproof construction. The ground floor was used for general dry goods, smallwares, dress goods and silk stock, and this is practically a total loss. The first floor is devoted to ladies' ready-to-wear clothing, whitewear and millinery; the second floor has the housefurnishing department and the third is devoted to the dressmaking department and an immense reserve stock room. The basement was stored with cottons, etc.

The handsome plate glass windows, which were among the largest ever brought into America, were sacrificed by the firemen in order that they might better combat the blaze. The men's furnishings department, which was in the adjoining building, was not damaged to any great extent as the fire door between was closed as soon as possible, though not before the smoke had affected some of the stock.

The total insurance on stock in the main building was $68,750, and on stock in the men's furnishings store, $11,000. There was also $1,000 on the elevator, $500 on fixtures, and $14,500 on the building. B. R. Macaulay, of the firm, estimates their loss at about $40,000 above the insurance. The adjustors are now at work making up the losses and have settled the damages to the men's furnishings at $1,100 and to the three upper floors of the main building at $7,500. The principal loss, that in the lower floor and basement, have not yet been adjusted.

The firm is doing business in the men's furnishing department, and a big fire sale is being conducted on the three upper floors, an entrance having been arranged from South Market street, at the rear of the building, as the flooring on the lower floor was burned out.

As an outcome of this fire a meeting of prominent merchants was held a few days ago in the Board of Trade rooms, when it was unanimously decided to ask the police magistrate to make an investigation into fire department matters with the view of improving the efficiency of the department.

The management of the Cornwall and York Cotton Mills of this city granted a voluntary increase of ten per cent. in wages to its employes on the 14th inst. The increase affects some five hundred and fifty employes. When James F. Robertson, of M. R. A., Ltd., purchased these mills and set about organizing a local company to operate them, they had been idle for some time, the plant was antiquated and the help scattered in factory towns on both sides of the border. The new company was formed and a gradual reconstruction of the plant was inaugurated. That plan has been successfully carried out and improvements and enlargements are still being made, and last year the mills paid a dividend. The product goes all over Canada, and proves the adaptability of St. John as a centre for manufacturing industries. A lot of new machinery is now being installed that will still further increase the efficiency of the mills.

J. N. Harvey has completed the extension of his premises, and now occupies the entire ground floor space of the Opera House Block, making the longest store front for men's furnishings in the city. A trade extension sale conducted by Mr. Harvey was a great success.

Joseph Allison, of M. R. A., Ltd., arrived home about two weeks ago from a trip to Hot Springs, Virginia. He was accompanied by Mrs. Allison, W. S. Allison and Miss McIntyre.

Edwin Odell, of St. Andrews, N.B., has opened a dry dry goods store on Water street, St. Andrews.

KINGSTON.

The dry goods trade in Kingston, as in other places, is different to what it was years ago. Big sales and small margins seem to rule now. Time was when the merchant wanted 33 1-3 per cent. on everything but factory cotton. Clerks were all of the male order, as were also bookkeepers and cashiers, but now ladies predominate. New systems of transferring cash from the customer to the cash drawer have been adopted. Now the clerk strikes a key and the amount jumps up and stares at the customer, or she reaches up and fills a cup and off it shoots along a wire right into the cashier's hand. Years ago Jack would jump off his high stool at the loud voice of little George, the clerk, as he shouted "cashier" or "cash here," and run down with the change, bringing back the bill and a piece of paper with the amount and number of the clerk, which had to be booked under his number in a large cash book of many columns. Each clerk's column had to be added up each night. If the boss took fifty cents out and forgot about it the poor cashier had to add, add, add, till the mistake came to the surface.

Bill, the parcel boy, used to open up at seven, take down about twenty shutters, which were held on by an iron bar with a bolt in each end going in through the window frame. The shutters protected small panes of glass. Now there are no shutters and one big plate glass is left unprotected. The insurance campanies said: "Throw away those ugly shutters, cease using those dirty little panes of glass, painful to see, put up the one plate glass, and for a few dollars a year we will replace any breaks."

Years ago dodgers were sent from door to door; now the local papers do the advertising. Every week the boys were sent up into the highest room in the building to cut up old wrapping paper in sizes to suit a spool or a carpet; now the paper comes in rolls all widths and thicknesses. The old day book, journal and ledger are put away and the new system rules.

Years ago there were more dry goods stores, but they were smaller and did not employ so much help.

Dry goods stores here are all doing well. Harmony seems to prevail, and harmony means more money for everyone. The old threat of running out the other fellow has no weight. It never worked—only hurt both sides and tickled the buyer, who got the advantage of cut prices.

Our population now is 18,000, and in the winter, when the students return, 20,000. We have seven dry goods stores.

Trade from the country is not what it use to be, on account of the number of general stores in the surrounding villages. Farmers used to come to the city to do their banking; now the banks have opened branches in the smaller places.

BROCKVILLE.

Trade has been rather dull so far this season, on account of the continued cool weather which has prevailed. The temperature is still low enough for Winter clothing and furs are in evidence yet.

Robert Craig & Co., furriers, take possession of their new quarters on the north side of King Street July 1. The store is being fitted up very neatly, and will give plenty of room for display. The upper floors will be used for manufacturing purposes.

The traveling public will be pleased to know that the Old St. Lawrence Hall was re-opened on May 15, with L. Muldoon, formerly manager of the Strathcona, as proprietor.

PETERBOROUGH.

A. W. Cressman is one of Peterborough's most progressive business men. He has been here only eight years. Six years ago he was burned out, so that his present business is practically the work of six years. He has now a large force of men engaged in altering and enlarging his store, and when the work is completed he will have one of the best premises between Toronto and Montreal.

When Mr. Cressman started in business he had a floor space of only 2,600 square feet. When the improvements now in progress are finished he will have 19,200 square feet. The store will be finished very attractively and fitted with the most modern furnishings.

The ground floor will be devoted entirely to general dry goods, while another store adjoining has been secured for men's furnishings and clothing. An entirely new and handsome plate front is provided for and every corner will be well lighted.

Extensive alterations are being made in the first floor which is devoted to ready-to-wear and millinery departments. The entire floor will be made into one big room, with large mirrors all around. Large, airy and well lighted workrooms and fitting rooms will also be provided. Here, too, the plans show a comfortable ladies' rest room which will be provided with easy chairs, tables, writing materials and reading matter. Connected with this are large washrooms and lavatories.

The second flaor will, as usual, be devoted to carpets and housefurnishings. Several new departments, not yet decided upon, are to be added and will be established here, while the third floor will be used as the bargain annex. The bargain annex is one of Mr. Cressman's strong cards. It is opened every Wednesday. It is used principally for disposing of odds and ends or slow-selling goods from all departments of the store. Job lots are also purchased and used as leaders. Profits are sacrficed for the one day in this department only. The result is the stock is kept up-to-date and the advertisement is valuable.

ST. CATHARINES.

The dry goods business in St. Catharines is confined to the few. Fifty years ago we had a larger number of merchants in this line. The principal ones were Struthers & Carlisle, who also were dealers in musical instruments and ready-made clothing, and employed a large staff of tailors.

The McLaren Co. conducts a department store. The founder of the business was Richard Woodruff, a successful merchant. Finding that his duties as buyer took him away a great deal, he took in Robert MacLaren as a partner. Later Alexander McLaren joined the company. Failing health forced Mr. Woodruff to retire, and Charles O. Borrowman became a partner. The firm was known as R. McLaren & Company. The business had increased year by year, and the premises had to be enlarged. A few years ago it was decided to turn the business into a department store, and the R. McLaren Company, Limited, was incorporated. It handles general dry goods, millinery, ready-to-wear garments, dress and mantle making, men's wear, tailoring, house furnishings, furniture, china, crockery, tinware, etc. A large staff is employed. A few weeks ago the firm shortened its business day one hour, without reducing the wages of employes. Each year employes receive a percentage of profits, graded according to length of service. The staff is also given an annual picnic.

Tne James D. Tait Company, Limited, as originally organized, comprised James D. Tait, his two stepsons, William I. and Philip I. Price, and his stepdaughter. William and his sister are dead. Mr. Tait came from Scotland many years ago, and having served his apprenticeship in the dry goods business in his native land, embarked for himself on Ontario Street here. The company afterwards formed moved to the Pendergast Block on St. Paul Street and conducted a department store for a time. This was not to its liking and other lines than general dry goods, millinery, ready-to-wear garments, furs, etc., were discarded. Mr. Tait, the senior member, is the buyer, and he goes to Europe periodically.

Madill & Anderson, formerly Anderson & Co., do a good trade. Their place of business is in St. Paul St. The lines carried are general dry goods, millinery, ready-to-wear garments, dress and mantle making, etc.

WOODSTOCK.

Dealers in every line of trade, dry goods and men's furnishings being no exception, are ready to admit that the present season has been a very slow one, and that the amount of business done has not been up to the usual. In March the weather was, for the most part, fine, and the Spring trade started off with a rush. For a few weeks a good business was done. Then April came along, and brought in its train the weather March usually brings. Trade dropped off immediately. May has been little better. There have been only a few days when it has been possible to go without an overcoat and furs, and in such weather people will not buy Summer clothing and furnishings to any great extent.

"But it might have been worse," was the optimistic remark of one big dealer to your correspondent. "When you consider the weather, our trade hasn't been so terribly bad after all, though other years we would have counted it small. There have been some surprises. Last Saturday the day started out dull and slowly. A gentleman came in and remarked that we wouldn't do much that day. I told him I would sell out the day's trade for twelve hundred dollars. Before the hay was over, we had a thousand dollars over that figure." This gentleman recognized the fact, for all his optimism, that a certain amount of trade had been lost by the weather, which would not be regained no matter how fine it might be from now on. "Say it is a man that is concerned," he said, "When it gets along towarhs the first of June and he has not bought a Spring suit, he will very likely conclude that he will get through the season very nicely by getting a light two-piece suit, at a cost of eight or nine dollars, whereas if the usual weather had prevailed in the earlier Spring, he would have spent fifteen, twenty or thirty dollars in a serge or tweed suit. And it is the same in ladies' lines. They will not get as many or as expensive clothes, when it gets as late in the season as this, and they have not yet felt the necessity for Spring clothing."

"Our hat sale this season has been larger than it ever was before," said S. M. Dunlop, manager of the local store of Grafton & Co., to your correspondent. "Though in other lines business has been slacker than usual, in the headwear department it has boomed. There was no special way of accounting for it." Business in some lines seemed to run in streaks, especially in smaller places. "Perhaps one season we will have a big sale of fur overcoats. Then the overcoat-buying public gets stocked up, and the next season not nearly so many sales may be made."

Much attention is paid to the tasteful dressing of windows in this city, and some of the show windows of the dry goods and clothing stores contained appropriate displays in patriotic colors, in honor of Victoria Day.

CHATHAM.

Chatham at present possesses a good and active trade organization in the dry goods section of the Retail Merchants' Association. This section was recently organized, following the reorganization of the R. M. A. here a few months ago. Following are the officers: President, Wm. Foreman; first vice-president, C. H. Mills; second vice-president, Wm. Gordon; secretary, H. W. Ball; treasurer, C. Austin.

The dry goods, men's furnishings and allied businesses are pretty well represented in municipal life, from the mayor down. Mayor Stone, who was elected last January after a year's service at the council board, has been associated with the men's furnishing business here for a good many years. Ald. Austin has been a Chathamite only twelve years or so, but in that time he has built up a splendid business, in addition to which he has, during the past three years, contrived to spare a good deal of time to council work. This year he occupies the important post of chairman of the finance committee of the city council. Ald. Meynell has been a Chathamite for fewer years than Ald. Austin, but in that time he managed to make himself so popular that last year he went in with a surprisingly big vote. W. N. Morley, merchant tailor, is on the board of education. He was chairman of the old public school board during 1905, and after it passed out of existence last year the electors sent him back to the board of education. This year he is chairman of the finance and property committee of that body. Mr. Morley's place of business has recently undergone a marked improvement, due to the installment of a fine new front. He now has a first class show window, designed to show up the latest goods in the best possible style.

H. W. Ball & Co. have struck a new feature in advertising—at least ,a new feature for Chatham. It is a "City Beautiful" contest. The contestants are the school children of the city. To provide the materials the firm are giving away free flower seeds to every school child in the city. Cash prizes are offered to those obtaining the best results. The prizes are to be awarded in the Fall by a committee of prominent citizens.

GUELPH.

G. B. Ryan & Co. are holding a special blouse sale this week. These goods were bought two hundred to the pattern and are helping out an otherwise dull week.

D. E. Macdonald & Bros. certainly have the finest show windows in Guelph, and their trimmer is an expert.

Wheadon & Co. have closed out their men's wear store to make room for a fine new show window and enlarged dress goods department. This firm has the only passenger elevator among the local dry goods stores.

G. B. Ryan & Co. have opened up a new men's furnishings and men's boot and shoe department. Their motto is "A square deal for every man." Hal Ryan put this on a big sign a short time ago. Another firm followed with one, close by, which read: "And for every woman, too." Ryans added to their sign: "Pants for men and boys." The other went on: "And for every woman, too." The incident created a great deal of amusement.

Norman Ryan is only twenty-three years, yet he is manager of the Berlin store of G. B. Ryan & Co. He succeeded C. H. Mills, now of Thomas Stone & Sons. Chatham. He has a clever window trimmer in Mr. German. The store is conducted entirely on its own basis, from buying to financing. There are forty employes.

WINDSOR.

Windsor has four dry goods houses which do the bulk of the business of a city of 15,000—the official figures are only a few short of that. The oldest emporium is that of Bartlet, Macdonald & Gow, established in 1862 by Donald Cameron, who retired several years ago and returned to pass the remainder of his days in his native heath in Scatland. Geo. Bartlet, the senior member of the present firm, joined Mr. Cameron in 1877, and for a decade the firm was known as Cameron & Bartlet. Upon the retirement of Mr. Cameron, Colin Macdonald was taken into partnership a few years ago. Alexander Gow became the junior member of the firm, having filled the duties of cashier and accountant for several years previous to his admittance into partnership. Like the founder of the store, all three are Scotch.

Joseph Appelbe came here from Brantford nine years ago and has built up a good business. He is one of the most conspicuous examples of the city's successful business men. His volume of trade, all conducted on a cash basis, is reckoned to be as large as any of his competitors and larger than some of them.

J. W. Peddie has been in the dry goods business for several years and is on the crest of prosperity after a series of vexatious vicissitudes.

J. A. Diebel came here from Essex four years ago and purchased a business that was in the hands of creditors. He, too, has enjoyed a large measure of success and caters to a wide clientele of patrons, not only from the city but from the county as well.

It has sometimes been thought that Windsor could stand and support another dry goods house, but the opening is not any too inviting, considering the proximity to Detroit. There is undoubtedly a big loss in trade sustained by the local merchants by reason of purchases in Detroit. Cottons are the chief staple line bought by Windsor and Essex people across the boundary line. The only consolation the city merchants have in seeing good Canadian dollars going out of the country is the fact that there is a revenue of considerable proportions from Americans who come to this side for their silks, dress goods, etc. Then, again, Windsor stores scarcely feel any loss through purchases made from the large departmental stores in Toronto. There are few cities in the province which give such scant patronage to mail order houses of the Queen City.

George Bartlet, senior member of the firm of Bartlet, Macdonald & Gow, Windsor, is one merchant who thinks reduced parcel post rates would be a good thing. He points out that in the Old Country parcels are sent by post for two cents a pound or thereabouts, at least, the rate for eleven pounds is eleven pence, or twenty-two cents. He claims reduced postage on parcels would greatly benefit the merchants and others who feel the burden of express rates. For instance, a parcel of eleven pounds, sent by express from Toronto to Windsor, would cost about a dollar, whereas if Canada enjoyed the same postage rate as the Old Country it would cost only twenty-two cents. The Review has before now explained why it believes cheap parcel post rates would injure the trade of local merchants.

MANITOBA BUSINESS CONDITIONS

Since the opening of navigation early last month, on the upper lakes, there has been a heavy movement eastward of the wheat crop that should have been marketed last Fall. Simultaneously with the movement of the crop the price of wheat went up, and, therefore, in some measure at least, the farmer is being compensated for the failure of the railways to handle his grain last Fall. The result is already seen in the improvement in country collections and in the gradual relief of the money stringency, which has been so severely felt in Winnipeg during the Winter months. Dealers are now able to meet their paper, and the wholesale houses and banks are not so hard pressed as they were a month or two ago. The natural optimism of the west was never really overcome during the hard Winter and late Spring, but it had to meet with many discouragements. With improved conditions prevailing now it is again triumphant over all obstacles.

C.P.R. officials in Winnipeg estimate that the wheat acreage will show a decrease this year of almost 200,000 acres, but that this will be compensated for by an increase of 300,000 acres of coarse grains, such as oats and barley. With favorable weather conditions during the next three months, there is no reason why a heavy crop should not be harvested next Fall in spite of the late seeding. There will, of course, be considerable anxiety as to this year's crop, but those best qualified to judge of the situation do not think that there is any reason for undue anxiety.

Of course the late Spring affected the dry goods trade and retailers were afraid that their Spring and Summer goods would be left on their hands, while wholesale houses were anxious about the absence of the repeat orders that past experience had taught them to expect. However, since the arrival of Summer weather, business has been phenomenally active in all parts of the country and it is probable that the retailers will be able to move their stocks without any undue sacrifices.

SHOW CARD WRITING

BY CRAFTSMAN. (Continued from May Number.)

Floral Cards.

Artificial flowers, especially violets, are highly decorative, and can be used to good advantage in making both price tickets and window cards. Glueing one violet, without a stem, in each corner, is in itself a pretty decoration. Two or three violets with stems and one leaf, fastened to a corner of the card by piercing two holes and fastening the stems, and leaf stem, with thin wire, make an agreeable appearance.

Fancy Show Cards.

The horseshoe design shown in first cut is easily constructed. On a full sheet of tinted cardboard, 22x28 inches, mark the shape of the horseshoe and cut it out. Letter it in black, shade in white, allowing both to dry thoroughly. With some thinly-diluted glue trace the outlines where indicated, and apply at once a liberal quantity of "flitter" or diamond dust. The bunches of violets, which can be bought at trifling cost, are attached by making two holes through the cardboard and fastening with thin wire, by looping over the bunch, passing the two ends through the two holes and twisting the wire firmly against back of card. To prevent the card from sagging a frame of wood is glued across the back before the card is lettered, one piece running across the top and one along each side.

The "Satisfaction" card is illustrated for the purpose of showing the method employed in "centering" and assembling pen-work. This card is intended to be placed at the cashier's desk, to be read by the customer while waiting for change.

We believe, nevertheless, that cards with much wording are generally undesirable. This card is lettered in black, on a white ground, having a double-lined golden border and brass embossed corner-pieces. You will at once notice the irregularity of the words "earnestly requested." This is to illustrate the marring effect of careless lettering and poor spacing.

The "Santa Claus" card has a dark green background, with Santa Claus painted in showing hues. The lettering is in white, shaded in gold (which the camera here reproduced in black), and the scroll work, which is faintly discernible, is carried out in silver flitter. The panel enclosing the lettering is very simple in design, but decidedly effective.

The "Holly" card shows a spray of holly, which can be attached by using an artificial spray, or can be designed in colors. The lettering is in gold, on a green-tinted background. The scroll work is in green flitter. The letters are perfect examples of excellent brush work.

The Easter card in next cut is a heliotrope tinted card on a dark green background, having a white paper edging. The design of the egg is formed by cutting out an oval, laying it over the heliotrope card and praying the outer edge with an automizer. On the sprayed surface are designed beautiful Easter lilies. The lettering on the egg is in black, shaded in white.

The large Christmas sign has a dark red background with a green linen centre panel, lettered in black and white and ornamented with gold flitter. The elliptical panel is dark green, having in its centre a dark red panel ornamented with silver flitter, which also extends to the sides of the lower card. The edge line is of white paper.

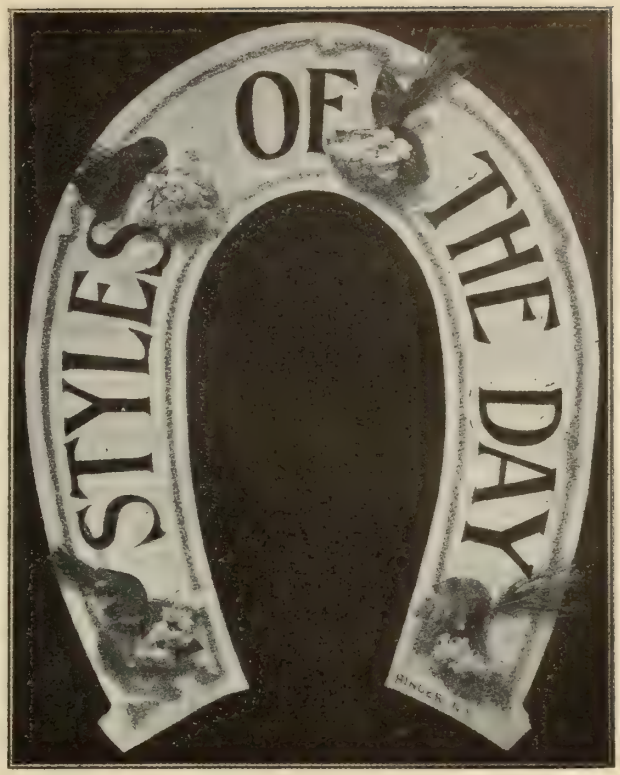
QUEBEC NOTES.

The Belmont Manufacturing Co., Montreal, have vacated their old premises in Youville Square, and are now in large and commodious quarters at 223 Notre Dame Street West.

George A. Gatehouse, manufacturers' agent, Montreal, is again in the city after an extended tour in English markets. He visited Belfast, Dundee, Manchester, London and Paris. Mr. Gatehouse commented on the strong tone of all foreign markets. His Montreal office quarters are at 232 McGill Street.

Fox & Nunns, general dry goods, Coaticooke, have dissolved partnership. Business will be continued by Chgs. A. Fox. Mr. Fox succeeded his father in the business, who for many years was a pioneer dry goods merchant, and will retain the old staff of employes. Mr. Fox, Sr., was one of the first merchants to open a general dry goods establishment in Coaticooke.

S. W. Stevenson & Co. are located in commodious quarters at 42 Victoria Square, Montreal. Their well lighted and large sample rooms are a decided convenience to buyers. The firm also have a Toronto office at 218 Stair Building. Mr. Stevenson has had wide experience in dry goods circles and although established in the agency business for only one short year, his trade connections are very satisfactory. He represents a variety of well established English firms.



NEW FACTORY FOR CHATHAM.

A shirtwaist factory is a possibility for Chatham within the near future. The promoters of the enterprise are Detroit men, and they have been in correspondence with Chairman Westman of the civic industrial committee for some time past. Their location here is subject to a certain amount of assistance from the city and the citizens. From the city they wish the privilege of renting premises in the upper part of the market building, at present unoccupied, at $500 per year. From the citizens they wish subscriptions for $5,000 preference stock of the company, which is to be capitalized at $40,000 with $10,000 paid up. The city council will probably place no obstacle in the way of the company securing the premises desired. The location of the company here, consequently, depends pretty much on whether or not the citizens subscribe the required amount of stock.

A NOVEL ADVERTISING IDEA.

John Allan, a prominent men's furnisher and clothier of Montreal, has sent out through the post, unwrapped, genuine linen collars, to a large number of the business men of the city. Having a few thousand old style collars in stock, he had printed on the inside of each a neat descriptive ad. He headed it, "Are you a customer of ours? If not, let us collar you anyway." The collar is neatly folded in two, with a stud through the buttonhole and the address is stamped on the outside. Mr. Allan states that the advertisement has been remarkably successful, many of the recipients being so amused and interested, as to call during the following days to congratulate him on his originality.

The Story of Revillon Gloves

EVERY PROCESS CONTROLLED

¶ It is to your financial advantage and general satisfaction to know that Revillon Gloves are sold on import direct from the factory at Grenoble to retailers, and that from the buying of skins to the last detail of manufacture all work is controlled by us. A rigid inspection in all stages means quality. Trained buyers of raw skins ensure the rejection of imperfect goods. Tanning by the knife process keeps the glove always in a healthy condition. Permanent dyes prevent discoloring when a glove becomes damp. You and your customers appreciate these points.

STYLE AND FINISH

¶ Parisian taste applied to Canadian shapes gives retailers the double satisfaction of style and accurate fit. The trimming is always tasty and exclusive; no cotton stitching. Domes are used in all lines, appropriate to the quality and leather. Our salesman would be glad to demonstrate further the details which make for glove satisfaction.

PRICE ADVANTAGE

¶ An inspection of the Fall lines of Ladies' Lambskin and Kid Gloves will show not only a quality and style advantage, but a decided saving in price, owing to our unique manufacturing and selling position. HINTS TO BUYERS

From information supplied by Sellers, but for which the Editors of THE REVIEW do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

The W. R. Brock Co., Toronto.

In "Her Ladyship" department are to be seen several new and very striking stylish lines of white waists in muslin and Swiss spots. The line of whitewear is very complete, and when the trade want these goods they can get immediate shipment of the lines they want. Orders for "Her Ladyship" skirts, all of which Brock's make in their own factory, are coming in large quantities for Fall, and they have already received several advance orders for their circular lots, copies of which will be sent to the trade shortly. To sell the goods and build up business nothing equals these circulars, and as they are confined to one merchant in a town, he can get his full profit on the complete purchase. In child's pinafores the prices range from $1.50 to $6.50, and they are selling a large quantity of them. They are the cheapest pinafores on the market. All sizes are now in stock once more. All the underskirts are made in the old cloths and are below the present market price, and while they last are a very good purchase.

The 4,000 dozen of job linen handkerchiefs referred to in last issue are now in stock. They can be retailed at 10c. to 25c. and are the value of two years ago, since which time linens have advanced heavily. Embroideries are in great demand. The Brock Company have a most attractive line, and best values obtainable in cambric, Swiss and nainsook effects, and edgings, insertions, sets, flouncings, etc. Swiss spot muslins will be in active demand: also white Persian lawns and India linens. Brock's are well stocked with these at all prices. Their special white spot, PJ1 to PJ6 can be retailed at 12½c., and is good value. They have all colors of mosquito netting, both plain and cross-bar in 36-in. and 7-4 widths. The cool evenings demand a shawl or wrap. Brock's will receive a shipment in a few days. A job line of Excelda handkerchiefs that can be retailed at 10c. has just arrived. They are specially attractive in patterns and above average value. A special line of Victoria lawn, called "Best value" is in stock again, and back orders are being filled. It retails at 10 to 12½c. Brock's have also received three special numbers of white Victoria lawn from Manchester that can be retailed at 10 to 20c. Pearl button cabinets contain 100 dozen assorted sizes—"Austria," to retail at 3c. per doz.; "Berlin," at 5c.; "Murray," at 7½c., and white at 10c. Two special lines of cashmere hose are No. 829 Llama, to retail at 50c., and Dale 2-1 rib at 35c. Brock's continue to receive shipments of long silk and kid gloves. They have in stock long silk gloves to retail at 75c. to $1.50, and black glace kid, 12 to 16 button length; black undressed kid to retail at $1.75 and $2, also white and greys. A clearing lot of muslins is being offered—new goods, but just odd pieces.

The men's furnishing department is well prepared for the demands for sorting which the first few days of hot weather are sure to bring. They have in stock all sizes in men's balbriggan underwear to retail at 25, 40, 50 and 75c.; also men's summer weight natural wool underwear to sell at 75c, $1, $1.25 and $1.50, and all sizes in B. V. D. nainsook underwear. A full range of prices in fine light-weight cashmere ½-hose, also light-weight natural wool and fancy cotton ½-hose in tans and greys, embroidered and lace effects. Several new lines of Grizzly Brand neglige shirts have just been received. All sizes and styles of Success linen collars are now in stock again. Boys' and men's bathing suits and trunks, all sizes and prices, can be had for immediate delivery.

Re-arrangement, to give more space to expanding departments, is taking place in the W. R. Brock Co., Toronto. The ladies' garment department is being removed to the second floor of the annex recently built in the rear of the main warehouse. The floor space to be occupied is 30 x 126 feet and is splendidly lighted by windows on each side. The department is now being fitted with the newest and most approved type of fixtures, showcases, etc., which are to be all finished in white, and when finished it will be one of the largest and handsomest in the Dominion. The smallwares department will, when the garment department is moved to its new quarters, take over the space vacated, and will then have possession of the whole of the third floor of the main building.

Combination Buttons.

Plain covered buttons have been made in Canada for some time now, but all combination buttons have had to be imported. Alfred Weyerstall, who manufactures covered buttons, is bringing out machines from Germany to make combination buttons. The machines have already arrived and as soon as they can be set up he will be ready to receive orders. Many combinations can be made, and the buttons turned out with either velvet, silk, cloth or metal or bone rim.

Not only will a big stock of buttons in different sizes, colors and combination of materials be kept in stock, but the buttons can be turned out on short notice in any required combination or color, or they can be made from materials supplied by the trade.

This will be a special convenience to garment manufacturers, as they can secure buttons to match any material or color.

A big business is now done in covered buttons in cloth or silk. Silk buttons can be had in every size and are carried in stock in 32 staple shades, and as new colors come to the front they are stocked also. If no shade in stock matches, the buyer's own material can be made up.

Orders can be placed through the majority of the wholesale houses, many of which carry these buttons in stock. Any color or size they do not have can be promptly secured. All orders are executed with promptness and despatch, and in Toronto an order given one day will be delivered on the afternoon of the day following.

Greenshields, Ltd., Montreal.

May was a very busy month with this firm and their warehouse was crowded with customers taking advantage of the many special offerings before stock-taking. All departments have now turned their attention strongly towards Fall trade, and advance orders are being rapidly booked.

Greenshields, Limited, report exceptional business in the carpet and house furnishing department. Repeat orders confirm an active season with retailers. Stocks are still in good condition in these lines, and assorting orders will receive prompt attention. Complete assortments of carpets, squares, linoleums, oilcloths, curtains and curtain nets are shown in all the latest designs, colorings and effects. A call in the month of June is sure to be of mutual advantage.

Travelers are sending in nice orders for the Fall lines of cashmere and wool hose, gloves, handkerchiefs and underwear. In this department are also featured extensive lines of golf jerseys and sweaters for ladies and misses. Complete samples are in their hands. This department is steadily increasing in trade, due to the salable qualities of these novelties. Having secured large quantities of wool and worsted hosiery at old prices, they are in a better position to supply trade than last year. Lisles and cottons in plain and lace ankle, also allover lace, have been largely shown. Colors predominating are tans, blacks and whites. Complete assortments are to be had from 90c. to $12.50. In the glove section orders have been coming in freely for Fall. With this firm Ringwoods have been the biggest feature so far. Suede effects in fabric gloves are also to the fore. While short gloves continue to hold first position, long mousquetaires are particularly good. Colors predominating are black, white, brown, slate and fawn.

In the handkerchief department this firm have anticipated requirements early and have bought heavily. They are maintaining old prices and will continue to do so for some time to come. Orders are coming in freely in embroidered handkerchiefs. These goods are to be had at medium prices, and it will be found, if compared with this season's offerings, that they are of extra good value. All-over lace effects have also met with marked favor in the better class of the dry goods trade.

J. Arthur Paquet.

The new fur samples, shown by J. Arthur Paquet, Quebec, represent the best values and most attractive styles this house has ever produced. In coon goods, especially, the values are exceptionally strong.

The Carter and the Wilkinson hats, which are imported by J. Arthur Paquet, are now the most widely advertised hats in Canada. Space is being used weekly in a strong chain of newspapers reaching from Halifax to Vancouver, and practically covering the whole country. Thousands and thousands of style books, illustrating some of the leading shapes of the Carter and the Wilkinson hats, have been mailed to consumers throughout the country. Dealers are given every possible aid in selling. One hundred and ninety large painted signboards advertising these hats are distributed along the lines of all the principal railways. All this advertising has created a tremendous demand for the Carter and Wilkinson hats.

The famous J. A. P. gloves and mitts, which are also manufactured by J. Arthur Paquet, Quebec, are now handled by the great majority of dry goods, men's furnishing, hardware and general stores in Canada. Retailers report that the sales of these goods are rapidly increasing and the factory is taxed to the utmost to keep pace with the orders.

John Macdonald & Co.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, report that their stock of goods suitable for the midsummer trade is well assorted. They are showing special lines in every department. In their staples are a big assortment of huck and damask linen towels at last year's prices. Crum's prints in dark fancies, lilacs, cadets, bright red, cherry red, black and white and navy and white.

They are showing special value in men's working shirts, neglige shirts to retail at 50c. and 75c. Black cashmere half hose at $2.25 per dozen. Fancy braces (men's) at $2.25 per dozen. Men's striped overalls (engineer's) to retail at 50c.

They are showing a full range of lawns, India linens, nainsooks and Persian lawns, at prices that could not be quoted, with profit, but for the fact of having placed large contracts for these goods twelve months ago.

They are showing a beautiful assortment of ladies' waistings in fancies, sheered checks, stripes, and at all prices; also a most attractive range of voiles and panamas, both in black and in navy. Their stock in val. and torchon laces is large and well assorted. The same can also be said about their stock of German cotton hosiery, both in blacks and tans.

One of the most attractive spots in their warehouses at present is the ready-to-wear department. There you can see the latest designs in white lawn, mull and white silk waists. Ladies' white cotton underwear, such as corset covers, drawers, night gowns, underskirts; also children's pinafores and dresses in lawns, prints and silks.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, are showing in the carpet and house furnishings a beautiful assortment of goods in the very latest colorings. Every keen buyer should see these goods before placing orders—tapestry and Brussels squares, seamless velvet, Axminster, wool and union squares. Piece goods in union, wool, tapestry, Brussels, velvet, Wilton and Axminster. They are already showing their Fall range in linoleums and floor oilcloths.

Greenshields Western, Winnipeg.

Greenshields Western are stocktaking this month, and, consequently, have special values in all departments to offer to the trade. A special line of dress ginghams, being offered at 8c. per yard, will undoubtedly interest retailers who are looking for snaps. In apron ginghams, plain and with borders, they offer a special value at 9 cents that is worthy of attention.

In ladies' tweed skirts Greenshields Western are showing a large variety at special prices. They have a full stock of white Japanese silk waists at a big range of prices, and they are in position to handle sorting orders promptly. Special values in ladies' whitewear offered by this firm are also worthy of particular attention. Their stock of cashmere and cotton hose, plain and fancy, is full and there are many lines at special prices. In white wash belts, black silk belts and silk elastic belts in various colors and steel trimmings they are offering snaps at values from $1.75 to $7.50.

Greenshields Western are sole selling agents for Orkney Shetland floss, of which they are carrying a full line. During June they are opening a line of dressed and undressed dolls to which they direct the attention of the trade.

Greenshields Western travelers are now on the road with a full line of samples of Fall and Winter goods, and as prices are going up on all staple lines and the mills have orders on hand for several months ahead, they advise early buying.

Cumming & Fraser.

Cumming & Fraser, manufacturers' agents, 84 St. Francois Xaxier St., Montreal, are showing a line of popular priced ladies' separate coats, which are meeting with the approval of the trade. They are English coats in salable styles. They show reliable lines to retail with a good profit as low as $4, $5, and $6. Their line of shirts is also worth investigation.

The Figg Cravat Holder.

George E. Figg, neckwear manufacturer, Montreal, of wide experience in Canadian and English neckwear circles, has brought to a successful issue the invention of a cravat holder which is entirely new, and is sure to become a staple seller. The Figg holder will find a ready sale among men who are accustomed to shield ties, but who wish a better quality of neckwear. The holder may be sold separately and a salesman can easily adjust any tie upon it.

The Figg cravat holder is entirely a new creation, with the hook as its distinguishing feature, allowing the tie to pass between the hook and the shield. It is made of metal in two shapes, one for puffs and bows, the other for derby and four-in-hand ties. With a double fold collar its use avoids any useless tugging at a tie to bring it into shape and the collar also sets better as the metal adjusts itself to any shape.

For bows and puffs, which are always difficult to tie satisfactorily the holder is ideal. The Figg holder makes it possible to sell a better class of neckwear than is usually bought by the users of shield ties. The Figg holder can be had in any of the Figg lines of neckwear.

The big neckwear sellers, the derby and four-in-hand ties, can be sold to a class, by its use, who formerly wore shield ties. Men who are not able to fashion a good looking knot or do not wish to be bothered will appreciate the Figg holder. A salesman can fix any tie upon it and the wearer of shield ties is no longer restricted in choosing a pattern. Among this class of buyers, a separate sale of holder is sure to be large. The holder causes neckwear to retain its shape and the fresh looking appearance is always preserved. The

It will contain 560 pages, profusely illustrated, and will be sent out early in June. As an assistant to the window trimmer in the selection and use of his fixtures it will be valuable. The title is "Window Dressing and Display."

L. Hirshson & Co.

One of the new lines shown by this firm is a superior Japanese silk called Kohaku silk. This silk is strong and serviceable and is shown in plain, floral and lace effects, priced from 75c. to $1.25 per yard. Their Jap silk handkerchiefs are meeting with a large sale for holiday trade.

MUTUAL FRIENDS.

The Toronto office of the MacLean newspapers was paid a pleasant visit on Saturday last by Henry Fatum, a well-to-do merchant of Gowanstown. Gowanstown is situated in the north part of the thriving county of Perth, and as Mr. Fatum explained, though the town itself is not large, business conditions were good, upheld by a particularly prosperous farming community all round about. This was Mr. Fatum's first visit to Toronto in seven years, and he spoke of the marked improvements which the city had made during this time. Mr. Fatum is a subscriber to four of the MacLean newspapers—Dry Goods Review, The Canadian Grocer, Hardware and Metal and Busy Man's Magazine. "They are old and tried friends," he said, "and I would not like to be without them in my business. The information they give is most valuable to any retail merchant, whilst your new paper, The Busy Man's Magazine, is full of interesting reading matter." Mr. Fatum was much interested in seeing the home of these newspapers and learning how they were gotten out.

Ladies' Wear.

F. P. Evans, of Ladies' Wear, is still in Europe. He reports home that ladies neckwear is selling freely, and is an important factor in the trade, there being more interest taken in this department than at any time since it was put upon the market. Everybody connected with the trade is optimistic as to its future, and are secure in the fact that it is regarded as a staple line. Though all neckwear styles are selling remarkably well there is nothing in the nature of a real novelty shown, but the popular sellers are all more or less striking variations of ideas that have been advanced before. "Really there is little to be seen here that we do not show in Toronto," he concludes.

The Standard Umbrella Mfg. Co., Montreal, have moved from their old premises in Youville Square, to larger and more commodious quarters at 215 Notre Dame street west. They are now in a better position than ever to look after customers' wants. As they have anticipated advances in raw materials, they are now showing remarkable values in the umbrella line. They have an excellent line for the holiday trade.

NECKWEAR'S FUTURE.

F. J. Knight, who has been in Europe in the interests of the Rhys D. Fairbairn Co., is just back in Toronto. Speaking to The Review, as to the future of neckwear, he says that it is more worn and more shown than ever, in Europe and New York, but there is a remarkable absence of any feature that stands out as a striking novelty. Neckwear seems, so far as he can say, to be in the happy position where all styles and kinds are selling.

Comparing Canadian-made neckwear with that shown in foreign centres, he is of the opinion that Toronto is fully up to their standard, and that new ideas are put onto the market here almost simultaneously with Paris and New York. This, of course, applies to the general trade.

DEPARTMENT

Our Fall range of foreign and domestic dress goods is now in the hands of our travellers. It is half as large again as last season, and represents all the newest and most stylish materials of both the Canadian and European markets.

The values are good and we feel confident that an inspection of our collection would result to our mutual benefit. Priestley's new tweeds are especially attractive.

Lovet Serge
Strathedon Tweed
Brackindale Tweed
Gypsy Cloth

Priestley's Huguenot is a very nice material for house wear; it has the fineness of a cashmere and the durability of a serge.

The W. R. Brock Company, (Limited)

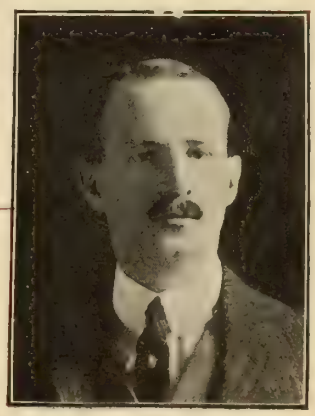
To the casual observer, present prices on staple cotton goods may seem high in proportion to the cost of raw material, but the demand has been, and continues to be, so much in excess of the supply, that we expect still further advances. We believe that the retail trade generally is justified in carrying larger stocks than usual in cottons and that any lines that are at all staple are safe property to hold, as the increase in value will pay interest on any portion of them which may have to be carried over for spring business.

G. S. Cleghorn.

The W. R. Brock Company (Limited)
Montreal



Prospects for good business in our fall dress goods are very bright. We were fortunate in getting large contracts placed before the recent advances and have a range of dress materials which we are sure will appeal to keen buyers throughout Canada.

H. S. Albright.

"Invader" garments are up-to-date in style and every other essential and the business we are doing justifies our assertion that we have the best values in the trade. We have now moved into our new building and will be glad to see you at any time.

We are pleasing others. We can please you.

B. Strachan

The W. R. Brock Company (Limited)

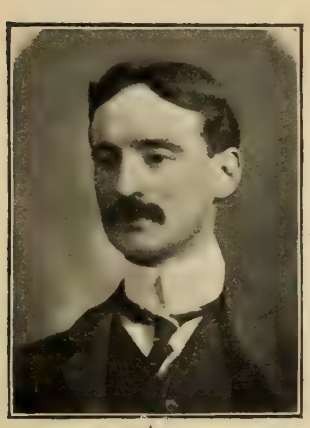
Close buyers will find visits to our Hosiery and Men's Furnishings and Smallwares Departments very profitable. We are always on the lookout for what is and what is going to be popular, and it is rapidly becoming an axiom with the trade that "You can get it at Brock's."



We buy in large quantities too, having three large warehouses to supply, and have some mill clearing lots now that we would like to show you. Send a letter order if you can't call.

Having three warehouses to supply, we buy in large quantities—this means concessions from the manufacturer to us and special prices to you. Why not investigate?

Fall 1907

Trade Probabilities

The forecast we were bold enough to make six months ago in "The Review" has been so literally fulfilled, that we venture to prophesy again.

Fall 1907 will bring to light a similar condition of the market, only in a more aggravated degree, i.e,:---the continuance of advance in prices, and scarcity of many leading lines.

We offer the advantages of some OLD CONTRACTS, but advise the trade that orders MUST BE PLACED EARLY to obtain them.

MEN AND METHODS

The stores of Kingston, Brockville, Lindsay and Napanee—Some Interesting Systems Described—Dress Goods Opening — Early Morning Bargains.

VALLIERES', MONTREAL.

ONE of the most attractive stores of its size in the country is that of A. I. Vallieres & Co., Montreal. From the standpoints alike of construction, equipment, fitting and arrangement, this house deserves a high place among the model establishments of Canada. It possesses features that make it worth a visit from any merchant, whether located in a small town or a large city, who contemplates building a new store, or making improvements in his present premises.

The store is 50 x 100 feet, three floors and basement, and both in front and rear has magnificent natural illumination. It is located on a corner. The building is of red stone and quite modern in appearance. It has eight large windows at the side and two in the front.

The Lamson cash system leads from every section of the store to a balcony, in which is situated the office.

The top floor of the Vallieres Building is occupied by carpets and general housefurnishings. Goods are well displayed and everything has a bright, neat appearance. Another uart of the department is given over to blankets, comforters and quilts. The stock comprises lines from the cheapest to the best, for Mr. Vallieres believes in catering to every class of trade.

The equipment of the millinery department on the first floor is unusually fine. Showcases are of the best type, and numerous mirrors give a rich appearance. In the ready-to-wear department, also on this floor, the furnishings are of a high order. There are several splendid fitting rooms in connection.

On the ground floor ribbons and smallwares are directly in front of the entrance.

The basement is devoted almost entirely to floor oilcloths and linoleums. Here also is the reserve stock.

A. I. Vallieres is the sole proprietor of this business. Albert Girard, advertising manager, thus explains the policy pursued in regard to publicity: "We are most careful not to give the public a wrong impression about anything we mention."

Store of A. I. Vallieres & Co., Montreal.

A DRESS GOODS OPENING.

J. Sutcliffe & Sons, Lindsay, have a dress goods opening every Spring and Fall, distinct from the millinery event. It is always held in the evening, and has proved a splendid feature. The store closes at six o'clock as usual, and two hours are spent getting out the display of dress materials. At eight the doors are opened again.

Music is provided, and although the full staff is on hand, no attempt is made to sell anything. It is merely a show calculated to create a decided impression that will bring people back again.

Millinery is profitable. Formal openings are the rule.

Sutcliffe & Sons have been doing business in Lindsay for eight years. They do the buying here for another store in Oshawa. The lines carried are general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments, millinery, house furnishings, furs, men's furnishings, etc. The closing hour during July and August is five o'clock.

The men's wear department is at the rear, well away from the dry goods section.

Some carpets of the very expensive class are sold from sample.

Dressmakers are given rooms in the store without rental, and they sell only this store's goods. The profits, of course, go to themselves.

A very noticeable feature is a notion circle right before the entrance. Of course it is not really circular in shape, but, rather, eliptical. It is about thirty feet deep, so that there is space for the display of plenty of goods. There is a liberal employment of showcases and counter bins.

The store has its own delivery wagon, which leaves for certain sections of the town at certain hours every day. All parcels go to a special desk, and are entered in a book kept for that purpose. The number of the salesman goes opposite, as well as initials of driver and the time he leaves to deliver it. This affords a good means of tracing parcels that go astray. Those that are to go out in a hurry are marked "Rush" and placed in a separate pile. On busy days customers may leave parcels and receive a check for them.

The cost of doing business is not figured out exactly, but the business is departmentized so that a good deal of valuable information is available. Each section is charged with the merchandise received and credited with that sold. To do this it is necessary to dissect the sales checks every evening.

A good many mail orders are filled. This section of the business is mentioned prominently in all advertising matter. An excellent catalogue is issued also, and circulars are mailed from time to time. Regular space is used in papers at Fenelon Falls and Bobcaygeon. We hope to reproduce some of this store's advertising matter in an early issue. It is all of a very good class. It is prepared by W. J. Ferguson, who also has charge of the house furnishings department. Mr. Ferguson realizes thoroughly the value of descriptive advertising and practices it. He won the first prize in a contest conducted by the Lindsay Board of Trade. The subject was the town of Lindsay, and the best ad. was used in several manufacturing journals with the idea of attracting industries. Mr. Ferguson won eighth prize in a New York competition as well. In the house furnishing line he always has his eyes open for business that can be landed by going outside after it.

Sutcliffe & Sons operate on the cash and one price plan. Their store is one hundred and fifteen feet deep by thirty-five feet wide. They could use a great deal more space.

A NEW CURTAIN FIXTURE.

One of the most interesting features of Madill's, Napanee, is their curtain and drapery department. It occupies a separate section with ready-to-wear garments. The rear, and the walls for a short distance down each side, are lined with lockers, four deep. The woodwork is all imitation mahogany, with piano finish. The lockers are dust proof, and have a very handsome appearance. They are set off by a heavy brass rail running round the top. This fixture is Mr. Madill's own idea. "It cost considerable to put in," said he, "but it really saves money for me. I formerly lost in samples every year a sum equal to the total original expense. When you consider this and the greater quantity of goods it helps me to sell you will see that it has been an exceedingly good investment.

Carpets, rugs, etc., occupy an exclusive store, with a window devoted mainly to their use.

Reserve stock is kept in the basement, and at the rear of the dry goods store proper is a platform on which is located the whitewear department. Millinery has never been handled.

Stock boxes are used for hosiery, gloves, veilings and handkerchiefs, and notions are displayed in sets of bins arranged in tiers, which fit into large showcases. Each bin pulls out after the manner of a drawer.

The business is principally cash. However, it is stated in advertising matter that the terms are strictly cash.

The store has a frontage of one hundred feet, a quarter of an acre selling space. Only one floor is occupied. An entirely new front was put in recently.

Madill's is indeed neat and well equipped in every department. We hope in an early issue to reproduce a photo of the front. The lighting is exceptionally good; in fact, the sub-title "The Daylight Store" has been adopted, and it contains no element of exaggeration.

A mail order trade is being worked up, and circulars are occasionally sent out. Another advertising practice followed is that of distributing bills at the market and station every Saturday.

The delivery work is done by boys. All parcels are entered in a book, and as each one goes out the boy taking it signs his name or initials and the time. He must sign again and mark the time when he returns.

No extra charge is made for alterations in the ready-to-wear department, and in selling carpets customers are not required to pay for any goods but what are actually used.

This store employs sixteen salespeople.

DRY GOODS IN WAGON SHOP.

"We have no second price and no credit business," said A. J. Ford, of Lindsay. He was formerly a partner of J. W. Wakely. Four years ago the partnership was dissolved.

Some little time ago Mr. Ford had rather a unique and unpleasant experience. He occupied a store which was owned by one man, while the ground was the property of another. Through a difference in the time at which the lease of the ground and that of the store expired—and of which he was unaware—he was forced to vacate and there were no premises available. He rented an old wagon shop and set his stock up in there until better accommodation could be secured. As he says, it was a pretty stiff blow for a young man to meet, but he weathered it through and is doing very nicely. Mr. Ford is twenty-nine years of age and has been proprietor or co-proprietor of a business for ten years.

Both millinery and ready-to-wear are good departments, and the latter is growing rapidly.

Mr. Ford writes his own advertising matter. Some that we have before us now is good stuff, into which the descriptive element enters prominently.

He formerly conducted a general store and had sufficient experience with credit business to make him keep away from it entirely.

This store handles ladies' lines only.

A GOOD STORE WITH GOOD METHODS.

Laidlaw & Son, Kingston, occupy premises that are equipped throughout in up-to-date style, and everything seems to be kept in such a way as to show a thorough appreciation of the effect which neatness in a store has on the customer entering it.

The business is not wholly cash. All accounts are rendered monthly, and, generally, those which are unpaid after sixty days go to the division court. Constant attention to credits is practised and the cash basis is approached as closely as possible.

The first floor is given over almost entirely to ready-to-wear garments and the department is an exceptionally good one. For waists, etc., tables are used extensively. "We sell always from the top," said Mr. Laidlaw. "Customers may look over a garment and ask for a fresh one out of stock. It is then the salesperson's duty to persuade her that the one on display is without any fault that would make it undesirable, without, of course, running the risk of arousing any feeling of dissatisfaction. We find that this works splendidly. Last Fall we had only nine waists in stock that had marks on them. Garments sent out on approval are, when returned, pressed into shape. Another thing that helps is the practice of placing before a customer only a limited number of lines, for too many very often confuses and encourages indecision."

On the first floor is a row of fitting rooms. "When a lady wishing to purchase a garment comes in, accompanied by one or two others, we at once try to separate her from them. The fitting room generally provides a convenient way of accomplishing this. The interest of her friend or friends is engaged by another saleslady, who shows them some especially nice goods. Thus the actual buyer is left free from their criticisms and is sure to be more satisfied with her purchase."

When goods are brought back it is this firm's policy to promptly return the money, and then if the customer wishes to spend it again, well and good. This leaves a good impression on the customer's mind, and the contrary would be the case if it appeared that it hurt badly to give back the cash.

An attempt was made some time ago to charge for alterations, but it did not meet with success. In regard to this question, Mr. Laidlaw remarked: "A retailer who sets out to satisfy all the whims of his customers is only borrowing trouble." The garment section is well lighted.

The Glasgow House, Regina.

The store is equipped with parcel carriers. All goods are conveyed to a special department at the rear, where they are wrapped up. Occasionally they are checked over and re-measured. Salespeople never know when this may be done and it encourages them to be careful. Over-measurement by employes who are serving friends and do not want to be regarded as mean is the cause of considerable loss in many stores. It is seldom done in a spirit of dishonesty.

The department system is not carried out completely and the cost of doing business cannot be arrived at in exact figures.

Outside of the office a merit list is hung, on which is placed each month the standing of salespeople, based on the volume of their sales. This arouses keen competition and establishes a good basis upon which to judge what salaries should be paid. When approached for an increase, Mr. Laidlaw turns to this list and discusses, in a way that must appeal to the applicant as fair and reasonable, whether or not his or her results seem to warrant more remuneration. Then he sometimes observes employes who appear to have all the qualifications of good salespeople, and yet are not attaining a very high place on the list. They are called to the office and the matter is talked over in a nice quiet way. Badgering is never resorted to. This opens the way for giving effective advice on the topic of salesmanship, and the system brings excellent results. When it is found that an employe is not going to make good, another one is installed. All are impressed with the fact that the better their sales, the more money they are entitled to receive—it all rests with themselves. Thus the firm's best interests are made their interests in a way that impresses them strongly.

Laidlaw & Son do not make a feature of bargains.

On the first landing of the staircase leading to the garment section is a twelve-foot wall case, which is a splendid seller. The trim is changed regularly.

DISCOUNTS PAY RENT, TAXES, LIGHTING.

James Johnston, Kingston, carries no millinery. In ready-to-wear, trade is confined mainly to skirts and white goods. Credits are small and are watched closely. Cash discounts pay rent, taxes and lighting. Mr. Johnston holds very few special sales, and then only when necessary to clear out stock.

EARLY MORNING BARGAINS.

R. Waldron, Kingston, has a corner location, which the business has occupied since 1869. The store is 60 x 82 feet, and three stories high. Ready-to-wear garments are on the first floor and carpets, etc., on the second. The garment trade is good. No charge is made for alterations.

When this store has a bargain to offer its customers the sale is advertised to commence at eight-thirty. It is practically over by ten or ten-thirty, about which time regular business opens up briskly, and the latter is not interfered with. A sale is never put on unless there is something worth while to offer. Mr. Waldron believes his plan has all the virtue of the confinement of bargains to a separate department. "When we cut prices we make them good and cheap, and have lots of the goods as well."

In discussing the great value of a good class of salespeople, Mr. Waldron pointed to two men, one of whom had been with him for twenty-six years and the other for twenty-seven years. "We make it worth a good man's while to stay here," said he. The older hands have a very material influence over the others in the way of coaching them in the best methods of salesmanship.

There is no special parcel desk, but salespeople are liable to have their own parcels checked over at any time. This is part of the store system, and it is not understood to imply any suspicion of dishonesty. Where employes make a practice of giving overmeasurement he thinks that a fine would have a good effect.

Large numbers of small orders are filled. A mailing list has been compiled and circulars are sent out occasionally.

Some credit business is done, but it is limited to customers who are known to be pretty safe.

The store has an interesting arrangement for the delivery of parcels. A young man, who was formerly in its employ, was encouraged to purchase a horse and wagon, on the agreement that he would receive $12 a week in the busy season and $10 a week the rest of the year for his services, he to maintain the horse and pay for all repairs to the rig. There is absolutely no expense to the store outside of the amounts stated above.

"Our cash discounts pay all salaries," said Mr. Waldron, "and we have thirty to thirty-three hands."

INTERESTING VARIETY OF LINES.

Robt. Wright & Co., Brockville, carry an interesting variety of lines, among which are the following: General dry goods, millinery, ready-to-wear garments, men's furnishings, boys' clothing, furniture, carpets, rugs, oilcloths, linoleums and other house furnishings, china and glassware, cut glass, all kinds of kitchen utensils, books, stationery, gas stoves, soaps, etc. The store has a frontage of sixty-five feet and is one hundred and twenty-five feet deep. Wright & Co. occupy two floors and basement. Not a square foot of space is wasted and the need for enlargement is very evident.

Reserve stock is kept in a gallery running along one side of the ground floor, an arrangement which is found exceedingly convenient. Salespeople can go up there in a moment for anything that they may require. Galleries also accommodate the offices and millinery workroom, saving a good deal of floor space.

The "kitchen department" is located in the basement. This includes china, glassware, cut glass, etc. Oilcloths and linoleums occupy the front section. At the rear is the carpet department in a separate room. Quite a large stock of cut glass is carried, and a splendid large show case is used for displaying it.

The accompanying diagram shows the ground floor arrangement. An excellent feature is the notion circle at the front. We are told that the sales from this department are very large. Among the lines carried in it are jewelry and necklaces, books and stationery, souvenir goods, picture postcards, hand bags, pyrography work, combs, brushes, perfumes, toilet soaps, and all kinds of smallwares. Fine modern show cases enclose the department, and they are dressed with good effect. The ground floor is divided into two stores, connected by archways. One is taken up mainly by the splendid garment section, in connection with which are carried belts and neckwear.

The furniture department is on the second floor—the first is occupied by offices, but will be turned into selling space as soon as possible. This line was added about two years ago, and notwithstanding the competition of three exclusive furniture stores, it has gone ahead rapidly. The firm realized that where people purchase their furniture they generally get carpets and other house furnishings, and they considered that they stood a good chance of getting a fair share of the trade. The one price plan was put in operation here, as throughout the rest of the store, and was found to operate materiallly in their favor.

Millinery is one of the strongest departments in the store, so we were told. It is thoroughly well equipped, and the better class of trade is catered to particularly. Formal openings are held.

As stated above, ready-to-wear garments are confined to a separate store. A large window is devoted to them almost entirely. The department is excellently fitted up, and the goods are displayed in an attractive, effective way. No extra charge is made for alterations.

An upholsterer is engaged all the year round. He also looks after the laying of carpets.

Gas stoves are rather out of the line of most dry goods stores, but this firm handles a good many of them. Laundry and other soaps are also sold in large quantity.

On the second floor is located a manufacturing section, where skirts and some lines of whitewear are made. Here all alterations of ready-to-wear garments are attended to. Special orders are also executed for yacht flags, men's athletic trousers, etc.

Dressmaking is a new feature, but it is turning out pretty well.

A good many mail orders are filled, and one girl in the store looks after all of these. Circulars and bills are distributed from time to time to stimulate this end of the business.

The firm does a good class of advertising. Regular space is used in the local papers, and it is filled with matter that is bound to draw trade. George Wright does all of this work, and he strives to make his matter as descriptive as possible. Only a few items are used each day, but each one of them tells. We have before us several booklets that have been issued at different times. One is entitled "The Carpet Question," twenty pages; another "House-furnishing Hints," twenty pages, and a third, "Views of Brockville and Its Greatest Store," sixteen pages. This last named is exactly what it claims to be. It speaks of Brockville as the "City of the Thousand Islands," and gives a number of cuts showing its beautiful location on the St. Lawrence, some of its public buildings, and interior and exterior views of the Wright store. When a special newspaper ad. is run copies are struck off to be inserted in booklets and parcels. These are always printed on a good class of paper, and it is found that they do good work. Mr. Wright always insists upon a certain amount of style in the setting of ads.

Friday is generally bargain day, and undesirable goods are marked down and cleared out. No special buying is done for these sales.

Each department is conducted as a separate store. There are thirty-three of them, and for accounting purposes they are designated by letters. When a shipment of goods comes to hand it is charged to the various departments receiving it. Then each day's sales from each department are credited. One girl's time is wholly taken up dissecting sales cheques. By this system it is easy to detect any weak spots very soon after they appear, and they may be quickly remedied. Some time ago it was found that the ribbon department was not paying. It was located toward the back of the store, near the millinery section, and instructions were given to have it brought up to the front. A change was noticeable in short order, and now the department is contributing its share of profits. One thing that likely made a difference also is the fact that milliners might often run down and take ribbon for the workroom and neglect to have it charged up. Thus millinery would profit at the expense of ribbons.

"We figure," said George Wright, "that we can afford to pay salespeople five per cent. of the sales. We keep track of each one's sales, and are, therefore, in a position to know just about what salary he or she is deserving of. It is quite a valuable guide."

Robert Wright, founder of the business, started out as parcel boy for a Brockville firm. Fifty years ago he entered business on his own account. His golden anniversary was marked by a special two-day sale, ten per cent. of the cash receipts of which were turned over to the Ladies' Auxiliary of the General Hospital. A window was fitted up to represent a hospital ward. The ladies had a Japanese tea room besides. Notwithstanding the fact that one of the days was very unpleasant outdoors, the percentage going to the hospital was over $200. Of course, it was not necessary to reduce any prices for this sale.

Rough Diagram Showing Ground Floor Arrangement of R. Wright & Co's Store, Brockville.

Fifteen years ago Wright & Co. had nine employes; now they have seventy-five.

The business is not entirely cash, but credits are looked after very closely.

The one price principle has always been strictly adhered to.

The firm has its own delivery outfit. Salespeople wrap their own parcels.

Last December 24, the number of sale checks filed at the office was 2922.

C. H. Post, of Brockville, succeeded Herman Shepherd about ten months ago. He sells for cash only and is progressing very well. The store has been newly fitted up, and seems to indicate a good deal of energy on the part of the proprietor.

WILL MEET ANY CATALOGUE PRICE.

Mr. Baird, in charge of the Brockville store of Baird Bros., who also have a business in Smith's Falls, has given a great deal of study to the competition of catalogue houses, and he talks about as interestingly on the subject as any merchant we have met. We asked him if he often had people quote mail order prices, and he replied, "We sincerely wish they would do so, for that would give us just the opportunity we are looking for. We will meet any price of Eaton's on any dry goods lines. In our store you will always find an Eaton catalogue, and we desire nothing better than a chance to compare figures. Numbers of times we have had customers bring in samples of goods bought through mail order, and our regular price has been slightly lower."

TABLES USED EFFECTIVELY.

When we dropped off at Lindsay, J. W. Wakely had only been in new premises seven weeks, yet he was almost completely settled. On the first floor at the front, is the millinery show room. The furniture is all of the mission style, in dark green Flemish finish, even to the mirror frames. A dark green rug completes a rich effect.

Ready-to-wear is a strong department, in fact, one of the strongest in the store. No extra charge is made for alterations.

House furnishings are located on the first floor and the dressmakers on the second.

Strictly cash and one price is what Mr. Wakely advertises. He had a good opportunity while a clerk to study the workings of the credit system, and decided to have none of it.

Down the centre of the store are six small display tables, which are found very useful. Plenty of space is left for customers to walk round them. One may, on occasion, be used for hosiery, another for underwear, a couple of others for dress goods, and so on. The ledges are kept nicely trimmed also.

When a special sale is to be put on the newspaper announcement is supplemented with hand bills. Circulars are sent out occasionally also, to develop mail order trade.

"Goods right or money refunded," is a motto of Wakely's.

NO MORE BALANCES.

C. J. Corrigan, of Kingston, conducts a cash business In five years he has not had a total of more than $30 on his books, and that amount was made up of balances

"Where there are balances after this I have decided to give it outright to the customer," said Mr. Corrigan. "One day a girl who had been in the habit of buying a good deal from me came in for a skirt, and it happened that she was twenty-five cents short of the price. I told her she could settle the difference the next time she was in. I have not seen her in here since. That quarter cost me the girl's trade."

MAIL ORDERS FALLING OFF.

O'Loughlin & McIntyre, Lindsay, stick as close to the cash basis as possible. Accounts are rendered regularly every month. Very little is lost through bad debts. Several years ago a boot and shoe firm moved there from Peterboro and refused to give anyone a cent's worth of credit. People said they would do very little business, but just the contrary has been the case. This has helped the drygoodsmen and others not a little in drawing the credit strings a good deal tighter.

Millinery is not handled. Trade in skirts and waists is good, but suits have been rather slow.

The firm has little use for bargains except for clearing purposes. They claim to have an unusually clean stock.

Mr. O'Loughlin told us he felt sure the operations of the catalogue houses had fallen very considerably in Lindsay and vicinity the past two years.

MADE FULL PROFIT FROM BEGINNING.

Newman & Shaw, Kingston, opened up in business about two years and a half ago. The first twelve months their turn-over was $32,000 and last year it increased to $42,000. They give very little credit, and that is known to be pretty safe. They carry general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments and some house furnishings. Wash goods is their specialty, and business on that line is exceedingly good. They are endeavoring to make a substantial reputation for themselves in these goods, and the idea is a good one. Such a plan, if successful, is bound to be of great benefit to their business as a whole. Ready-to-wear trade is small yet, but growing.

This firm does not believe in cut prices unless there is a very good reason why they should be offered. "We occasionally offer some inducement in a line or two so as to get the people in where they can see the goods we have displayed," said Mr. Newman. "It is our aim to get as much out in sight as possible." Speaking of the progress they had made, he said: "Some merchants in starting out have an idea that they mush sacrifice goods for a while to make the people take notice. We didn't believe in that, and have steadily followed the principle of making a fair profit on everything. The results have been satisfying.

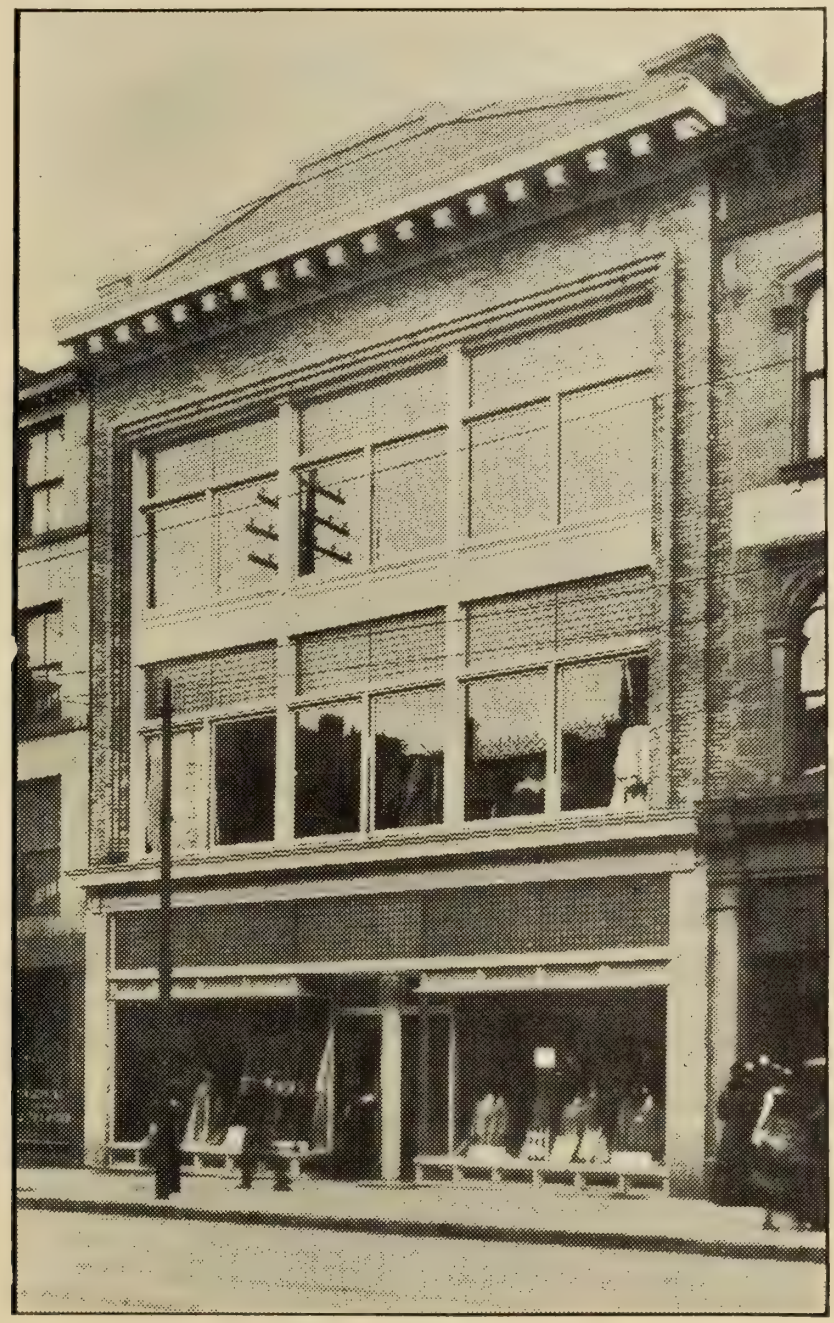
This young firm appears to have plenty of energy and judgment behind it.

PUBLIC ABLE TO PAY CASH.

The business of R. Davis & Sons, Brockville, was established in 1876, and for many years was operated on the cash and credit basis. Now, however, the firm buys and sells entirely for cash, and since the change was made trade has increased very materially. In speaking of this to The Review one of its members said: "There should not be a dollar's worth of goods sold on credit at the present time; people generally are prosperous enough to pay cash for everything they get. We formerly did a large credit business, and are heartily glad to get away from it. Now we can buy our stock for cash, and I'll tell you the discounts amount to a substantial profit."

The lines carried are general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments, house furnishings and men's wear. Millinery is not regarded as profitable, and has not been handled. Men's furnishings and clothing are confined to the rear section of the ground floor, where they are sufficiently isolated to avoid the difficulties sure to arise when they are mixed in with general dry goods.

Some mail order trade is done, and circulars in this connection are sent out occasionally.



The firm has its own delivery outfit, and it is found to be a good advertisement as well as a big help to efficiency in the general service.

Bargain sales are seldom put on, and then only when it is necessary to clear out some lines. Of course, we do not mean by this that a leader is not occasionally offered in some one department of other.

Regarding knitted goods, in lines where fixed prices prevail, it has, of course, been necessary to advance figures considerably. For instance, underwear that formerly sold at $1 is now marked at $1.25. The fact that values are not so good this season is made clear to every customer. "We let our people know exactly what they are getting, in the knitted goods department as well as every other department," The Review was told.

Stock is watched closely and when it is seen that a line is not moving it is marked down and cleared out without delay. At stock-taking, goods that are likely to depreciate in value are never reckoned at cost, but at a very conservative selling estimate.

New Store of Finch Bros., Hamilton.

NEW HAMILTON STORE.

Finch Bros., Hamilton, are very proud of their new store, which is illustrated herewith. The first floor is devoted to millinery and ready-to-wear. At the rear are the fitting rooms in connection with the manufacturing-to-order department. The second floor is given over entirely to workrooms.

The store faces north, and the three-ray prisms on each floor provide splendid light. No awnings are necessary.

The colored dress goods department has been brought up to the front of the store, and the change has made a big improvement.

READY-TO-WEAR STOCK BOOK.

The Robinson Co., of Napanee, recently purchased the block which they occupy. They employ a staff of seventy-nine people, and the lines carried are general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments, millinery, furs, house furnishings and men's wear. The last-named department is confined to an exclusive store.

No section of the business has shown a larger increase than the ready-to-wear department. It occupies a good deal of space on the first floor. Alterations are not charged for except on goods sold at cut prices. There is an excellent system in operation for keeping record of stock and sales. When a shipment of, say, skirts, is received, they are entered singly in a stock book and numbered. There are columns also for cost mark, name of purchaser, with address, selling price, and dates both of receipt and sale. As each garment is sold the salesperson detaches the tag and marks upon it the buyer's name and address. This is filed at the office. Each evening the tags are gone over and the information which they contain is entered in the stock book. By this system a complete record is always on hand and from it can be taken the best kind of a mailing list for any literature the firm wishes to send out.

"The chief value of this system," Mr. Robinson told us, "is that it leads us to figure out why people who purchased garments from us last year have not done so this year. We keep track of men's clothing in the same way. The time required to do this amounts to very little."

Millinery pays a profit. Formal openings are held.

The day we visited this store the representative of a fur house was there taking special orders for furs. The firm urges upon its customers the desirability of purchasing in the quiet season.

In answer to a question by The Review, Mr. Robinson said he believed he did much less business than formerly in Napanee and district surrounding. This store does a mail order business itself, and sends out circulars to encourage the growth of this department.

A limited amount af credit is given, but it has to pass close scrutiny before being allowed.

The store has its own delivery wagon. A new one of handsome appearance was purchased recently.

We found the ledge down each side of the dry goods section given over to hosiery. It was the biggest display of the kind we have yet seen. The trim conveyed the idea at once that hosiery is a department of importance with this firm. We were informed that this is a fact. The advertising man won a prize in the Louis Hermsdorf ad-writing contest some time ago, which goes to show that he is well capable of presenting hosiery as well as other store news in an interesting way.

The Robinson Co. have decided to make extensive alterations in their premises. Another store will be taken in, which will allow of a good part of the present men's wear section being annexed to the dry goods store proper. A lot of new space will be opened up on the first floor, one half of which will be given over to ready-to-wear garments.

VALUE OF CONVENIENT LOCATION.

With Crumley Bros., of Kingston, millinery has hardly paid its way the last two years, and at best it has done no more than meet expenditures. The showroom is tasty, and in the centre is a heavily upholstered circular seat, surmounted by a palm.

With every cash sale a coupon is given and when they total up to a certain point they may be exchanged for a rocking chair, a piece of fancy china, or one of a variety of other articles. It is found that this plan encourages customers to pay cash

Formal millinery openings are held. The occasion is marked by special displays in all departments. A band is sometimes engaged and draws big crowds, upon whom it is desirable to make a good impression.

Carpets, oilcloths, linoleums and other house furnishings are carried on the second floor. An elevator will, no doubt, be absolutely necessary before long.

Veilings were formerly kept in the millinery department. Customers have been known to enquire for them and turn and walk out when told they would have to go to the first floor. Then a fixture was purchased and veilings have since been displayed near the front of the ground floor. Part of the stock is now carried, and more goods were sold the first week than during a whole month under the old arrangement.

Stock boxes are used for hosiery. They paid for themselves in a short time after their installation.

On the ground floor shelving was removed from one section and a rod placed along the inside of the top. Stands used for displaying waists, in boxes, are hung from this, and there is still room for another row beneath.

This store employs forty-five hands, thirty to thirty-five of whom are salespeople.

A FINE LINDSAY STORE.

Dundas & Flavelle, Lindsay, have an exceptionally fine store and we should judge that it gives a fair indication of the volume of trade which they do. On the ground floor are general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments and men's wear. The office at the rear occupies a good deal of space. Millinery and house furnishings are located on the first floor.

Men's wear is an important section. Fine, large showcases are used for the display of furnishings and wardrobes and tables for clothing. Boys' clothing is made a separate department. Some time ago a wall case for hats was purchased and placed near the entrance to the men's section. It paid for itself in a short time.

This store does a good class of advertising and always has its windows well trimmed.

We will give a diagram showing arrangement of departments in an early issue.

MAINLY HIGH CLASS TRADE.

On another page will be found a cut and diagram illustrative of the splendid store of Steacy's, Kingston. It is one of the best to be found in the smaller cities of Ontario.

This store operates principally on high class lines, and not only attracts its fair share of business from Kingston and vicinity, but gets a good deal of American trade as well. One member of the firm stated to us that very little dress goods was sold at less than a dollar a yard, and more waists are disposed of at $3 to $6 each than below those figures. A large stock of trimmings is carried, some lines running as high as $4 and $5 a yard.

The strictly cash system has not been adopted but credits are confined to people who are known to be safe, and all accounts are rendered monthly.

Millinery is a big department. It is located at the front of the first floor and the large windows shown in the cut give excellent light. Formal openings are held.

The ready-to-wear section is one of the most active in the store. No charge is made for alterations.

A great deal of attention is given the trimming department, which ranks among the best in Canada, not excepting even the large city stores. Joseph Stacey is recognized as an authority on trimmings. Eleven hundred lines are carried, and an unusually large selling space is devoted to them. A sample of each is shown in books made specially for the purpose. A number opposite corresponds with the number on the stock box.

Dressmaking is in charge of a French modiste. Of course in itself it is not profitable, but through it a great deal of dress goods and trimmings are sold. The department is entered through a waiting-room, well fitted up. Here some high class gowns are displayed on forms. One lace gown that we saw was priced at $100, exclusive of the cost of making.

Hosiery is carried in stock boxes.

Each department is charged with goods purchased for it, and credited with the goods sold. For accounting purposes the various sections are by letters, A to O. One reason for not carrying out the department idea completely is that certain customers insist on the services of certain salespeople, no matter what they are buying.

A large number of mail orders are filled. Newspaper advertising is relied upon mainly to draw this trade, although formerly a catalogue was issued.

This store turns its stock over three times a year.

The windows are always well trimmed, and the ledges and fixtures are well taken care of in this respect also. Prices are seldom placed in the windows. "In a place the size of Kingston," it was explained, " a lady buying a dress from us would go down street and everyone who pays attention to such things would be in a position to remark : 'Mrs.——— is wearing a new dress, and it cost $—— a yard at Steacy's.' "

Parcels are all wrapped at a special desk which is in charge of an inspector and two girls. The former keeps track of all sales and the total has to correspond with the cashier's returns every evening. Parcels are delivered by the firm's own wagon.

The staff numbers seventy-five. "We get the best help obtainable," The Review was told, "and it certainly pays to do so."

Stock boxes are used for underwear. The dimensions of the store are 100 x 50 feet.

WELCOME COMPARISON WITH CATALOGUE PRICES.

Lewis & Patterson, Brockville, used to carry millinery but dropped it because profits were too small. The firm does some mail order business.

The Review had quite an interesting conversation here in regard to competition of catalogue houses. This firm would welcome comparisons by customers between its prices and values and those of Eaton's or other concerns. "Our dress goods girls generally run down to Toronto when on vacation and take a pretty thorough look around the big stores. They find no prices quoted in this line that we cannot meet."

ANOTHER CASH BUSINESS.

E. E. McGaffey, Lindsay, does an all-cash business. He carries no millinery. The lines handled are general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments, men's furnishings and clothing, and house furnishings. Mr. McGaffey is a big advertiser. He finds that his customers are demanding a better class of goods in all lines. Ready-to-wear is a particularly good section.

Lady (in draper's shop): "And is this color also genuine ?"

Assistant : "As genuine as the roses on your cheeks, miss."

Lady : "H'm ! Show me another one."

GEO. BORGFELDT & CO.

A Dominion charter has been granted George Borgfeldt & Company, Limited, Toronto, with a capital of $50,000, divided into $100 shares. The incorporators were Marcell Kahle, merchant, and Emile Kaufmann, merchant, both of New York; James Bicknell, barrister; James W. Bain, barrister, and Alfred Bicknell, barrister, of Toronto. The object of the company is "the importing, selling, buying and dealing in chinaware, fancy goods, toys, novelties, notions and other articles of domestic or foreign manufacture."

PARTNERSHIP REGISTRATION ACT.

Sixteen St. Thomas firms were served with summonses to appear in court on a charge of violating the Partnership Registration Act, by not registering their co-partnerships, and for carrying on business under a certain name for at least six months without complying with the terms of the Act. The informant gave the name of W. H. Fry, Toronto, but it is not known whether he is acting for himself or the Government. The law provides a penalty of $100, half of which goes to the informant.

BE NOT CONTENT.

Be not content—contentment means inaction;
The growing soul aches on its upward quest;
Satiety is twin to satisfaction;
All great achievements spring from life's unrest.

Were man contented with his lot for ever,
He had not sought strange seas with sails unfurled;
And the vast wonders of our shores had never Dawned on the gaze of an admiring world.

Tiny roots, deep in the dark mould hiding,
Would never bless the earth with leaf and flower
Were it not an inborn restlessness abiding
In seed and germ to stir them with its power.

Prize what is yours, but be not quite contented;
There is a healthful restlessness of soul,
By which a mighty purpose is augmented,
In urging men to reach a higher goal.

So when the restless impulse rises, driving
Your calm content before it, do not grieve;
It is the upward reaching and the striving
Of the God in you, to achieve, achieve.

SAVING SPELLS SUCCESS.

Thoughts grow, men grow, and the universe grows, but none of these expands as easily and naturally as money.

Men with small salaries often argue that they have little chance to gain much wealth, but they overlook the principle that a man is rich or poor not because of what he earns so much as because of what he does or does not save. Little boys usually begin playing ball by making soap bubbles; but they are not satisfied until they have the largest, strongest football money can buy. Likewise young men starting out to work usually begin with meagre salaries, but if they save part of their earnings they often have a good-sized fortune before they are old.

A wise investment means a chance to double capital, while money frittered away will certainly bring its owner no return.

Business Management.

By HOWARD R. WELLINGTON.

The Evolution of Bookkeeping Methods.

From the earliest times those engaged in "barter" or trade have found it necessary to keep a record of their transactions for reference, especially so in the case of transactions not carried out on a cash basis. The ancients used to cut their entries in stone tablets which served the purpose of books, a crude way, and one which would not suit a few of our modern book-keepers, who are in the habit of making mistakes that require correction.

Single Entry.

Single entry book-keeping was used largely for a number of years, and is in use by a large number of concerns to-day; but the necessity of obtaining more practical information in reference to the cost of running a business and the profit of trading, has forced the adoption of the more modern double entry methods. The distinguishing feature of single entry book-keeping is that only personal accounts are kept in the ledger. This system of book-keeping contemplates only such a record, or the filing of only such documents, as will enable the proprietor to determine at any time the assets and liabilities of his business. For this purpose the practice is to journalize and post personal accounts only. Cash receipts and payments are entered in the cash book, and bills receivable and payable in the bill book. Since no accounts showing gains or losses are kept in single entry, it follows that an itemized statement of the gains and losses of the business cannot be obtained, hence the development of the double entry methods.

The net gain or net loss of the business can be determined, however, in the following manner: First, ascertain the present worth by finding the difference between the assets and liabilities, and then compare it with the investment. If the present worth is greater than the investment the difference shows a net gain; if less, a net loss.

Double Entry.

The object of modern double entry book-keeping is to determine, at any time, the true condition of a business.

The underlying principle of double entry is, of course, that every debit must have a corresponding credit entry. The general rule in making entries may be clearly stated as follows: *Debit whatever costs value or receives value, and credit what produces value or parts with value. If this rule is observed the book-keeper need never go astray in making an entry of any nature. The principal books used in double entry are as follows:

The day book, which comprises records of sales and purchases.

The cash book, which records cash and bank transactions.

The bill book, which records all bills receivable and bills payable.

The journal, which records now-a-days transactions which cannot be conveniently recorded elsewhere, adjusting entries, etc.

The ledger, which contains the final results gathered together and posted from all the other books into the various accounts.

Sales Records.

Notwithstanding the great advance made in recent years in the science and practice of accounts, it is only to be expected that in some quarters antiquated and clumsy methods will yet be found, which are dear to the merchant's heart. A book-keeper for a retail dry goods store once complained of the overwhelming amount of work he was called upon to perform. This work had largely to do with recording credit sales. The sales tickets were made out in duplicate by the salesman, the original copy of which was handed to the customer, the duplicate sheet being given over to the book-keeper to record. From these sales tickets a day book was written up by copying item by item in detail, and from the day book each item was carefully copied into a sales ledger, this being considered necessary in order to provide each customer with a detailed statement of the purchases made during the month. Naturally the next step would be to copy each item again on the monthly statement which was presented to the customer in detail on the first of each month.

Stop and think a minute! Suppose there are five hundred accounts on the books of this merchant and each customer buys from three to four times a month, each sales item being recorded four times in detail, think of the time wasted in re-copying such items. Perhaps such an illustration is unusual in the actual course of business, but there is no doubt that a great amount of thought and system could be intelligently applied to our records. A system for recording sales to the best advantage, and with the best results, will be illustrated in a subsequent issue of The Review.

The Cash Book.

The cash book with a number of columns is the most popular in use to-day. Special columns on the debit side for "bank," "cash sales," "bills receivable discounted," or any other suitable heading may be arranged. On the credit side in addition to the usual column for the bank account, the expense accounts may be sub-divided under any number of headings, such as postage, stationery, expense, freight and duty, etc., the totals of all these columns being posted at the end of the month.

The main feature to bear in mind in dealing with a cash book is that it is simply a ledger accouunt, the items on the debit side being posted to the credit of some other representative account, and the items on the credit side being posted to the debit of the respective accounts named.

THE MACFARLANE SHOE CO.

A Dominion charter has been granted the Macfarlane Shoe Co., Limited, Montreal, with a capital of $150,000, divided in $100 shares. The incorporators were: Norman Macfarlane, manufacturer, of Westmount, and Howard T. Perry, superintendent, and Chas. H. Buchanan, accountant, both of Montreal, and Edgar Gauthier, manufacturer, of Outremont, and Oscar Ethier, bookkeeper, of Maisonneuve. The object of the company is "to manufacture, buy, sell, and otherwise dispose of boots, shoes, gaiters and every sort and description of footwear."

Good Advertising

How to Produce It

Brief Talks Given Monthly
By T. Johnson Stewart

The bashful lover may get there in time ; but advertising on the same plan is liable to prove a losing proposition.—Rusty Mike's Diary.

It's on record that we endorsed Rusty Mike's philosophy. He hits the nail square and true on the head, as a general rule ; but this time he merely strikes a glancing blow. A coy, young thing, newly out, may admire a heroic dare-devil, but the woman worth winning has a good deal of respect for the easy-going, bashful suitor. She feels that the bashful one is peculiarly her own. He is easier managed than a broken colt and nothing short of an earthquake ripping up a great gulf betwixt them will keep her from annexing the lad. We're not so smart as we think we are. We think that we are the whole outfit in the march to the altar, while, as a matter of fact, the majority of us are led up there to tip the parson before we realize that the lady in the case is playing all the trump cards.

The veteran lover feigns a bashfulness so like the real thing that even designing mammas are fooled. Why ? Because when it comes to making "the dearest girl on earth" Mrs. Jones, bashfulness wins every time. Young man ! if you would profit by the sweat of her father's brow—prance about as innocently as a babe in the surf and she will consider it a call from heaven to shield you from the wiles of wicked women and reveal to you the nature of a perfect lady's love. I'm not soaring into the realm of poetry and emotion ; on the contrary, I am handing out petrified facts.

The bashful lover is a sure winner and, although Rusty Mike's analogy was most unfortunate, quite a number of ads. would be more forceful if statements made in them were tinged with a little bashfulness. The brand of advertising which does not betray that bashfulness inseparable from "sweet reasonableness" is worse than it might be. Human nature is about wearied of the notoriously unwarrantable phrases and assertions of the ordinary ad-writer. The manufacturer and wholesaler, and in fact the professional adman err more in this respect than retail merchants.

"The Best on Earth !"

"Competition Defied !"

"You cannot Afford to Do Without It !"

These are familiar samples of assertions and phrases occurring in unbashful advertising, which do more to antagonize reasonable buyers than most seem to imagine. Study the publicity pages of our popular magazines and you'll be startled. There are always several Best Automobiles, Best Pianos, Best Talking Machines. Again and again you'll read of manufacturers in the same line defying competition, and, of course, there are a thousand and one articles which you positively "cannot afford to be without." Often these ads. betray literary and artistic ability, but one must infer that the writers are woefully unobservant, and about as ignorant of human nature as the inmates of a young ladies' seminary. When a man tells me that he has reasons for thinking his brand of goods the best on the market I am inclined to investigate. But when a merchant or manufacturer boldly declares that his special brand is the best on earth, or defies competition, or merely intimates that I cannot afford to do without a certain article, well, I'm inclined to show him differently. I am prepared to assert, and practically prove, that space in some of our best magazines, trade journals and newspapers would be cheap at about double the price. Month after month and year after year one sees various brands of exaggerated advertising appearing in our best papers and periodicals. These ads. do pay. But how much more would they mean to the manufacturer if the man who prepared the copy were sufficient of an expert to abstain from all too extravagant claims. You wouldn't buy a three-hundred acre farm in the wheat belt for the purpose of raising wheat on thirty acres. Nor would you cultivate the land thoroughly and then scatter unproductive grain over the most of it. And, yet, more than a few merchants and manufacturers do something extraordinarily like that. They buy valuable space and cover it with unproductive generalities. Or they fill their copy with exaggerated statements, and that's just as bad business as sowing tares among wheat. Every exaggeration reduces the effectiveness of advertising copy by a percentage in the ratio of its distance from the truth. Miraculous happenings can only appeal to ignorant people. The buyers of the world's merchandise are reasonable men and women, more or less, and they are becoming more reasonable. Even Rusty Mike will admit that his bashfulness on the august occasion was accepted by his lady as the highest form of flattery. Mike, you'll have to revise your diary ! Of course, our readers realize that the philosopher of the coast refers particularly to the man who only advertises on his wife's birthdays. A woman's birthdays are never very frequent, and there comes a time when she refuses to acknowledge them. Some business men advertise on the same plan. They never get the habit good and strong. And they abandon the game before they realize its significance in the least degree. It is this sort of bashfulness that Rusty Mike righteously deplores.

the big ad. appearing above Thomas C. Watkins' name in order that the idea may be obliterated for all time. Only progressive merchants would have the hardihood to occupy as much space regularly as some Hamilton merchants do. The big ad. we have reduced and reproduced occupied a space 21x11 inches in the Hamilton Herald of April the seventeenth—a space large enough to satisfy the most progressive and daring of merchants doing business in Canada.

This ad. conforms to the first principle of all newspaper publicity. It is attractive—sufficiently so to arrest the attention of the majority of women. Price is displayed throughout—not boisterously, but effectively. Sometimes figures are big enough in dry goods advertising to cause one to doubt the merchant's sincerity. This may be purely imaginary on my part, but I look on the too big display, as far as price is concerned, as a bluff pure and simple. I like the consistency of the typographical work throughout "The Right House" ad. and the evident care the adman has taken to produce a perfectly balanced piece of work. More attractive this ad. might have been. A few more small illustrations would have added to its eye-rivetting qualities and removed the slight symptoms of crowding that solid reading matter never fails to beget in the mind of the reader.

The editorial, or introductory, talk does not please me. It is mediocre. The man who arranged that ad. can write far more convincingly and reasonably, or I am much mistaken. The introduction is not in harmony with the fine descriptive matter to be found in the body of the ad. The writer probably only intended to boom his store and its facilities. But he has overshot the mark. "Sixty-four years of business has brought the Right House into close connection with the best manufacturers in Europe—manufacturers who will not sell to competing stores." Now, even if that be true, it is so desperately improbable on the face of it that it is a poor reason to advance for the unique position of "The Right House." Mr. Watkins has other and better reasons to advance for the position his house occupies. The fact is, the ad. would have been stronger if the introduction had been left out. There are reasons, reasons which would appeal strongly to every national being, for "The Supremacy of Right House Values" and "Right House Qualities," but I fear the adman overlooked them in a vain attempt to overwhelm the good judgment of his readers by dazzling—if not exaggerated—assertions.

This criticism might be advantageously heeded by Canada's best dry goods admen. Introductory talks rarely stand analysis. And our merchant princes may be thankful that our wives and sweethearts are so delightfully careless regarding advertising editorials. The ladies want the essential facts. The first thing to rivet a woman's attention about the ad. we've teproduced is the item: "JAUNTY, PRACTICAL TRIMMED HATS ONLY $3.50." Men are far more apt to read introductory talks than women. As soon as the average citizen—he's a pretty intelligent fellow—notes a bargain he begins to wonder how in thunder the store can sell at the prices. He searches out a reason for this price. If the store's buyers have managed to corner a manufacturer's goods he knows why "The Right House," or "The Big Store" can sell at the prices. All men are like all women in one respect. They are constantly looking for bargains. But a man wants to know the reason why behind his bargain, the woman seldom cares. Don't infer from this that all women are unreasonable and slight introductory remarks. Some women read the introduction I've criticized, and said—"Nonsense." As a matter of fact, I know two who did, which goes to prove that an introduction should contain more than mere assertions. The ideal editorial is brief. It notes special qualities and it gives the reasons for these special qualities in a humanly interesting way. Apart from this—and the error may be noted in most introductory talks—"The Right House" ad. will range well up to the front in first-class dry goods publicity. We could not easily find a better arranged ad. The descriptive matter is of a high order. And the dry goods merchants in smaller cities can safely model their advertising on "The Right House" copy at almost any time.

A circular ad. by Hollinrake & Co., Ingersoll, has reached this office. The majority of circulars are unprofitable investments, and if this one has paid Hollinrake & Co., we are content to call its publication warrantable. This particular circular is folded like a small country newspaper. Some of the copy is good. The arrangement is poor throughout. Get after your printer. You have some effective stuff in that circular and there is no excuse for its antediluvian appearance.

A very attractive little ad. comes from Hunter Bros., Newmarket and Barrie. The copy is strong—in some items the descriptive matter is excellent and the arrangement is just about perfect. Which goes to prove that the printer in small towns can do good work when the man who pays the bills insists upon it.

"A SENSATIONAL CAPTURE AND SUBSEQUENT SALE AT VICKERS'—BARRIE'S MOST PROGRESSIVE STORE."

That's the rather startling heading of a circular which comes from Barrie. The merchant goes on to say:—"This will be the most sensational of all our record-breaking sales. Think of it. Good, reliable merchandise at from 20 to 10 per cent., less than regular, right in the middle of the season when you want the goods."

Apart from the improbability of Mr. Vickers getting hold of a job lot in some of the lines mentioned in his circular, we are inclined to dub the whole business one of the most injudicial pieces of advertising we've seen. The man who educates his customers to expect a 20 per cent. reduction in the middle of the season is pursuing a bad business policy. It is lucky for you, Mr. Vickers, that you printed that stuff on a circular, because only a meagre percentage of the people of Barrie would read it. Eaton's adman would hardly dare to talk about the buying capacity of "ordinary stores" the way you do. It certainly is a relief to turn from your circular to your catalogue. The most of the copy in the catalogue is creditable and some of it good. You deserve encouragement for that kind of publicity, and I am safe in saying that you got it in actual cash returns. The women of your district should appreciate your catalogue. The arrangement is good throughout, and it's hard to imagine that you are also the author of that sensational circular. You are a little short on descriptive advertising, but The Review editor has taken up this matter and made the following interesting extracts from your catalogue and that of the T. Eaton Co., for purposes of comparison:—

Some unique and decidedly up-to-date advertising comes from Quebec. Z. Paquet's advertising man can sling ink. He ought to have been a poet ; but then a poet should be born rich and this adman was not born rich. What the little world of dreamers has lost, the world of women has gained. This is the way our friend cuts loose :—

"SPRING IS HERE ! Once more we cast aside the dreary thought of Winter and stretch forth a welcoming hand to greet the newcomer—Gentle Spring. Soon the budding trees will burst into foliage—the birds will take up their abode among the leafy boughs and gladden our hearts with their songs of rejoicing."

The Quebec adman wrote that effusion on or about the middle of March. And he hasn't been assassinated yet. "Gentle Spring !" We had Gentle Spring with a vengeance up until pretty near the end of May. Although we would never question the veracity of a poet—a poet doesn't need to be a regular George Washington—we expect an advertising man to know what sort of weather we are going to have here and hereafter. The criticism I levelled at the introductory talk of the ad. reproduced applies to this otherwise excellent piece of advertising forwarded from Quebec. Monsieur Paquet is one of the most enterprising of our merchant princes, and he probably has the best descriptive adman in the Dominion. Certainly the ads. betray an amount of resourcefulness seldom displayed in Canadian dry goods advertising. The Saturday "Bargain Pie," "Bargain Apples," etc., would be well worth reproducing and only the press on our space keeps us from doing so. "Bargain Apples" is especially excellent ; in fact, all the advertising that this store prints is of a high order and in many respects the most effective copy appearing in Canadian newspapers.

We had intended to criticize a few more ads., but space will not permit. Moreover, the editor has been making some telling comparisons between two catalogues. He has the floor. It will pay most men to note how powerful a little extra descriptive matter can make an ad. as a trade-puller.

A SUPPLY CREDIT BUSINESS

Some Interesting Figures in regard to it—The Review Suggests a Plan for the Improvement of Various Conditions.

Considerable interest is being manifested by readers of The Review in the invitation extended to them to refer questions bearing on the financial end of retailing methods to this paper for discussion. Occasionally a rare problem is discovered, and we look on and wonder how certain conditions can exist in a modern business.

The following interesting figures were recently sent in to us, and the subject introduced is of great importance to every merchant :—

Goods in stock	$20,000
Accounts receivable	22,000
Schooners (3) valued at	8,000
Equipment, etc.	3,500
Total assets	$53,500
Accounts payable	$25,000
Capital account (balance)	28,500
	$53,500

These refer to a supply credit business, all moneys being out in trade accounts. All purchases are made on "time," thereby necessitating the payment of higher prices for goods than otherwise, besides the loss of discounts which might be earned if payments were made in cash. No insurance is carried on stock, and the vessels are only insured during fishing season. The business commenced operations about sixteen years ago, at which time there were no accounts payable, a much smaller stock, and the accounts receivable about $9,000. For illustration, we might draw up the following statement, which would, apparently, be a fair estimate of the business sixteen years ago :—

Goods in stock	$ 8,000
Accounts receivable	9,000
Schooners (3) valued at	8,000
Equipment	2,000
Total assets	$27,000
Accounts payable	Nil
Capital account (balance)	27,000

The only item in this statement submitted for illustration that might be disputed is that for "Schooners, $8,000." These may have been in possession of the merchant at the time of commencing business, or may have been bought out of the profits during the period.

We understand that this business depends largely on the success of the fishing. During the year that the fishing season is good as much as $3,000 may be cleared, and, as the result of a poor season, a year may close with a loss of as much or more.

Another point of interest is the fact that no interest is paid on the overdue account for purchases, although it is altogether likely that this is absorbed in the higher prices paid for goods, which are bought entirely from one house. Similarly, we may presume that no interest is charged on sales accounts that are overdue, the higher prices covering this item as well, in fact, we understand that as long as twelve months' credit is allowed to customers. This takes us back to the earlier days of trading in the United States, when, it is said, New York merchants sold whole stocks of goods to stores at distant points, and the retailers would go to New York once a year to buy for the next twelve months, and pay for what they received the previous year.

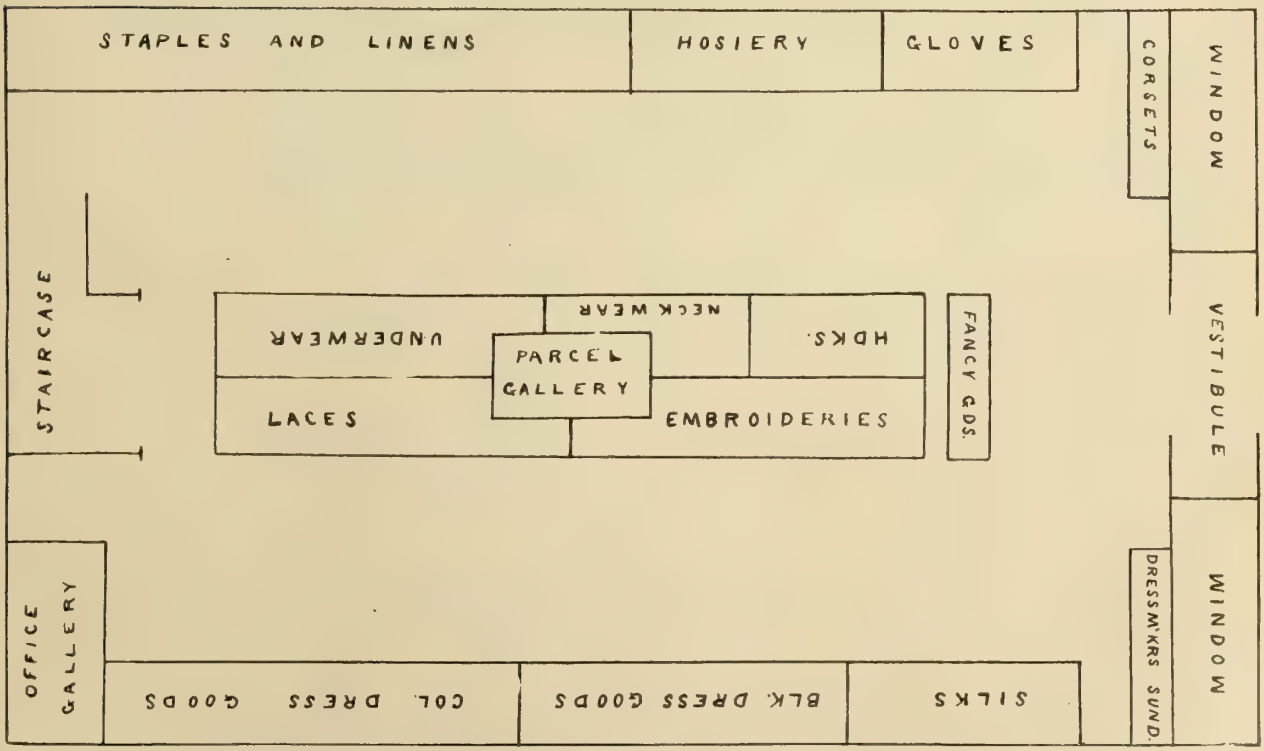
So much for the problem. We will now endeavor to analyze the statement, and advise as to the best policy to be adopted in a business of this nature.

The first question that might be raised is : "Is the business sound in its present condition ?" In case of a forced sale there is no doubt the assets, as per statement, would depreciate considerably, and the statement would probably appear as follows :—

Goods in stock (realizable value)	$16,000
Accounts receivable (good)	18,000
Schooners (realizable value)	6,000
Equipment	2,400
Total assets	$42,400

It will be seen that after allowing liberally for depreciation, there is still a substantial amount with which to pay creditors, and, although there is, no doubt, a tremendous risk in carrying such a stock and so many accounts receivable, still, if a line of credit may be obtained for supplies, a business of this nature can be carried on successfully. As a precaution, however, we might suggest that a good insurance be carried, as a fire would prove disastrous, not only to the merchant, but to the creditor.

A Comparison.



Working on the supposition that statement B is a correct representation of the business sixteen years ago, it will be seen by comparing this with the statement of affairs at the present time, that very little, if any, material progress has been made during these years. Allowance would have to be made, however, for the fact that the proprietor has been drawing his living from the business during this period, but even then, if the goods had been purchased at closer prices, and paid for so as to obtain cash discounts, there is no question that the profits would amount to considerably more, unless there have been very heavy losses on the fishing end of the business which have eaten up the profits of the trading end.

Cash Discounts and Interest.

Suppose the total purchases for a year amounted to $60,000, full price being paid for goods. It is altogether likely that an advance of at least five per cent. has been added to cover the extended period of credit, amounting to about $3,000, which, together with the cash discount of another five per cent—about $3,000—would amount to $6,000 rebate on a year's purchases. Of course, if it had been necessary to pay cash for all goods purchased, possibly so large a trade could not have been done, but it will be seen that this is no insignificant amount to lose on each year's turn-over.

STEACY'S, KINGSTON

Rough Diagram Showing Ground Floor Arrangement, Steacy's, Kingston.

While the business might be carried on successfully for years to come, it is our opinion that if it were reduced gradually to a working basis where goods might be purchased at closer prices, as outlined above, it would not only place the business on a sound and independent footing, but considerably more money would be made than at present is the case, and instead the profits being all taken out year by year, a reserve fund could be created to provide for contingencies, such as a poor fishing season.

Plan for Recording Future Operations.

The following plan might be worked to advantage in developing the business along the lines suggested above:

Separate the fishing end of the business, if possible, from the trading end, so that each may stand on its merits, and the profits or losses may be located. For instance, a separate account might be kept for each vessel, charging it with all supplies for the trip, all wages and expenses, and crediting it with the total amount realized from the product.

In explanation of these three accounts shown, it might be suggested that a capital account be kept with each vessel, which is debited with the original purchase price, together with permanent equipment which is added from year to year, and credited with the amount written off from profits each year. Just a word in regard to depreciation. If a certain profit is earned in a year, after dividing a portion of same with the partners, an amount should be appropriated to provide for reduction of the permanent assets, such as real estate, vessels, etc. This amount may be credited direct to the account, or a special "contingency" account created, and the full amount transferred to the credit of this account, so that when it is necessary to buy a new schooner, or replace certain parts, this account may be drawn upon for the purpose.

In further reference to the fishing end of the business, if a particularly good season should show a fair profit for each vessel, it would be a safeguard for the future of the business to open a special reserve account, and transfer a fair amount to the credit of this account, to provide for the loss of a poor year's business.

We have gone into this end of the business perhaps a little more thoroughly than is necessary, but as regards the other end, the regular trading accounts are familiar to most merchants.

NOTE.—We would be glad to have Review readers submit any questions of this nature for discussion. This department can be made a very helpful one.

ENTERPRISE WANTED.

I was always grumbling, never pleased with my position, promotion being too slow, I thought, and, to make matters worse, a junior clerk in our firm had been appointed secretary to the manager.

One day I asked the manager why a junior had got preferment over the seniors. "Oh," he exclaimed. "I will tell you this moment. Do you see that lorry? Well, it belongs to the firm, go out and inquire where it is bound for."

After I had inquired, he again asked what it was loaded with.

A second time I went out.

"When is it due?"

So for a third time I had to ascertain, wondering at the unexpected orders and their ultimate issue.

"That's all right," said the manager, as he called for his secretary to go out and find out where the lorry was bound.

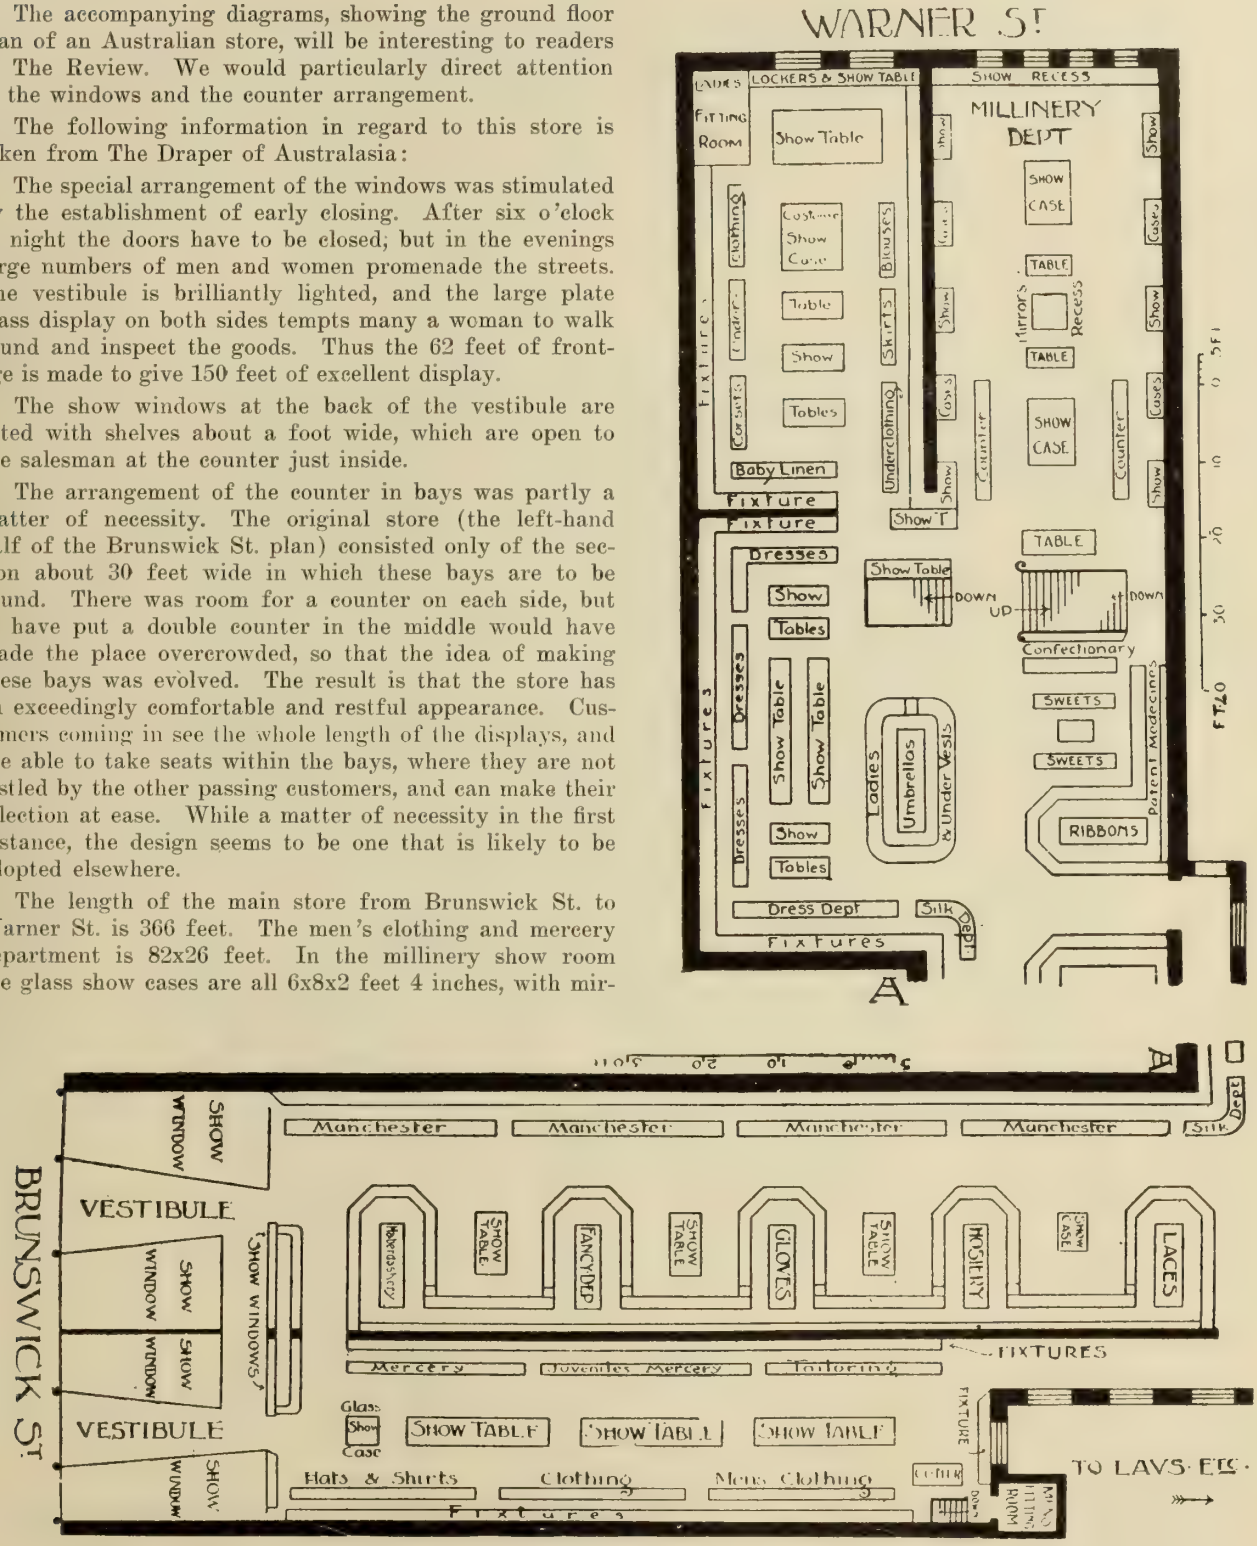
The fellow was back in a minute, and said: "It is bound for Simpson and Morgan's with a half-dozen bales of American hides, and due by 12 o'clock."

"Now," said the manager, turning to me, "you see for yourself why the junior has got promotion, by being smarter than his seniors."

So to this day I have kept that lesson as my model.

A Clever Arrangement of Space

The accompanying diagrams, showing the ground floor plan of an Australian store, will be interesting to readers of The Review. We would particularly direct attention to the windows and the counter arrangement.



The following information in regard to this store is taken from The Draper of Australasia:

The special arrangement of the windows was stimulated by the establishment of early closing. After six o'clock at night the doors have to be closed; but in the evenings large numbers of men and women promenade the streets. The vestibule is brilliantly lighted, and the large plate glass display on both sides tempts many a woman to walk round and inspect the goods. Thus the 62 feet of frontage is made to give 150 feet of excellent display.

The show windows at the back of the vestibule are fitted with shelves about a foot wide, which are open to the salesman at the counter just inside.

The arrangement of the counter in bays was partly a matter of necessity. The original store (the left-hand half of the Brunswick St. plan) consisted only of the section about 30 feet wide in which these bays are to be found. There was room for a counter on each side, but to have put a double counter in the middle would have made the place overcrowded, so that the idea of making these bays was evolved. The result is that the store has an exceedingly comfortable and restful appearance. Customers coming in see the whole length of the displays, and are able to take seats within the bays, where they are not jostled by the other passing customers, and can make their selection at ease. While a matter of necessity in the first instance, the design seems to be one that is likely to be adopted elsewhere.

The length of the main store from Brunswick St. to Warner St. is 366 feet. The men's clothing and mercery department is 82x26 feet. In the millinery show room the glass show cases are all 6x8x2 feet 4 inches, with mirrors between 5 feet 8 inches by 6 feet. The total floor space is 64,740 square feet. In the front there are 1,750 square feet of plate glass. The basement contains furnishing, linoleum and carpet departments, main reserve, packing and despatch rooms, luncheon and cloak rooms. On the first floor are the general and private offices, mail order and pattern departments, bedding and furniture department, millinery and dress-making workrooms, shirt-making, tailoring and whitework rooms, fancy and dress department reserves.

The World's Most Artistic Store

Wonderful Establishment of Wertheim's, Berlin, Germany — Some Features of Its System — Great Consideration for Customers.

That a dry goods store should be made as attractive, not to say artistic, as possible in its appointments, is a matter upon which too much emphasis cannot be laid. The nature of the merchandise, and the elements that enter into present-day retailing, demand it. The highest degree to which this idea has yet been carried out is represented by the accompanying illustration of Wertheim's, Berlin, Germany, probably the most artistic dry goods house in the world.

Main Entrance to Wertheim's, Berlin, Germany

This vestibule contains rows of flowers, and is adorned with remarkable carvings and frescoing. The effect is very impressive.

The following description of this wonderful store and its methods was written for The Draper's Record:

In the popular mind the name Wertheim has come to mean big. For instance, Kempinski's restaurant, serving perhaps 10,000 meals a day, and selling 3,000 oysters and 2,000 bottles of champagne daily, is familiarly called the "Eating Wertheim."

The founder of Wertheim's commenced business as a draper in the provincial town of Rostock, but afterwards opened a branch at the country town of Stratsund; but his master mind could not find sufficient scope amongst a provincial population, so he decided to establish himself in Berlin, where he commenced a fair-sized shop in Rosenthaler Strasse. He opened later a branch in Oranien Strasse, and finally a further one in Leipziger Strasse in the west end.

In the short space of 14 years this west-end business has been developed into its present mammoth proportions. It is now managed by the four sons of the founder, who are the present proprietors.

Entering Wertheim's by the Voss Strasse side, one observes that the greater part of the parcels delivery is being done by smart motor vans.

Taking an elevator to the management offices on the top floor, it is noticeable how few floors the building comprises compared with an American store.

The post order department is on the same floor, and seems considerably less developed than the magnitude of the business would lead one to expect, judging it on the basis of American and English experience. Catalogues and other advertising play a comparatively small part in business tactics; evidently German consumers prefer to do their shopping locally. This confirms what a large international advertiser told me—that while he had to spend a very large sum in the States, and some thousands in England, a few hundred pounds was sufficient for his extensive German business.

This magnificent interior is representative of the architectural beauty of the German stores, and the high ceilings and very large skylights are characteristic. Everywhere is the touch of the artist.

Although advertising in Germany is much less general than in either England or the States, there is evidence that the American influence on publicity which has made such progress in England is also slowly permeating German methods.

The printing of advertisements of special lines of goods on the back of customers' bills is general in German stores. This seems an idea that might be used to advantage by our own drapers.

The employes of Wertheim's number about 5,000. No apprentices are employed, but only those who have obtained some experience elsewhere. The young ladies are paid a salary of about £60 a year; the living-out system is adopted.

All assistants have the advantage of a special restaurant, where splendid meals are obtainable at cost price (a few pence), and they have also nicely warmed, large and lofty rest rooms, amply provided with lounge deck chairs.

An employes' pension scheme is contemplated. It is surprising what strides this form of socialism is making in the Fatherland. This is a contrast to the popular British notion that the German worker is badly provided for.

For protection from fire there are 113 signal boxes, which communicate with their own fire brigade, and four signal boxes connected with the public brigade. The whole male staff is trained to fire-watch service, and there are 10 permanent firemen, while 14 fireproof staircases lead directly into the street.

There are 28 elevators for passengers and goods. The power works for these, the lighting and the heating, are provided with 10 boilers and three reserve boilers, consuming three wagons of coal daily. Further, there are six dynamos, and a great accumulator battery.

A feature in the methods of buying is that it is obligatory for the buyers to see every commercial traveler. A long corridor of buying rooms is provided with notices telling the representatives the fixed day in each week when his class of goods can be looked at. By this arrangement only a portion of the chiefs of departments are away at one time. Special appointments can nevertheless be fixed up. The quantity of travelers seen each day is about 350. This system, which is somewhat similar to the American, seems far more businesslike than that in vogue in some London houses, where it is impossible for the representative of a new, therefore unknown, house to obtain even a look. The intuition that informs certain buyers of the novelties and values a new-comer has to show without seeing them is not possessed, or, at all events, relied upon, as a business asset by any shrewd man outside England.

This contains a choice collection of palms and rare exotics. It is entirely enclosed in glass, and reaches up to the third floor of the building.

As to the store itself, the building is the work of Professor Messel.

The style of architecture is designed to be in keeping with the face of the square which the building flanks. The vestibule opens into a hall 100 feet long, covered with a handsome vaulted roof paved with marble. At one end is a fountain, with a statue of a bear and cubs.

Two bronze doors give entry to the main building, the general effect of which is palatial. The walls are of marble inlaid with bronze. At the foot of the staircase are two immense trees made of beaten cooper, amongst the leaves of which hundreds of electric-lit buds glow. From the ceiling are suspended graceful festoons of electric lights. Richly sculptured and gilded columns support the upper timbers. The scheme of decoration is in marble and bronze. One salon is fitted with onyz, where against a background of glass, lighted from behind, a fountain plays, giving a wonderful iridescent effect.

The scientific and thoroughly artistic system of lighting the entire store is most original, and worth the attention of anyone interested in improvements in this direction.

It is impossible in the space at my disposal to give a circumstantial history of this wonderful building. It must suffice to say that every section and detail has been designed, decorated, and enriched with sculpture and art by the best architects and artists of the Empire.

The surroundings of the various departments are admirably planned to harmonize with the goods shown therein. For instance, the Oriental carpet salon is eastern in design, with appropriate fittings and lamps.

Amongst the special features of the house are a department of antique furniture and curiosities, a series of photographic studios, where 300 photos on an average are being taken every day, a theatre booking office, where tickets for all Berlin theatres and concerts are on sale for the convenience of customers, and last, not least, a banking department, comprehending all branches of banking business, which, although only opened a few weeks ago, has proved to be a great success.

Also, apart from the gallery of ordinary engravings and pictures, Messrs. Wertheim have the clever conception of a salon of modern painters, providing at once a real picture gallery attraction, combined with commercial profit in the sales of the pictures. The subdued light necessary to display pictures best is obtained by groups of central lights screened by white canvas.

Near the art gallery are 19 beautifully furnished and decorated rooms (including several kitchens), designed by well-known artists. These rooms have been designed by some of the most prominent artists of Germany and abroad, amongst whom we may mention Mr. Baillie Scott, of Bedford, England. This section is placed under the permanent control of the well-known architect, Professor Kurt Stoeving, of Berlin.

In England we are familiar with the somewhat similar method of showing furniture in suitably decorated surroundings, but at Wertheim's all is designed to fit a preconceived idea, and a rare aesthetic perfection is the result. The educational value of such an exhibition is not easily computed, and when we consider the Wertheim system of showing all goods in artistically suitable surroundings, one wonders how far they are responsible for the excellent taste displayed in the furnishing and decorating of the modern German home.

In writing this I have only dealt with the dry goods section, but I must mention that the provisions, grocery and butchering departments are very extensive undertakings.

The customers' restaurant, buffet, and tea rooms appear to be a thriving and much appreciated part of this universal business.

Messrs. Wertheim's consideration for their customers does not end here. They have also provided a beautiful winter garden filled with palms and fresh greenery, where a faintly splashing fountain adds to its soothing influence. Here the tired shoppers may rest at will. In summer an open garden court, approached through this conservatory, is also at their disposal.

Access to this mecca of shoppers from the outlying suburbs will be improved by the advent of the underground electric railway now in course of construction. The offer of a station under the warehouse, similar to the scheme which connects Wanamakers, New York, with the subway rail there, was rejected, as it was felt that it would bring too many mere passengers through the building. It is now arranged that the station will be just across the road.

Wertheim's have taken the world's best ideas of store construction, management and equipment, and adapted them to their own particular needs, adding to all the distinguished touch of art which marks all serious work of the remarkable Teuton.

DON'T LAUGH AT BLUNDERS.

Instead of laughing at the mistakes or blunders of others we should do all in our power to conceal any amusement we may feel, for to the one making the error it is deeply embarrassing to find that those who witnessed it are making merry at his expense.

Good manners and a good heart go hand in hand; tact, after all, is but a show of kindly feeling, and under all circumstances we should remember that we are not infallible and quite as likely to make mistakes as those whom we are pleased to ridicule.

No one is perfect, not even those who set themselves up as oracles in all matters pertaining to business life and its exactions. The day will come when flaws will be discovered even in the leader, and then those who have been laughed at will have a chance to laugh, if that will be any satisfaction.

Alter all, the gracious manner and the kindly spirit count for more than form and empty show.

ATTEND TO APPEARANCES.

In seeking to convey a good impression a man should not be above giving attention to details in his dress and person.

Men are notoriously careless in this respect when compared with women.

A civil manner and dirty finger nails appear odd; so does a dignified manner and a shabby suit.

To make the best impression possible the external appearance and the conversation and manner of a man should be in harmony and not be at war with each other, so that the favorable impression a man's manner may make may not be lost by lack of neatness in his person.

In Advocacy of the Cash System

Merchant Who Changed From Credit Basis Won Out After Six Months of Very Dull Trade—Another Merchant Addresses Himself to His Customers.

JOHN CARRUTHERS, BRACEBRIDGE.

I started business over five years ago, and as I did not have any too much capital I decided that goods were better on my shelves than in book debts. I felt that my creditors would wait if they found the goods in stock, while they would not reckon much on the assets represented by what my customers owed me.

I have refused credit to people whom I knew to be good, and sometimes have lost their trade. However I had the consolation of knowing that my profits were not going to pay the loss on some bad debts. They went to help me take my cash discounts.

You know there are lots of people doing business to-day who think that if their cash receipts for a month are big they are getting rich. Not so. Many of these people have sold goods at cost, or just about, because they have neglected to take their expenses fully into account. Then, after a few seasons, old stock accumulates, and that is why we have so many failures.

The one price plan is a good thing to incorporate into your business. You may lose a customer occasionally, but after a while they will not want to break your prices.

M. W. SUMNER, CARLETON PLACE.

My first experience in business was with the credit system—selling goods on time, and often a very long time. I liked it very well for a while, but I soon realized that I was working on altogether the wrong basis. In the first place, I may say that my stock was small. A long-timer—there were many of them—would come in and ask for some goods, and after they had been measured and handed to him, I would be requested to charge the bills. In, say, three or four days, a cash customer would call and want the same goods, the last of which had been sold to the other man. I lost a sale for which I would have received my money on the spot.

If my stock had been larger, say $6,000, I would not have felt the inefficiency of the credit system quite so forcibly, but it was small, and at the end of three years I had as much on my books as on my shelves. This was making my stock less than it should be. I could make no money on book accounts, and what could I do with an extra small stock?

I got hold of a good work the experiences of a successful merchant in the cash plan of doing business. As he put it, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." He was honest in all of his dealings, very strict, but liberal, etc. I knew I would not be able to imitate such a man in every respect, but I was able to pick out enough to suit my ability. It was upon this foundation I built the business I afterwards enjoyed for twenty-five years and more.

It was strictly cash, and I handled more goods in fifteen years than I ever before expected to handle in twenty-five years.

I asked the advice of many non-business men in regard to the cash plan. The invariable answer was that it would not work. I wanted to know why. "Because the credit system is the custom of the country," I was told, and, further, that I would only ruin myself if I attempted to inaugurate a new order of things.

My first six months' experience seemed to bear out what these people had said. I got very, very little trade; but, nothing daunted, I kept right on in the course that I had mapped out for myself.. And I will say that I never knew what real happiness was until after I finally won out.

I saved my health, banished my troubles, did a good business and made money. I have never once failed in business, or in obtaining discounts and extra discounts. I can get all the goods I want, and at any time I am well able to pay one hundred cents for every dollar's worth of goods. I have never had to borrow a dollar to help run by business. Money came to me as I wanted it, thanks to the cash system.

The ordinary business man with a small stock of goods, and no previous experience with this plan, can enter into the cash system without fear of failure. A man of first class ability, a good stock, fearless character and plenty of push can, of course, do much better. He can treat all men alike, and that is the proper way to suit his style of business. The fluctuating man cannot be successful with any kind of a stock or system of operation.

The cash system that fails is like a good sermon badly rendered.

T. H. SMITH, NEW WESTMINSTER.

I started a cash store because I could not do otherwise and do the business justice. I was a stranger in the country and had not the money to finance my own business and that of my customers; so I decided that a small profit and quick turn-over for cash was the best course I could follow. The people fell in with the method very readily. I could scarcely call it a new plan, as the majority of my customers were in a position to pay cash. There is a small percentage in every community who buy on credit at home and send their cash away to the departmental stores and larger places but will come to the new store until they get their names on the books and receive the first bill. Then they have no more use for you, and find fault with your method of doing business. To these it is better to turn a deaf ear. The conditions vary in different places. Where a business is depending upon one class of industry for existence it has to be governed very much by the time the money is in circulation. In places such as this, where people are engaged in various employment, such as farming, mining, logging, and lumbering, and have pay days at intervals throughout the month, there is no necessity for other than a cash business.

TEA AND REST ROOM.

The Hudson Bay Co. recently opened a tea and rest room in its Calgary store. It is situated on the second floor, and the windows afford a fine view of the principal business street. It is nicely furnished, and each table can be separated from others by a dainty Japanese screen. In one corner of the room is a writing table and writing materials. There is also a telephone in connection.

THE QUESTION DEPARTMENT

A PLAN FOR GENERAL STORE.

Editor Dry Goods Review,—Have noticed criticism in your paper regarding the arrangement of stores. As I intend building the coming Summer, I would be pleased to have suggestions as to the arrangement of departments. The store is to be 24 x 50 feet, one storey, 12 feet off rear for wareroom. The stock will amount to about $4,000, consisting of dry goods, boots and shoes, groceries, shelf hardware, harness hardware, etc.—a general stock such as would be carried in a country store. I will also have the post office in the building.—J. F. Johnson, Namao, Alta.

We are enclosing rough diagram of the department arrangement which we think would suit your new store. Of course you will have to economize space pretty well, and you may see fit to make some minor changes. However, we can recommend the general idea to you as a good one. Our object in placing the post office at the rear is to bring people through the store to get to it. For boots and shoes a rather retired section is best. In hardware you will have many small lines, with which you can make some display, on the principle that goods out where they can be seen often suggest themselves to customers passing by. The location of the grocery department will serve to draw people through the hardware section, in the same way that the post office will act in relation to the dry goods section.—Editor.

PROFITS AND SALARIES.

Editor Dry Goods Review, As one of your regular and appreciative subscribers, we would be much obliged for your opinion on the following question:

1. On a yearly purchase of, say, $90,000 of stock, consisting of dress goods, millinery, furs and ladies' wear exclusively, what should be the yearly output at retail prices?

2. What percentage of a yearly retail business of, say, $120,000 should salaries amount to?

1. When a buyer marks his goods he must keep in mind the percentage of gross profit that will be realized when they are sold, and must endeavor to mark at such a figure as will show a percentage of gross profit equivalent to 33 1-3 per cent. on the selling price. To do this he must add 50 cents on the dollar; that is, for every article, or yard of goods, that costs him $1 laid down, to get a gross profit of 33 1-3 per cent. he must add 50 cents to cost, making the selling price $1.50. He may state that he is making a profit of 50 per cent., but the store accountant will be apt to take a different view. This basis, for obvious reasons, cannot be maintained on all goods sold, and we would say that on purchases of $90,000, if you can add 1-3, or $30,000, making an output of $120,000, and realizing 25 per cent. upon your selling price, you will have no cause to complain. There are indications in your letter that you share this view.

2. This question is more difficult to answer, as the class of business done, local conditions and other factors enter into it. A store doing a fine trade would have to employ a higher grade of help, as well as help with more knowledge and experience, and, naturally, people of this class command the highest salaries. Also, the departments on which you specialize are those in which experienced help is most necessary, and, therefore, the yearly percentage of salaries would be higher in your case than in a store where the main departments can be worked with younger and less experienced help. From 5½ per cent. to 10 per cent. is a very usual percentage for salaries.—Editor.

THE SOUL TO DARE.

There are many men who make great successes because of unusual ability or their insight into situations, but there never was a man who achieved success without possessing courage and unusual self-reliance.

When President Lincoln was once asked if he were not afraid of making enemies of a large party in the Republic by the attitude he took towards slavery, he replied:

"The man who allows his life to justify itself and lets his work speak, and who, when reviled, reviles not again, must be a great and lofty soul."

Every man wishing to succeed should have inspirations to greatness, whether he works in an office or engineers a great business enterprise, for it is the ideal that energises work just as steam does an engine.

The thought of "hitching one's wagon to a star" not only inspired Emerson, but has inspired and encouraged others in varied walks of life.

And if a man's ideal be lofty he cannot be discouraged in the struggle to succeed, if he accept Browning's philosophy:

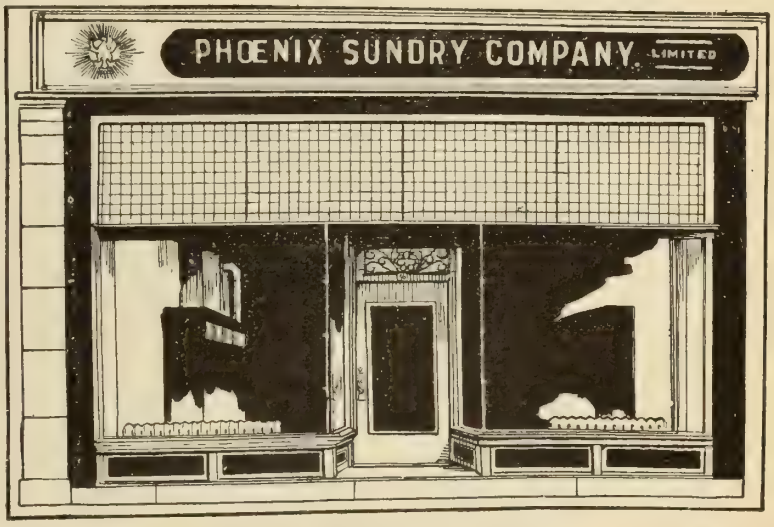
"A man's reach should exceed his grasp.
Or what's a heaven for?"

Some Up-to-Date Store Fronts

That in a Toronto Clothing Establishment was Put in at a Cost of $1,125—Many Improvements in Dry Geods Premises.

In looking through local papers from all parts of the country we have noticed quite a number of dry goods advertisements headed "Alteration Sale," "Enlargement of Premises Sale" or "Removal Sale." This serves to emphasize the fact that retailers, from coast to coast, are showing an increasingly strong appreciation of the value of up-to-date establishments. Some are remodelling their present stores on modern lines, others are providing much-needed additional space by taking in adjoining premises and fitting up the whole in good style, while others still have built new stores, into which they have incorporated their own ideas of what a retail dry goods house should be. In all cases the desire is to provide such surroundings as the very nature of the merchandise handled demands.

Bright, well equipped stores set off the goods displayed therein, and create an atmosphere in which it is a pleasure for customers to do their buying. They exert a very considerable influence in the way of keeping trade at home, as has been often demonstrated.



Among the store fronts illustrated herewith are those of a Halifax dry goods store and two Toronto men's wear stores. The cost of putting in one of the latter—Ed. Mack's Semi-ready Wardrobe, Yonge St.—is here given in detail:

Woodwork	$300.00
Plumbing, wiring, fixtures	73.00
Masonry	65.00
Shoring up building, and I beams	96.00
Prisms, plate glass (patent corners), ornamental glass and marblework	591.00
Total	$1,125.00

The front is about thirty-five feet wide.

Starting Business On Capital of $300

By R. McKENZIE, of McKenzie & Meldrum, Thedford

Five years ago we began business in Thedford for the second time, having, on May 9, 1902, lost all we had, even our books, by fire. Our stock had amounted to $15,000, with $6,000 insurance and $8,000 liabilities. You will, doubtless, say we were foolish in not carrying insurance enough to cover our liabilities. Our only excuse was over-carefulness as to expence. Experience is a fine teacher, but it sometimes comes high.

We met our creditors and were certainly used "white." With one exception, the wholesale firms with which we did business took what was agreed upon, and this one we owed only $38. After straightening everything up we had exactly $300.

We went to work and did our buying, and a week from the following Saturday were doing business as usual. Within eight days we met our creditors and went to Toronto, Hamilton and London to buy, and it took some hustling. Our first premises after the fire were a little butcher shop, 12 x 14 feet, with a couple of small sheds at the back. We did a good business even in these quarters.

On July 4 we started to build, and by September 26 were in our present building, which is of brick, 60 x 70 feet, two storeys high, with warehouse, 30 x 60 feet, attached. There is also a large drive-shed for the use of our customers.

Our stock is pretty general. We carry mostly every line the public wears and eats. The list is: Dry goods, clothing, millinery, mantles, furs, carpets and all house furnishings, wall paper, hardware, tin and enamelware, paints and oils, boots and shoes, crockery and glassware, groceries, flour, feed, seeds, stationery, books, magazines, patent medicines, trunks and valises. Each line is in its own department.

We make a feature of a ten cent counter, principally for articles of hardware. We find that, with the proper display, the goods practically sell themselves.

Our business is mostly cash or produce. Our book debts never exceed $800, and we try to keep them down to between $300 and $500. We use the barter money for produce, and would not want to go back to the old system of due bills.

The envelope system is used for our accounts. It is handy where a short term credit business is done.

We are firm believers in printer's ink. The best forms of advertising are, we believe, newspaper and circular. We usually put on a couple of sales a year, in February and August, when we put out about five thousand circulars, delivering them from house to house throughout the country. We find this helps to clean up, even if we do not make much profit. A few special sales are put on in between, when we manage to pick up any snaps.

We try to keep our windows well trimmed, believing that through them we get cheap and effective advertising.

During the past season we purchased a business in Arkona, about seven miles from here, and we are conducting it along the same line. "The Two Reliable Cash Stores" is a line that we use in all advertising matter.

We have always tried to use the wholesaler as we, if in his place, would like to be used. At no time, to the best of our knowledge, have we returned goods which came as per order.

We try to use the traveler the same as his house. His time is worth something, and we never keep him waiting round if it is possible to see him at once.

All during our business career we have tried to be prompt in meeting our drafts and other paper. It is as great a pleasure to meet our obligations as to get in an account.

We wish here to thank those wholesalers who came to our aid when we didn't have a dollar, and in the years to come we shall not be ungrateful for the courtesy shown.

Amalgamation of Local Merchants

Plan Adopted in Manitoba Village Proves Successful—Company Believes it Could be Extended With Advantage Throughout the Whole Province.

Some time ago we described the amalgamation of the merchants of Cartwright, Man., and the rearrangement of stocks—before mostly general—so as to establish exclusive dry goods, grocery, hardware and other stores. The object of this move was, in the first place, to fight the competition of Eaton's Winnipeg branch, and, second, to get away from the credit system of doing business, which the people had come to demand of their local merchants, while, at the same time, sending most of their cash to the catalogue houses, and admitting the existence of no good reason why the latter should be able to offer more attractive prices.

Cartwright is a little village of about 500 population, and it is said that in a single week as much as $1,200 has been sent from there for mail order purchases, and the people making them were, no doubt, on the books of town stores to a considerable amount.

Determined not to tolerate such conditions any longer six firms secured incorporation as "Merchants Limited," with a capital of $50,000.

The business, while out to fight the credit system, is not insisting upon the strictly cash plan. A customer who wants credit must secure a coupon book good for a stated amount, say, $10 or $25. In order to get this book he must give Merchants, Limited, his note for the amount; he is allowed credit in no other way. When he buys goods on credit he pays for them with his coupons. Book-keeping expenses are thus eliminated.

The new company has been operating now for several months, and one of its officers writes The Review as follows, regarding the progress which it has made:

"Up to the present we have met with considerable success. We note, in comparing the business done by the various concerns during February and March of last year with that transacted by the amalgamated interests for the corresponding months this year, that the cash trading has greatly increased. In the past cash was always a percentage—and not a large one—of the credit; now, we are happy to say, conditions are reversed.

"We are not expecting to do as large a business as the various concerns did last year, owing of course, partly to the fact that we are restricting credits as much as possible. People are not prepared to buy as freely as when they could put off payment till fall, or some indefinite time later. However, we are getting a large portion of the best trade.

"We might also mention that we have opened a branch at Crystal City, and it is being conducted on a strictly cash basis. Returns from this point, as well as the outlook for the future, are satisfactory.

"It is needless to say that, like all other things on this mundane sphere, our plan of doing business does not suit everyone, particularly the men who have been used to running long credits. This is the class that is hit hardest, and, of course, they kick.

"There was some talk of starting a farmers' store, but up to the present it has not materialized. Nor do we think that it is likely to.

"We are more than ever convinced that the plan of amalgamation is an improvement on the old system of doing business. We would like to see it carried out on a larger scale, viz., a merger of all the best mercantile establishments in the province, with headquarters at Winnipeg. This, we believe, would be a benefit to the consumer, as well as the source of greater profit and less risk to the retailer. Such a concern would be financially strong, and would be in a good position in the world's market. Such a scheme may seem to some merchants rather high-flown and impracticable, but if the situation is studied the trend in that direction will be apparent. It could be crystallized gradually, and in a few years we should have one of the strongest and safest concerns in Canada."

Hawkers' and Pedlars' By-law

Retail Merchants' Association Prosecute Case at Galt—Magistrate Says By-law Restrains Trade.

In Galt police court it was charged that Wesley G. Hull, of London, he being a transient trader, or a person not appearing on the assessment roll of the town of Galt in respect to business or income assessment, unlawfully offered goods for sale, contrary to the hawkers' and pedlars' by-law.

The Retail Merchants' Association prosecuted, and was represented by M. A. Secord, and the defendant by J. H. Hancock, who pleaded not guilty for his client.

Mr. Secord said that the defendant was being prosecuted under section 3 of by-law No. 487, which reads as follows:

> Every transient trader or other person whose name has not been duly entered on the assessment roll in respect of income or business assessment for the then current year, and who may offer goods or merchandise of any description for sale by auction or any other manner, conducted by himself or by a licensed auctioneer, or by his agent or otherwise, is liable to prosecution.
> The words "transient trader" wherever they occur shall extend to and include any person commencing in the municipality the business in the said clauses mentioned; who has not resided continuously in such municipality for a period of at least three months preceding the time of the commencement by him of such business therein.

In the box Mr. Hull said that he was in the tea business for himself, with headquarters in London. He had regular customers, and at certain intervals he supplied these with a certain quantity of tea. He did not carry samples. Had no stationary premises in the town of Galt. He never delivered the tea at the time of taking the order and never asked for an order.

To Mr. Secord: Had standing orders with customers. By this he meant that he delivered so many pounds of tea once every two months.

Three Opinions.

Mr. Secord submitted that the prosecution had made out a case under section 3; the defendant was not a resident of Galt, not on the assessment roll in respect to business or income tax, and, finally, he had sold tea. Mr. Secord said that, all the facts considered, he would ask for a conviction.

Mr. Hancock submitted that no case had been made out. The by-law said "offer goods or merchandise for sale." At the time the tea was sold there was no offering of goods or merchandise. Mr. Hancock said the defendant simply took orders on foot and then delivered the goods. There was no provision in the by-law regarding the delivery of goods. Mr. Hancock submitted that no case had been made out against the defendant.

Magistrate Blake said that he had no doubt that Mr. Hull had both offered for sale and sold tea. The point was whether or not Mr. Hull was a transient trader. If he was not a transient trader he could peddle tea until kingdom come; if he were a transient trader he would be fined.

Mr. Hancock said that he would submit that Mr. Hull was not a transient trader, for the reason that he could not be placed on the assessment roll.

Mr. Hancock said that if there was a conviction the case would be appealed.

Mr. Secord said that a person who did not continuously reside in town was a transient trader. If a person was on the assessment roll, in addition to that, he would have to reside in town before he could comply with the provisions of the by-law.

In Restraint of Trade.

Magistrate Blake said that so far as the evidence was concerned he thought that Mr. Hull was a transient trader. The magistrate said that in his personal opinion the by-law was in restriction of trade, but that officially he would have to follow the law as laid down in the by-law. As the case was a technical one he would impose a nominal fine of $1 and 50 cents cost, which would allow for an appeal.

Mr. Hancock, at the conclusion of the case, said that an appeal would be made and the by-law tested.

Toronto's Transient Traders.

In connection with this case it may be interesting to note that sub-section 14 (a) of the Transient Traders' Act was passed in 1906 in consequence of a decision of the Privy Council in the case of City of Toronto v. Virgo (1896) Appeal Cases., p. 88.

The city of Toronto had assumed to pass a by-law prohibiting any hawker, etc., from prosecuting his trade or calling in any of the streets or portion of streets in the city of Toronto therein named. The hawkers contended that this by-law was invalid as going beyond the powers in that reagrd conferred on the city by the Municipal Act. They argued that the power to "license, regulate and govern" did not include the power to prohibit and prevent, which had been assumed by the city. Their contention was upheld by the Privy Council and the by-law was held to be in excess of the city's powers, therefore of no effect.

Sub-section 14 (a) was accordingly passed to cover this point, and under the power conferred by this amendment the police commissioners of Toronto passed, in July, 1906, a by-law prohibiting the sale of fruit, candies or peanuts from any basket or from any waggon, cart, or other vehicle upon the principal business sections of Yonge, King and Queen streets, under penalty of $50 and costs of six months' imprisonment.

The provisions following the words "peace officer" in the first proviso to sub-section 14 were also added in 1906.

LEARN TO TALK CONVINCINGLY.

Anyone who would understand to what a degree the art of convincing and persuading others can be carried should read the life of Cecil Rhodes.

A deal involving several thousand pounds was at stake Rhodes met his man by appointment, and they sat down at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

It was 8 o'clock the next morning before Rhodes carried his point; but he won his case.

Many times during the negotiations things appeared to have reached a hopeless deadlock.

But the skill of Rhodes as a debater, his stock of knowledge about mines and mining, and, above all, the strength of his personality were not to be overcome.

Those who aim to be successful in selling goods should know what they are talking about.

It is impossible to be convincing as to the advantages of buying certain wares if the seller is not well posted himself.

Most failures in selling goods resolve themselves into a lack of knowledge of the goods, and want of grasp on the existing conditions in a certain trade.

Local Merchants v. Catalogue Houses

The Review Makes a Comparison of Prices on a Number of Staple Lines — In Many Cases Catalogue Figures are Higher and Qualities Inferior — Quotations from Cities, Towns and Villages.

As we have remarked before now, the only successful way to meet the competition of catalogue houses is to study the reasons why your customers trade with them, and give them better reasons for trading at home. Many merchants are following this course, and with good results, while others sit around, fold their hands, indulge in blue thoughts regarding the business that is going by them to the larger centres, and make no effort to better their positions. Numbers of the latter do not believe that they can compete with catalogue prices, and, at the same time they have no definite idea as to what catalogue prices really are.

In previous issues we have gone into the mail order question in its different aspects pretty fully ; this month we are going further and comparing the prices of a big catalogue house on various lines, with those of a number of local merchants. This information should be of interest and value to every retailer in Canada. It is calculated to inspire confidence in those who are inclined to be discouraged, and incite them to close study of the situation, followed by serious efforts to conserve the trade of their home markets.

The Review chose sixteen staple lines from ——'s catalogue, and had a mail order sent in for quantities of each. We cut up the various materials into samples and sent them out to a number of merchants, requesting that they give us their regular selling prices on similar goods in stock. None of them were given any idea as to where the samples came from, or for what purpose we desired the information. The lists of prices follow :

Over-measurement by Catalogue House.

The goods from ———'s came to hand promptly, and, as regards wrapping, etc., in the best possible condition. A customer receiving this package could have no complaint upon the score of measurement, for all goods went at least 37 or 37½ inches to the yard, and in the case of the fancy worsted 38½ inches were given. We were rather surprised that, in an establishment which prides itself upon the exactness of its system, such a leak should exist. If even a small percentage of mail order customers receive the same liberal measurement that we did, the loss must be very considerable. The indications are that ———'s help in this department is inefficient; in fact, it consists mainly of young girls, who are constantly changing, and who cannot be expected to have much knowledge of merchandise or merchandising.

Two items in our order were English print and galatea, and in each case we received duck. As these materials were ordered both by name and number, possibly someone in a higher position than the clerks was to blame.

We asked for navy blue broadcloth and received black.

Matching is clearly not a strong point. We requested that the louisene and panama match, and they were of totally different shades.

Comparison of Values.

The T. S. Ford Co., of Mitchell, sent us samples of some goods in stock on which they quoted the prices given above. This gives us an opportunity to compare values with those of ———'s. There is little or nothing to choose between the two samples of black taffeta, though, perhaps, ———'s silk is nicer to handle, and has a softer finish. Price and width are the same. No difference is found in quality or width of the grey worsted fabric, but, while the price is $1 in each case, Ford's sample is by far the more desirable in color and pattern. His black voile is four inches wider, and is in every way a better material. It is a chiffon voile, priced the same as ———'s, but of higher quality, and is a better black besides. Ford's panama is 6 cents higher in price, but it is two inches wider and of a much superior quality and finish. He gets the same price for galatea as ———'s charged us for duck—12½ cents per yard.

Some Comments by Merchants.

Following are some comments made by merchants in sending lists of prices or explaining why they could not do so :

The T. S. Ford Co., Mitchell.—"There are a few lines we do not handle, but we have marked the price at which we think they should be sold, in comparison with similar goods in stock, and of which we enclose samples, with regular selling prices."

J. J. Mullin & Co., Bedford, Que.—"We can only approximate. It is not always easy to get at actual values."

W. T. Lee, Owen Sound.—"Some of the lines we have nothing near, but have judged them to the best of our knowledge."

Smith & Ash, Sarnia.—"We do not carry a line as low as No. 13, table linen, at 20 cents."

A. Bristol & Son, Picton.—"We find that, generally speaking, the articles submitted are a little poorer quality than we usually sell, but we have marked the prices opposite each item, which would be our selling price for same quality if kept in stock."

Thomas Stone & Son, Chatham.—"We have attached list of prices at which we consider we would retail goods equal in value to the samples submitted."

Richard Hall & Son, Peterborough.—"As the class of goods is of entirely a different grade to what we handle, we are unable to give you the selling prices as requested."

Dangerous Line to Sell.

We also secured from ———'s, through mail order, three pairs of hosiery at 50 cents. Following are a couple of the comments received from merchants to whom samples were sent :

A. Beattie & Co., St. Mary's.—"Have nothing to match this hose. It is nearly all shoddy, will have no wearing qualities, and would be a dangerous line to sell in a good established trade. It is worth about 19 cents retail."

T. H. Smith, New Westminster, B.C.—"We regret that we are unable to give selling price for similar line of hose, as we do not stock, and have no demand for, such a poor quality."

G. B. Ryan & Co., of Guelph, say that this line should sell at 18 cents per pair.

Lists from Towns and Villages.

Among the places from which The Review received lists of prices are towns, and even villages. It is interesting to note the population of some of them : Thedford, (McKenzie & Meldrum, general store) 700; St. Marys, 3,700; Port Hope, 5,000; Simcoe, 3,500; Paris, 3,200; Mitchell, 2,000; Penetanguishene, 2,900; Clinton, 2,700; Deseronto, 2,000; Bedford, Que., 1,364. We would draw attention particularly to the showing of McKenzie & Meldrum in Thedford, a village of only 700 people.

Local Retailer's Advantages.

We will leave comment on the comparison of prices to the editorial pages, and, in conclusion, urge local merchants to study their natural advantages over the catalogue houses, which advantages we would enumerate as follows :

Location.

1. He knows the peculiar demands of his local trade, and can supply the exact goods wanted.
2. He can have a wide personal acquaintance with customers.
3. He can add new goods and new styles almost daily, where catalogue houses publish a general list but once or twice a year.
4. He can do a credit business, if he wishes, with responsible parties, while catalogue houses demand cash in advance.
5. His clerks can draw trade by their personal acquaintance.

The location of the local merchant makes the consumer desire to buy from him, because :

1. He can see the goods he is purchasing.
2. He can get the article as soon as needed.
3. He can purchase without the inconvenience of writing a letter and getting a money order.
4. He can exchange any article not satisfactory without delay.
5. He can be waited on by a personal acquaintance.
6. Prices being equal he feels it a civic duty to patronize home industries.

Store.

1. He shows the goods, not pictures or descriptions of them.
2. He can use show windows to attract trade.
3. He can cultivate the shopping habit among customers by making his store attractive.

Transportation Charges.

Goods are received by him in such quantities that freight or express charges per item cost consumer less than when shipped from catalogue houses.

A REGINA DEPARTMENT STORE.

The store of R. H. Williams & Sons, "The Glasgow Warehouse," Regina, which is illustrated in "Men and Methods." is 55 x 90 feet and two storeys high. Thirty-five hands are employed. The lines carried are: General dry goods, ready-to-wear, men's furnishings and clothing, carpets and house furnishings, furs, boots and shoes, trunks and valises, groceries and provisions.

Views and Experiences of Some Merchants Who Have Dropped the Formal Opening — The Advantages of This Plan Explained.

BARRY & CO., TRENTON.

Your inquiry, as to the best methods of making a millinery department profitable, opens up a pretty broad question, and it would be impossible, in a short article, to cover the ground, or to suggest any scheme that would meet various conditions in different localities. However, if a brief outline of the plan we have adopted is of any service we cheerfully give it.

The first, and, we think, the most essential thing, is to secure, at any reasonable cost, an experienced and practical head milliner, as very much detail must necessarily be left to her.

The next requirement, in importance, is a well-bought stock, not too large, which must be kept clean by clearing it out at the end of the season, always being sure of getting good profits on new stock.

In our town of about 5,000 population, in the centre of a good district, we believe the department should be kept open the year round. The elaborate openings should be dispensed with. As in our case, have the new stock each season in early, and let as much preparation as possible be made then. Immediately on the milliner's return from the regular wholesale openings, announce to the public that you are ready with the new season's hats. It is better not to have too much of a display of expensive stuff. Have just enough to show the new styles, and a lot of nice, practical, natty hats for early wear, and let the trimmer have lots of fresh ideas up her sleeve to suit your exclusive customers.

From time to time, as the season advances, have the head trimmer visit the wholesales and large retails, making it a point to let the public know of the fact. Have something new all the time, as it is freshness the buyer is looking for.

A clean, well-furnished room should be devoted to millinery. The first is preferrable to the ground floor, as it is more private.

If similar lines to these are followed, with modifications to suit different localities, millinery should become a paying department, instead of a drag on a business, or merely a drawing card.

MADILL & ANDERSON, ST. CATHARINES.

There are many features which enter into the matter of making a millinery department profitable. Some points do not require mention, while on others there is sure to be a difference of opinion. However, accepting as a basis, good equipment and competent skill, both in workroom and showroom, there is also great need for well-defined policy and invariable continuance of same.

1. Find out the features of the season before buying season's requirements.
2. Avoid trimming and finishing for sale all the stock for an opening day.
3. Do not speculate to please customers' whims.
4. Avoid exchanging goods that have once been worn.
5. Arrange so that new stock will be on display every week. (Express charges cost less than surplus stock).
6. Require the workroom to report on every item of merchandise entering into completion of an order.
7. Insist that nothing leave the showroom until paid for or reported on at the office.

E. R. BOLLERT & CO., GUELPH.

We have pleasure in responding to your request for our views regarding profitable millinery methods. We believe some elements of success are :—

1. Buy sparingly.
2. Show goods early.
3. Buy Fashion's newest fancies.
4. Buy constantly as you sell.
5. BUY SPARINGLY.
6. Avoid jobs and "clearing lots."
7. Keep stock up-to-date, but not beyond date.
8. Get a decent profit.
9. Avoid loss in workrooms.
10. Finish the season with empty shelves.
11. And again we say BUY SPARINGLY.

Millinery values are short-lived. Fashion is fickle and changes often. There is little or no value to millinery goods. The shape, the shade, the material, have only value while the breath of fashion is in them, and that is for a short time. Hence, the danger, generally speaking, of having large quantities of anything, no matter how low, apparently, is the price.

Several years ago we became convinced that the conventional "opening," so far as business and profit were concerned, was a delusion and a snare, and we dropped it. Instead of the usual method of keeping the season's new designs and materials under cover for several weeks after the openings of the wholesale houses, we show them simultaneously. Instead of keeping our staff busy preparing models for the "opening" display, we put forward each day's product into the show room to sell. Instead of the usual confusion and turmoil of opening days, before which, and during which, little or no business is done, we have had several weeks of selling.

Much of the millinery shown on opening days has to be reconstructed before it is sold. We avoid all this, and enjoy the gratification of early and increasing sales. We have "millinery opening" every day, from the beginning to the end of the season, and are well pleased with the results.

PRACTICE INDUSTRY.

One is too apt now-a-days to disregard the slow and sure signs that are to be realized by honest industry.

Man is endowed with faculties and powers of well-nigh limitless capabilities, but it is only by diligence in the exercise of these powers that he can hope to attain any degree of success.

Again, at what success can a man expect to arrive who has forfeited his reputation for integrity.

He will find that nothing will serve him; neither truth nor deceit—perhaps hardly his industry.

But let him practise industry, and make use of truth and sincerity in all his words and actions, and they will carry him through to success when all other arts and qualities will fail.

These two fundamental qualities of industry and integrity, acquirable by all—even those of the meanest capacities, are the only sure and natural roads to success.

Factory Children

Quebec Law Requires that They be Able to Read and Write—Compulsory Education.

There have been some important changes in the Quebec laws relating to the inspection of factories and boilers, and in order that they might be fully understood, and proper arrangements made for putting them into effect, a meeting of the factory and boiler inspectors was held at Montreal, Hon. W. A. Weir, Minister of Public Works, presiding.

The most important of the new regulations is one referring to the employment of boys and girls in factories. This regulation is undoubtedly the first step towards compulsory education in the province, for it provides that in future every child and young girl under sixteen years of age employed in an industrial establishment, and not able to read or write, shall, so long as he or she continues to be so employed, or until he or she is able to read and write, continuously attend a night shool; and in future no employer will be allowed to receive a child into his establishment without ascertaining that such child can read and write, or, in default of this, without a certificate from the principal or other teacher of a night school that such child is attending the same.

A further regulation which has just come into effect is that in future no children under the age of fourteen shall be employed in factories. The age previously fixed was thirteen years.

The Hon. Mr. Weir, in a brief address to the inspectors, spoke with gratification of the fact that the legislature unanimously passed the new laws relating to the employment of children in factories. It was bad morally, physically and intellectually for children to go to work in factories at too early an age. Mr. Jobin had reported to him cases in which fathers had stayed at home and lived in idleness on the wages which their children earned in factories. That was the sort of thing that they wanted to stop, and he was glad that the legislature had now given the inspectors power to require an affidavit from the parents, in support of a certificate of age.

In the discussion which ensued, James Mitchell said something should be done to prevent children from working for more than ten hours a day in factories, in order to make up for the half-holiday on Saturday, and he thought a law should be passed regulating the hours of employment to fifty-four hours a week instead of sixty hours, as at present.

Mr. Weir said if the people would only agitate for this, he would be pleased to submit it to the legislature, and he was sure it would be passed if he were fortified by their votes.

Successful Ready-to-Wear Department

Views of a Peterborough Merchant, and of the Manager of this Department for John Ogilvy, Sons & Co., Montreal—Many Important and Interesting Points.

A. W. CRESSMAN, PETERBOROUGH.

We would place first what many look upon as an after consideration; that is, competent help. By this we mean that your sales force must be specially adapted to the department. Very often successful salespeople in other departments are failures when it comes to selling ready-to-wear garments. This naturally suggests the question, "What are the qualities required?" In answering this we would say: First, patience; second, enthusiasm. With a very average stock and enthusiastic, patient salespeople, you can make a success of the department, but with an up-to-the-hour stock and an indifferent sales force the department will not be a success. So we would put the matter of competent help in this section above every other consideration.

Next we would mention alterations. Have a satisfactory alteration department, and do the work free of charge. We know this is a disputed point, but there is no doubt in our mind regarding it. Practically every woman would prefer paying $11 for a garment and have it altered free, than $10 and have to pay 50 cents for alterations. The cost of the alteration department should be charged to stock and allowance made in marking the goods.

Then we come to the matter of stock. Two features here, in our estimation, are important to-day. These are exclusiveness and the showing of new goods all the time. Have all lines confined. Leave alone those that you cannot confine. The stock should be kept at a point where it is possible, without overloading, to pick up new things as they come out.

Here are a few "Don'ts" that appear to us to be important in conducting a ready-to-wear department:

1. Don't send out a misfitting garment, no matter what the temptation.
2. Don't sell an out-of-date garment unless it is sold as such.
3. Don't hurry your customer to make a selection. Most women enjoy "shopping" in this department.
4. Don't refuse to exchange a garment or refund money when it is requested.

There are many other matters which require a great deal of attention, such as overloading of stock, cleaning up at the end of the season, etc., but these are all so well known and understood that they scarcely require mention.

In conclusion, we would say that, in our judgment, the ready-to-wear department in the dry goods business of to-day is the one which offers the largest field for expansion. There is practically no limitation to its growth. It is a department that appeals to the woman from every point of view. It is the one which should show the largest net results at the end of the season.

R. McRAE, OF OGILVY'S, MONTRERAL.

The successful conduct of a ready-to-wear department depends largely upon the following essentials: Right goods, right prices, right salespeople. While there are other and important points, these are, so to speak, the backbone. At a casual glance they may seem a simple combination, easily acquired, but upon a closer examination of what these terms really imply, one will readily observe that a depth of meaning underlies each of them. In this short article I will attempt a fuller explanation of their true significance.

"Right goods" implies a thorough knowledge of values, both as to garments and their materials, a natural taste for the beautiful, an artistic idea of color combinations, a close relationship with Dame Fashion, and an intimate conception of the requirements of the people who form your clientele.

"Right prices" implies the possession of sufficient knowledge of departmental expenses to enable you to form a correct estimate of the margin of profit necessary to make the department a paying investment; also the possession of a faculty for knowing what your competitor is doing in this regard.

"Right salespeople" means a staff of employes who are well conversant with the garment business, so that when they talk to a customer they do so intelligently; also that they should have a knowledge of human nature, so that they will be able to study the peculiarities of a customer. Besides these points, there are tact and courtesy, with an abundant supply of patience, perseverance and energy, to be taken strongly into consideration.

Salespeople cannot too strongly be impressed with the fact that it is a positive detriment to the welfare of a department to force goods on a customer. This failing is all too common with energetic salespeople, and nothing is more certain to drive trade away. A pleased customer is your best advertisement.

"Right salespeople" implies, too, proper and careful keeping of stock—well kept stock is half the selling. It frequently happens that stock badly arranged prejudices the mind of the customer, and the sale of an otherwise desirable article may be lost.

Among the other points necessary to the success of the department two might be mentioned, as being the more important, viz., advertising and clearing of slow sellers.

Use all the newspaper space you can get, and as often as you can get it. It is hardly necessary to impress upon present-day department managers the necessity of truthfulness in their ad-writing, but just one word in this regard: when you depart from truthfulness in advertising you immediately start to undermine your department.

Departmental displays as an advertisement cannot be too strongly emphasized. Display! Display!! Display!!! However, do it with care and judgment, so as to get the best possible effect in the arrangement of figures, etc. The old phrase that "seeing is believing" might be changed to "seeing is buying," and applied here.

The disposal of slow-selling lines is a most important item in the up-to-date department, and in this connection a very few words will suffice. The moment you relegate a garment to the slow-selling category is the moment in which the price should be cut, and the fact advertised. Don't wait, hoping against hope. Remember that the first loss is always the smallest, no matter how great the price reduction may be.

DRESS GOODS PROBLEMS

By W. B. MOWATT, Buyer, The John Murphy Co., Montreal.

Buying and Selling Methods — Advertising—Some Essential Qualities in the Successful Manager.

Twentieth century departmental store retailing may, logically, be placed among the fine arts. In no other branch of commerce is refined agression, practiced diplomacy, good breeding, a knowledge of human nature and sound common sense used to such advantage.

Knowledge is Power.

The successful manager can never know too much, and he should always be eager to listen to and entertain any new scheme or idea that will place him one better than his competitors. He should be thoroughly grounded in his business, and know his assistants and what they are capable of doing, from the boy who dusts the counters to the most brilliant salesman in the department. The commander in the field of battle has no greater strategic problem before him than the aggressive manager has in placing his staff and his goods so as to secure the best possible results. Every department requires a leader, both in goods and the clerk to sell them. They set the pace for the others to work up to. After the manager come values and clerks with ability. If you have these you have a strong argument to win success with.

Buying Goods.

To buy goods well is to secure as far as possible, what is salable. Of course, a progressive buyer must, necessarily, sometimes be speculative, but even then the man of sound judgment will (to put it paradoxically) see the goods sold before he makes a plunge. Staple goods and colors, in a full range of prices, should always be well looked after in a dress goods department. It is fatal to business to be without any wanted cloth or shade. If you only carry small quantities, and repeat often, the wisdom of buying what the public require, and selling at the lowest possible profit, is sound business logic, and a proverbial business builder. In buying fancies and ultra-fashionable goods, I believe in always having the very latest on the market. Buy in dress lengths or small quantities, from a large range of designs, each design to have a distinct contrast and character of its own. Exclusiveness and fashion in the matter of advanced styles is one of the strongest ads. to be had in toning up the class and character of the goods carried. See all the goods that are shown, but never buy against your better judgment. It never lowers the status of even the smallest buyer to refer some sample that has appealed to him, to his clerks behind the counter for their approval. They know what is wanted, and what they can sell, and the mere fact of having a say in the matter fills them with enthusiasm, which is a powerful help in the selling staff.

Selling Goods.

The strongest points in selling goods are to have what is required, at the right time, bought in the best market, and ready to sell at the lowest possible profit. I believe, when marking goods, in asking myself, "What is the lowest possible price at which I can sell these goods?" instead of the old-fashioned method of figuring how much profit could be made. There is a great difference in the meaning of these two phrases, and following one plan many businesses have prospered and grown, while rejecting it, many others have gone to the wall. Have the best possible staff of sales clerks obtainable, as a good clerk will always pay for himself, while an incompetent one may lose the salaries of half a dozen.

Advertising.

To advertise means to make known, and, therefore, there are various ways of advertising, and different ideas as well as different classes of goods. We will say, for instance, your new Summer dress goods and silks have arrived. You advertise the fact that they are new, and in this cause you request the public to come and look over the latest and most fashionable goods on the market. Then, you take the ad. that has for its object the character, quality, style and value of the goods you are offering. You elaborate on the style and exclusiveness of your fancies, advanced styles and weaves, and come out strongly on the best staples you have at the lowest possible price. Emphasize the quality, price, and the full range of colors you carry. Then you come to the cleaning up or jobbing ad. You have certain lines of goods to sell at a price which is below the regular trade figure. If you have a reason for selling these goods at this price, tell it in the most forcible, straightforward manner you possibly can. Let the public into all the secrets concerning these lines, and the more you do so the better friends they will become to you. They will be sure to tell friends of the genuine sales to be had at your store, because you have a reason for holding these sales. When possible, back up all your ads. with as many window displays as you possibly can, and always have your department showing a large display, representative of what you are advertising.

Have everything ready for business before the store opens in the morning, make your clerks acquainted with what is expected of them, look for results and your success is assured.

GLADSTONE'S METHODS.

There are men who can do many things and do them well; they have genius for accomplishing much in a short time.

Gladstone is supposed to have accomplished more in a day than any other man, but he never worked in a hurry.

A friend was visiting him in his study one day, and after watching him work for some time said:

"Why, it would take me a week to do what you have done in a morning."

Nonsense," came the answer; "I have had every bit of this work planned before I started. If my work differs at all from that of some other people I know, it is because I work with great caution. One thing at a time, and that done well, is all I can manage."

The History of the Empire Gown

When the public read in the society news that Lady A.——, or Mrs. B.——, wore a dress made in Empire fashion, or that the latest sweet June bride was gowned in an Empire robe, they may conclude that Empire styles are the newest in Paris and New York.

GREEK.

ROMAN.

But, after all, Empire styles, or what we term Empire styles, are not so new, and it is only the ceaseless revolving of the wheel of fashion that has brought them up from the dead and almost forgotten past.

Two thousand years ago or more, when British belles were clothed in a few skins and a little blue paint, ladies of fashion in Greece and Rome were wearing Empire gowns, or at least gowns that were similar to those worn to-day, allowing for the differences caused by habit and environment.

Just to show how close the analogy comes, an artist lecturing recently in Chicago, somewhat startled his hearers by declaring that the differences between the ancient and the modern gown were so slight that a lady of that remote period, robed in the "latest out" of her day might comfortably take a walk down street. Provided she didn't get too much in the way, as she gazed into the store windows, she would attract little notice. Chicago folks would scarcely stop chasing the almighty dollar long enough to give her a second look. Even her sandals would pass muster, for she might be some sort of a walking footwear ad.

After the ladies of Rome dropped the classic gown it had a long, long rest. Even in the renaissance period, when fashionable dames turned to Virgil and Homer, for light reading, its revival was never considered. Perhaps it was too free and unsophisticated to find favor with the ladies of that day, who preferred the stately pomp of buckram and steel—the farthingale, stiff bodice and ruff—and gold-embroidered brocades and heavy velvets, rather than lawn or gauze.

MODERN EMPIRE.

FIRST EMPIRE (Time of Napoleon I.)

It was not until Napoleon, in the dying years of the eighteenth century, dreamed of another world-wide empire, that loose, classic draperies appeared upon the scene. This was in the day of that wise and philosophic lady, Josephine's dressmaker, who, declaring "Nothing is new but that which is old enough," turned back into the past, for elegant novelties, with which to turn the heads, and fascinate, the Parisians of both sexes.

The cyclonic changes in the Government made a quick change in the dress of the people. Head-dresses tumbled down, and instead of mountains of feathers, false hair, frizzes and powder, the hair of both sexes was cropped a la Titus. Flowing trains gave place to scant skirts, short enough to show, not just the feet, but a good deal of the limbs also. The swimming pannier gowns became mere straight sheaths, almost waistless.

Small wonder that the fashionable woman was dubbed a Mervielleuse, for dress of that period outdid antiquity, and it is difficult to conceive of its being worn in any place but the seclusion of the wearer's apartments. That women did brave both the elements and the public gaze in such costumes is a matter of history. A gown was little more than a second chemise, and sometimes only a first one, worn over pink fleshings, or at most a transparent tunic which clung to the wearer's form with every movement. Not content with even this light attire, leaders of fashion had these slight robes slit at the sides, from the hips down.

Paris then, as always, was the arbiter of the world's dress, and the French styles were soon copied and modified by other nations. Just how pleasing these modified Empire gowns could be is shown by the portraits painted by the artists of the time, and it is to these portraits, in a great measure, we owe the present revival of Empire styles.

With the end of the nineteenth century came a flood of Napoleonic literature, freely illustrated with portrait reproductions, among which were the justly celebrated ones of Josephine and Queen Louise, after David, of Madame Recamier, after Gerard, and other celebrated women of the time.

The centenary of Nelson and of Trafalgar brought more reproductions, chiefly after the charming Romney and Hoppner portraits of Lady Hamilton. Romantic plays and operas of the period followed, and Paquin and his confreres evidently felt that the time was ripe for the revival of the Empire gown.

With the gown came a host of old-new novelties, the wearing of much jewelry, for instance—jewelry that owes its chief charm to color and workmanship, rather than the value of the stones—the many necklets, bracelets, high carved and jewelled combs, etc. The balatine, or reticule, ornamented with beads, spangles or embroidery, was the direct forerunner of the shopping bag of to-day, and was worn for the same purpose—to take the place of a pocket, which it was impossible to insert in the plain, flat skirt. The floating veil and the lace scarf are the other features, and the way in which gold and silver tinsel keep to the fore is certainly due to the influence of Empire styles.

The Fancy Goods and Notions Dept.

By the Managers of this Section in Two Large Montreal Stores — The Training of Salespeople is Important — Location and Display, Etc.

R. N. B. READMAN, THE JOHN MURPHY CO.

The question of trained help has a great deal to do with deciding whether goods are salable or not. There are, of course, many articles in a well kept stock which practically sell themselves. There are also many which require selling, even though they are known to be good. Take, for instance, a belt and waist adjuster. These are several of these on the market, one about equally as good as another. A customer asks for a certain brand, and if it is not in stock she will, in most cases, refuse a substitute, unless—and here is where the trained salesperson will prove herself—she be shown the good features of the brand in stock, and how nicely it can be made to serve the purpose, when on really knows how to adjust it. "Why," she says, "it is just as satisfactory as the other; I had no idea it would be so good." Department managers in any store will find that the reason goods that are demonstrated sell is because they are demonstrated. If salespeople are shown the use of, and know all about the goods they handle, they can demonstrate anything. You may say, (speaking principally of a notion stock)—"Any woman knows how to use these simple things," It's just this : Customers know how to use certain articles, and know them by their particular names, but if another thing, which may be almost the same, is shown as a substitute, they will invariably turn it down, because they do not know the value of the article. They must be shown, and unless the salespeople are trained to show them, many so-called bad stock items will be kept lying around, to be either sold at a partial loss or regarded as absolutely dead.

When a new hand comes on it is a good idea to have her placed under a reliable salesperson, and have every article she handles thoroughly demonstrated to her, so that she, in turn, may know how to explain their merits to a customer. Salespeople should be trained to the knowledge that they personally, as well as the store in general, can have regular customers. Many of the clerks in an up-to-date departmental store fail to consider that customers get the habit of dropping into stores where they are best treated. Even though at times they ask for articles not kept in stock, a courteous answer and interested demeanor go a long way in reminding them of something at hand that they require. It is natural that they should return to the department of the store where they have been well served, and look for the clerk who attended them before.

In smallwares, especially, is prompt attention required. Salespeople should be taught to know that a shopper is likely to say of any notion article : Oh, I can get it almost any time, it's such a little thing," and she won't wait. More than likely she will see it at the next store, and if she is waited on promptly the sale is lost to you. It was lost by a salesperson in your store not realizing that a few seconds' time meant a sale.

Have your help trained to know the goods thoroughly. to not take for granted that a customer knows all about the goods, and to attend to customers promptly and courteously.

W. A. ROGERS, THE W. H. SCROGGIE CO.

While the sales in this department are not so large as in many of the others, it can, if conducted properly, be made one of the best paying sections, for the number of people to be found at its counters during a day is fully ten times that at any other department in a store. It is of the utmost importance that the manager see that everything is done to bring sales up to the highest possible figure. In order to do so he must examine his stock carefully every day to see that the numerous articles carried are always provided for, and also that novelties may be constantly added. It is his duty to see that the stock is kept scrupulously clean, and that it is displayed in the most attractive manner.

The manager cannot be too particular about the way in which his salespeople are trained to keep stock. Each one should have a certain section to look after, and be held responsible for the same. Have stock properly dusted and well assorted. Cleanliness costs but little and pays big profits on the investment. Always maintain as large a variety as possible—the greater the variety the more chance you have of getting the public interested, thus drawing many purchases that otherwise would not have taken place. A good way to attract interest is to have several employes demonstrate certain lines of goods, such as hair curlers, belt fasteners, collar supporters, etc.

Special five and ten cent sales prove very satisfactory. In many cases the lines offered are those which are required every day, and they are certain to bring people to the store.

The fancy goods and notion department requires even more attention than any other. It cannot be allowed to stand still a single minute, and it is a winner for itself and the rest of the business.

Goods should be kept on the move, so that the display will look different to the various customers on entering at different times. If there are ever so many new goods arriving, and they are put in the same old places day after day, in nine cases out of ten they will not get credit for being anything but old stock. Goods should be changed around ; if this is done the department will always have a neat and new appearance.

A great deal of the success of the department is due to its location and appearance. It should be as close to the main aisles as possible. It can be made attractive by neat display. One of the best investments that can be made is the purchase of several display stands, suited to each line of goods.

Points Regarding Knitted Goods

By P. B. Lyon, with The John Murphy Co., Montreal — Keeping Stock Clean — Special Sales, Change, Wrapping — Expansion of the Department.

The enormous demand of the last few years for fine and more fancy grades of all lines of knit goods, particularly hosiery, has doubled and tripled the sales in this department, making it one of the most profitable, and in most cases free from undesirable stock.

Keeping of stock simply means knowing thoroughly the lines carried, having same correctly and plainly marked, the boxes or packages free from dust, and so arranged that the goods can be promptly shown. Some salespeople spend—or would if permitted—all their time arranging stock, and feel that they are earning their salaries. Then again, some so-called good stock-keepers are very backward about exhibiting different lines, if one can possibly be made to do. One reason for this is the extra work required in re-arranging. To-day it is results that are wanted, and while a well kept stock will assist wonderfully, the keynote is sales. Keep the stock neat and clean, but sell the goods.

Real special sales are a great benefit to any department, and knit goods, such as hosiery of the right sort, properly displayed and advertised, bring good returns. It may be that you are overstocked, have got hold of a set of manulacturer's samples, or certain lines may have come your way by a special purchase—any of these will move quickly and prove valuable advertising.

July sales, as carried on in some establishments, make the month, which, a few years ago, was considered the quietest of the year, now one of the best, and in some departments the best. If you are not overstocked, and think you have nothing to clear out of your own stock, how about some of your wholesale friends? Have they been so fortunate?

In many cases the very important matter of wrapping is not given nearly enough attention. No sale is complete until the customer has received the goods, either over the counter or at her home. Goods poorly wrapped or crushed are sure to create a bad impression. Such are often sent out even by stores employing girls specially for wrapping. This should be carefully watched.

In the making of change on a very busy day, or during special sales, a temporary cash box or register, near or at the busy sections, will greatly relieve, not only the customers, but the salespeople as well. Customers waiting for change are only taking up space that would otherwise be occupied by prospective purchasers.

The large and well assorted stocks carried to-day do away with a great deal of the special order business; in fact, it is hardly necessary at all, providing stock, sizes and qualities are carefully looked after. A book should be kept in the department for special orders. Whenever possible the department manager should be consulted before any such are taken, that he may know exactly what is required, when it is wanted, and who it is for.

Goods once entered on the G. O. list must go, or else the list fails to answer the purpose for which it is designed. Before entering any lines they should be given every chance to move. It may be that they have not had a fair trial, due to being overlooked, or not being fancied by the salespeople. Bring them to the front, and a counter display, a window or an ad. may move the lot. If not, you may know that they are not required in stock and they must go on the G. O. list, which is made out as illustrated.

According to the above item, a line of grey all-over lace hosiery, stock No. 2,000, cost $5.50 per dozen, with original selling price of 65 cents, is reduced first to 50 cents and then to 35 cents. In this way, by taking stock of a new line or lines every few days, undesirable goods are cleaned out, if not at the first, a second, or, if necessary, a third cut.

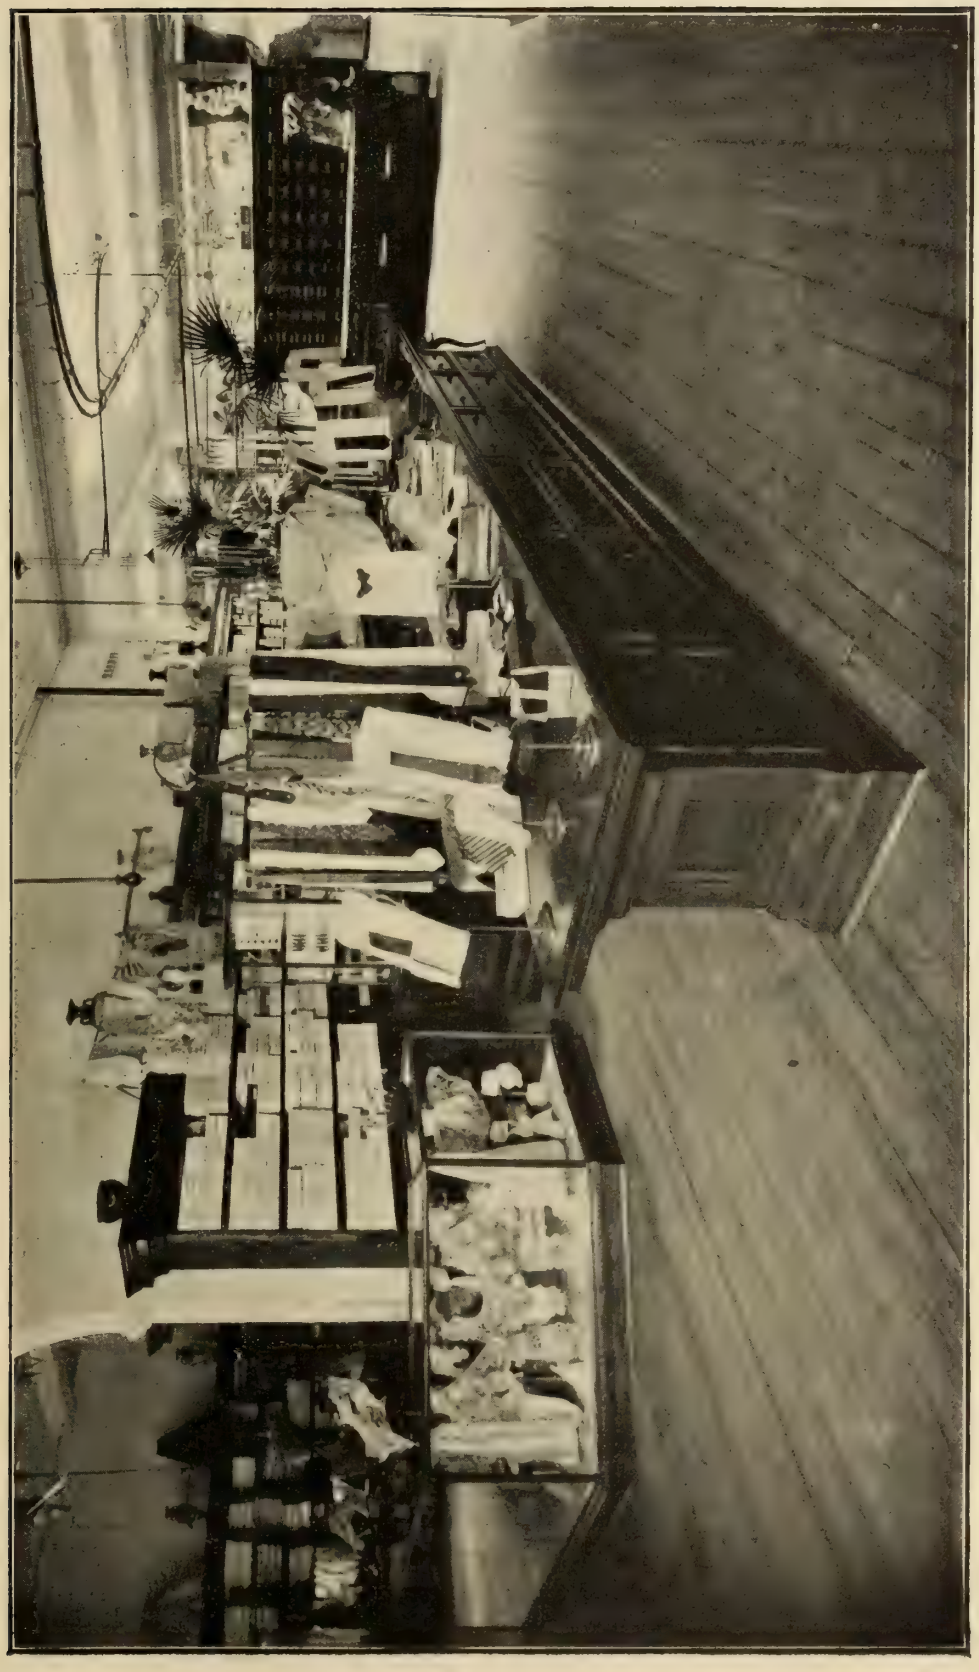
INCREASE IN EXPORTS OF AUSTRALASIAN WOOL

The Canadian commercial agent in Australia writes: The Australasian wool exports for the period as from July 1, 1906, to March 31, 1907, as compared with the corresponding period of 1905-6, show a net increase of 213,808 bales, of which Australia contributed 181,969 bales and New Zealand 31,839 bales. The exports for the nine months ending on March 31, 1907, are as follows: from Australia 1,555,030 bales, from New Zealand 366,408 bales, thus making the Australasian total 1,921,438 bales, of which the bulk was sold in the local markets. Prices continue firm, in fact upon a somewhat improved basis, as the demand remains as active as at the opening sales of the season.



EARLY TO BED.

No one can do his best work if his mind is woolgathering. If the employe is thinking about the races he can't do good work for his master. If he is in the habit of being up late at night he cannot concentrate his mind and bring out the best there is in him. Nothing is so good for the hard worker, nothing will stand him in as good stead, as plenty of sleep.

Get to bed early, get lots of sleep every night. You will be ready and strong for the fray of the morrow. If you get plenty of sleep you can do three times as much as the man who doesn't get enough sleep.

Sleep builds up a strong body and makes your brain clear. Your thoughts are better. The character of your work averages higher, and you are worth more money to your business.

Lack of sleep means a waste of your energies.

Management of The Staple Department

By R. J. Farnon, Buyer of Staples for The W. H. Scroggie Co., Montreal —Location, Advertising, Salespeople, Return Goods, Display, Sales, Etc.

The proper location of this department, in a progressive departmental store, is on the ground floor, as the number of customers is large, and many people do not care to use the elevators. Then the goods are of light color, generally speaking, and make a nice, bright showing that quickly catches the eye.

Keeping of Stock.

When goods arrive they should be checked and marked ed off in the receiving room, then sent to the department to have ticket bearing stock number, cost and selling price attached. Samples should be cut, a half yard off each pattern, and sent to the mail order sample room for distribution to mail order customers. The goods, then sorted out according to color and price, are placed in the fixtures, and clerks should be instructed to keep them neat and in rotation.

Slow Selling Goods.

The stock should be gone through and the slow sellers sorted out. The next thing to do is to advertise them at about 25 per cent. less the regular value, and get rid of them. If they still do not move, sooner than return them to stock, reduce them to half price, as it is more profitable to lose 25 per cent. now than 50 per cent. later.

The Money Back Policy.

The return of purchase money is advisable in some cases only. For instance, a customer buys 14 yards of muslin—a dress length—and when she gets home finds that she is not perfectly satisfied with the goods. If she should decide to have a ready-to-wear dress instead, it would be advisable to return the money, as the goods could be sold again at full price. On the other hand, if a lady buys a 5-yard length, and is not satisfied, it is bad policy to refund the money. However, if the customer's explanation is satisfactory, it might be advisable to exchange goods for something else in the department, as a 5-yard end has, in most cases, to be sold as a remnant. If this plan is carried out you will find it satisfactory to both the customer and the firm.

The Advertising Question.

You will find that good advertising is the foundation of success. In the busy season of the year you should advertise regular goods only. When business is dull it is good policy to reduce a special line to 25 per cent. less regular price. This will undoubtedly draw the public to your store. It is good policy to show in your window the goods advertised, calling attention to them in the ad. In this way you give the people a better idea of what the materials really are. When you advertise cut prices make them genuine bargains and you will get a reputation for reliability.

Can Customers Judge Values?

In the majority of cases customers are not well posted regarding the value of goods, and, therefore, the salesman should be ready to make any explanations. As 90 per cent. of the people rely on the salesman's statements in connection with weaves, etc., the latter should know his business from A to Z, and be able to answer all questions asked. Where the salesmen are competent and strict attention is paid to customers, business is sure to increase.

Making Visitors Comfortable.

When a visitor enters the store there should be a man appointed to show her through the different departments and give all desirable information. Quite a number of visitors enter a store merely to look around, but the same attention paid to them, and the same courtesy displayed, as if they were purchasing, is sure to leave a good impression, and sooner or later draws trade.

How to Treat Help.

When a salesman is engaged he should be shown to the department, where the man in charge should go through the stock and explain everything of importance. The new hand should read the rule book, and have its importance impressed upon him. It will be found good policy for a manager to place a certain amount of confidence in his clerks, as this is sure to encourage them. He should go around frequently and inquire about the condition of the stock, how such a line is selling, etc. The advice of salesmen, in many instances, may be asked with advantage. If they are encouraged along this line they will develop more confidence in themselves, and the management will find their counsel valuable.

CANADIAN TWEEDS AND UMBRELLAS.

Canada's commercial agent in the West Indies writes regarding dry goods: "The business with Canada is very small. While the bulk of the trade is now being done with Great Britain, that with the United States is largely increasing, especially in cottons. Canada might get some of this. Canadian umbrellas, and tweeds of light weight, are well spoken of."

Indications point to an exceedingly prosperous Fall business and the large amount of selling we have accomplished is a sure sign that the retail trade is optimistic of the coming season.

Our preparations for 1907 having been made on a more extended scale than formerly, practically including "everything for Fall," we are still in a position to help out merchants who are belated in their buying on price—terms that will bear the closest scrutiny and comparison.

Co-operative Stores

Drapers' Record:—The pretentious claim that the co-operative stores movement is based on noble ideals no longer carries conviction to sensible people. We all recognize that at the outset the promoters of the co-operative idea were inspired with lofty visions of the brotherhood of man. So much credit is certainly due to them; their intentions were excellent. The co-operative movement is now, however, a matter of history; it has a long record of years behind it; it is to be criticized not by its aims but by its deeds. That the movement has been a success of a kind is beyond doubt. The enormous figures to which we are treated at the co-operative congresses are eloquent evidence of the fact that a great section of the public, more especially in the north of England and in Scotland, has fastened on to the system with enthusiasm. Dividends have a potent charm for us all, whether we are co-operators or non-co-operators. There is nothing inherently contemptible in dividends, so long as they are earned on sound business lines. A distinction, however, must be drawn between "divi" and dividend. The root difference between co-ops. and non-co-ops. is that the former draw their "divi" with unwarranted references to idealism and to the brotherhood of man, whereas the latter draw their profits without deception and without any sugared platitudes. A few leaders of "the movement," and some amiable, but unbusinesslike, divines may still harbor the delusion that co-operative stores have brought us nearer to the millennium. The practical man, who faces facts as they are, has long ago rid himself of any of these delusions. The very manner in which the advocates of co-operative stores treat criticism is proof of their lack of even the rudiments of fraternal charity. Recently our contemporary, the Weekly Scotsman, has been giving considerable space to arguments pro and con the co-operative stores. The correspondence was started in the interests of truth and fair play, and equal opportunities were given to both sides to state their views. The result has been that a co-operative journal has charged the editor of our contemporary with concocting the letters which were published against "co-op." Needless to say, the editor of the Weekly Scotsman repudiates this gross charge of falsehood, fraud and wilful imposition. The very fact, however, that the charge was made is evidence of the state of mind of these men who cry aloud that they are conducting business on noble ideals.

There is little need for us to inform our readers that the idealism with which co-operators attempt to vest their stores is not justified. Nor need we tear a passion to tatters in condemning this claim. Rather is it better to accept the fact that "co-op. divi," based although it is on ignorance of business principles, is favored by a certain section of the public. It follows that the private trader might, where the exigencies of co-op. competition render it necessary, attempt to adapt his own business to the craving for "divi." Strip the co-operator of his shams, and we find he is a shrewd business man, who takes full advantage of the fact that his customer is not influenced by love for his fellowman, but by love for himself. However much we may be opposed to the "divi" system, the fact that it appeals to a certain class of customers must be taken into account. If they cannot appreciate the direct business method of selling an article at bed-rock prices, after allowing sufficient margin for expenses and fair profit, the private trader must of sheer necessity adapt his system to suit them. One method is to change discounts into dividends. It is known that the private trader can sell as cheaply as the co-operative store. He can buy better, and he can manage his shop better. So far the competitors meet on fair fighting terms. The only advantage that the co-operative store in reality possesses is its method of returning a part of the purchase money to the customer. Why, some people are now asking, should not private traders combine among themselves, and also arrange to return to their customers a part of the purchase money? The suggestion is being made that private traders should form co-operative societies among themselves, and agree to give their customers dividends instead of discounts. Not only the co-operative store, but also the trading stamp system and the clothing club system—both of which have some strong features of resemblance to the co-operative system—can, it is believed, be most effectually combatted by these means. Retailers are, in short, being invited to fight these competitors with the competitors' own weapons.

The formation of a co-operative private traders' society will be, it is argued, an effective counter-blast to all these forms of competition. The weakness of the trading stamp system and the clothing club system lies in the fact that they represent intervention between tradesman and customer in the interest of some outside third party. Now a co-operative private traders' society, properly conducted, would intervene only in the interest of the members of the society. Already societies of this kind have been formed, and we wish them success so long as they are organized on the right lines, namely, lines of mutual benefit and not of profit to outside third parties. They should be societies in which all private traders are eligible for membership without distinction, provided that they are willing to contribute their share to the expenses. We should regret any proposal to allow only one retailer in each class of trade to join, leaving operative society, but merely a society to give one particu- trade. A society which singles out certain tradesmen for participation in its benefits is not a whole-hearted co-operativesociety, but merely a society to give one particular tradesman an advantage over another. It does not seem to offer any real or lasting solution to the problem of the competition of the co-op. stores. It is merely adding confusion, and making the lot of the private tradesman, regarded as a class, more difficult and more complicated. We trust, therefore, that this new method of meeting co-operative and other competition—a method which is already taking shape in certain districts—will be a genuine co-operative method among all private traders without distinction, and not merely a society which is a clique, and which, while ostensibly fighting the co-operative stores, is in reality tending to crush out other private traders who are not privileged to join the clique. Where retailers are invited to join societies which are not open to all bona fide private traders without distinction but which are open only to one retailer of a particular trade, we should advise them to refuse the application. The societies which should be joined are those which are conducted on lines similar to the many mutual plate glass assurance societies throughout the kingdom —societies which hold an "open door" to all bona fide traders in the district.

THE ART OF DISPLAY

Fall Trims

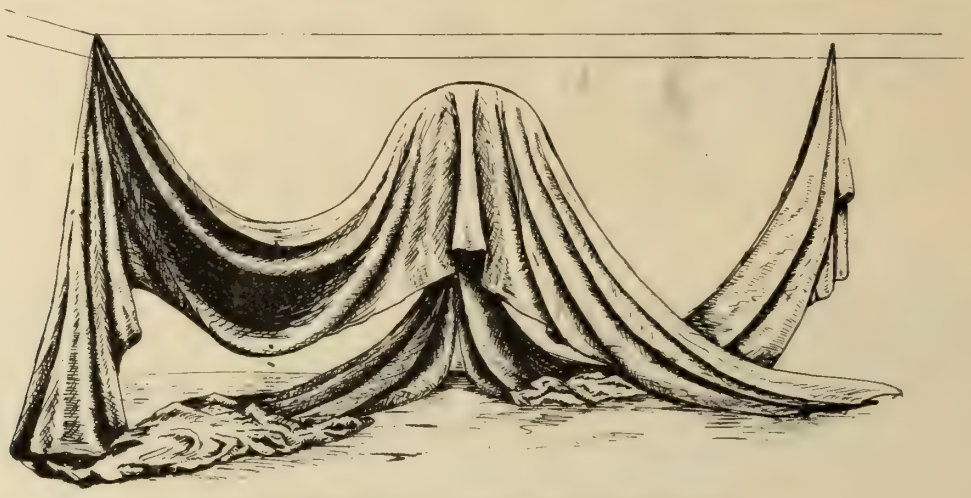
The Value of Making Preparations Some Time Ahead—Suggestions for Backgrounds, etc.

The Review has emphasized several times in former issues the advisability of preparing displays well in advance. We cannot urge this point too often as we are aware that four out of every five trimmers leave all details until almost the last minute and trust to their ability to bring them out all right. Many a hard hour's work and worry can be saved by preparing ahead of time, thereby knowing just exactly what is going to be done, and how the display is going to look when finished. Every trimmer knows about the time certain lines are to be displayed, and should have no excuse for not being prepared to put up a creditable show when the time comes. What would you think of a contractor who engaged his men and sent them to work on a building without plans and specifications, and who had not arranged in advance for brick, etc.? Naturally you would say he was a failure in his capacity. So it is with the window man; he can seldom get proper results without lots of forethought.

Now the object of these remarks is to help you and your employer on to greater success, and you will pardon us if at any time you think we are (to use the term) "knocking" you. Such is not the intention, but, on the contrary, we want to point out faults which we know exist, so that they may be realized by you and remedied for your own welfare. We want to help you in any way possible. If you are aiming toward perfection you must rectify your faults, and this fault of non-preparation should be remedied. You'll find your work will be made more pleasant and easier for it.

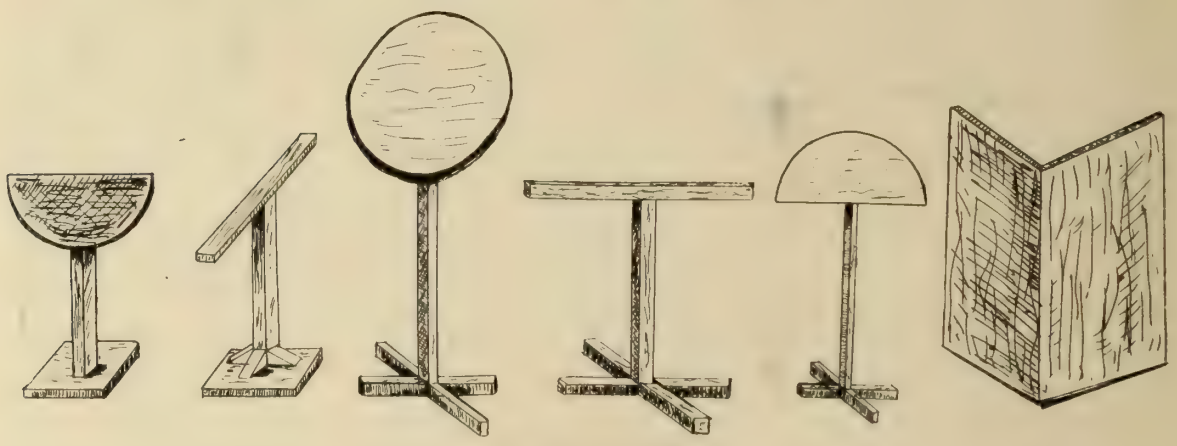
An English Linen Display.

In Canada such a window could hardly be expected to pay for the time—a day and a half—and trouble, expended in trimming it.



Backgrounds.

One of the first questions to be considered in deciding on a plan for a window is that of a suitable background. There is a natural tendency to overdo a background, thus detracting attention from the goods on display. We advise the trimmer to watch this point.



Make the background attractive but as plain as possible, keeping in mind the fact that it is the goods we are selling, and not backgrounds. The background is simply a setting to enhance the appearance of the goods. The best way to plan it is to find out what color or colors the goods on display will be, then consider that the color of backing must harmonize or blend with the goods in the foreground. Dark goods require a light background, and light goods a dark color or a light shade neutral to whatever is in front of it. The Fall dress goods, for instance, will be dark in color, such as browns, myrtles, navys, the wine shades, etc. In order to throw these colors into prominence light neutral shades must constitute the background. For instance, if you are showing browns a suitable color for a background would be a light tan, light green, light blue, lilac, cream or white. Navy blue requires a pale blue, old gold, cream, tan or light gray. The dark shades of green require lighter greens, cream, rose, white or ecru. The wine shades, those that blend from a dark cardinal to the lighter shades, show up well against a background of buff or deep cream, any shade of light green, tans or fawns.

This color study is very interesting, and there are many window trimmers who are lacking in this respect. Combination and color harmony is easily acquired and is the most fascinating part of window dressing, to the trimmer who has any conception of art. A suggestion along this line for anyone to take will be to get all the shade cards, such as those of spool silk, silks, sateens, etc., and study the color harmony contained therein. By cutting them out and placing them side by side, and by adding and subtracting one with or from another, you will be surprised how your "feeling for color," so to speak, will develop. Study nature in your walks. Observe the beautiful blends and contrasts when gazing on a flower bed or while strolling through a conservatory. It is certainly a fascinating study and one that every window trimmer has to know something about, otherwise he will never become proficient in his art.

We offer some good ideas in sketch No. 3 for a backing for a Fall costume window. The explanations are plain and can be readily understood. The bullrushes with the cat tails are the principal decorative feature. These can easily be got in the vicinity of almost every town where there is a marsh. They keep green for a long time. The way they are used in this sketch is only one of the many ideas that can be carried out with them.

Home-Made Fixtures.

You can probably see many ideas in this sketch that you can use in conjunction with those of your own. We do not always advise that our sketches be reproduced in every detail, but merely offer them trusting that some one idea can be conceived from it that will start a plan or idea of your own. There are always good ideas to be taken from these sketches that can be improved upon and they can be utilized in innumerable ways.

There is nothing that lends an air of Autumn or Spring to a display more than the introduction of flowers and foliage. They are being used more extensively by the large American houses each year. We illustrate a few of the Autumn vines and leaves that are appropriate for Fall trims. We will furnish the names of the dealers in these goods on receipt of any inquiry. The leaves can be got singly and if put on branches or switches (you can get these anywhere) can be worked into the backgrounds with good effect.

Displays of Notions.

One line of goods that is generally overlooked in the matter of display by the average merchant, is the notion stock. One reason why the window trimmer very often overlooks this line is that he knows it is, without a doubt, the hardest stock in the category to display. Trims of this kind take a lot of time, owing to the nature of the merchandise. The shapes, sizes and colors are so varied that it taxes the skill and patience of the trimmer, but if a little planning ahead is done, whereby time can be saved, or a respectable showing is given these little articles, especially if every line bears price tickets, the time and space given to a notion stock will be amply compensated for in dollars and cents. It is surprising what big results are obtained from a trim of notions. These little things, at little prices, are actual necessities that every housewife must have, especially during the Fall months when the average woman has a lot of sewing on hand.

Try a few of these notion windows during the coming Autumn and test the idea. If you do so a big return is assured to the notion department direct, and, indirectly, to other departments.

Home-made Fixtures.

For displays of dress materials—in fact, for all fabric displays—there is nothing that is an improvement on the home-made fixture. The Review has illustrated, from time to time, the various wooden stands that are in vogue in the best window displays everywhere. The tendency in fabric displays, in the principal stores throughout the continent, is toward long, loose, sweeping folds. This idea improves the appearance of the fabric a great deal. Very little pinning is required and this can be done on the selvage of the goods, with no injury whatever to the materials. With a few scantlings, about one inch by two, and a few dress goods boards, candy pail lids and odds and ends of lumber, easily constructed fixtures can be made by any trimmer handy with saw and hammer. If he is not, it is preferable to get a carpenter to make a good set of these fixtures. The cost is comparatively small. The rough sketches show the principal stands used by the leading trimmers. See also the sketch showing how a neat drape can easily be made on the "trough" fixture.

Sketch No. 3—Suggestion for a Fall Background. Frame in two sections, six feet high, covered with white felt. Bullrushes put on with pins. Curtain of tan or light brown cashmere. Half section of frame, rear view.

PHOTOGRAPHING WINDOW DISPLAYS.

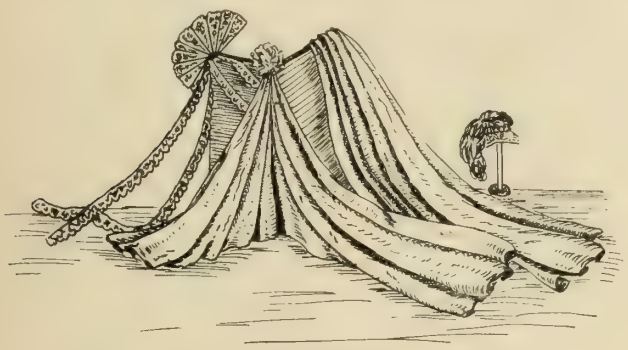
The Review has often, regretfully, to lay aside window photographs, simply because they are so dim, or so confused with reflections, that it is impossible to make cuts from them. The first essential in the making of a good cut is a good photograph. When the details in the latter are vague it is practically useless unless it can be greatly improved by retouching, which is an expensive process.

It is a comparatively easy matter to take a good window photo, provided the proper means are used. Patience seems to be the chief requisite. The photo must be taken after dark, between ten o'clock and midnight being the best time, as the streets are comparatively free from traffic. The window must be as brilliantly lighted as possible, and a long exposure must be given to the plate—say fifteen to twenty minutes. Should any person pass during this time, or even stop to look in the window for a moment, it will not appear in the photo.

The taking of the photo at night and the long exposure are the essential points to observe.

The plate used should be a large one, as the reduction necessary greatly helps the cut. As 6 x 4 is a very usual cut size, 6 x 8 and 8 x 10 should be the size of the plate.

A HAT WINDOW.



A photo of a hat window, dressed by F. A. Best for Oak Hall, Guelph, has been received, but, unfortunately, it is too dim for reproduction. The display includes only straw and outing hats. Some of these were placed on a framework of wood, covered with cheesecloth, the edges draped with common straw. Around the edge of the window was a heavy braid of straw. The display attracted a lot of attention.

HOW PIERPONT MORGAN SAVES TIME.

Pierpont Morgan never wastes a moment. On his way home at night he reads the papers on the car, instead of losing that time, and when he gets home he is ready for his dinner, a book and pipe, or the theatre.

He has also set in motion a system of absolute punctuality in keeping appointments, and reckons that each day he saves almost an hour by being present promptly at the

His watch is his mentor, and he has discovered that while there is nothing so easy to squander as time, there is at the same time nothing which, saved up frugally, pays such heavy returns.

He commends his system to those busy men who say that they haven't time enough to do all they should. He says that there is plenty of time, but the principal trouble is that men don't economize in its use.

Manufactures of Canada

Remarkable Expansion of Industry Between 1901 and 1906—Some of the Figures.

A return of the manufactures of Canada was issued recently by the statistical branch of the Dominion Government, which furnished striking evidence of the remarkable expansion of this department of Canadian industry between 1901 and 1906. In the former year the value of manufactured products in Canada for works employing five persons and over was $481,053,375, whilst the compilation just completed shows that for the year 1906 these products were valued at $712,664,835.

Prince Edward Island, which has never been a manufacturing centre, is the only part of the country in which manufacturing has declined. On the other hand, in the Territories, including the two new prairie provinces, the manufacturing output has increased in the past five years from $1,964,987 to $7,594,600.

Figures by Provinces.

The returns show the following figures in the five years :

Ontario, $241,533,486 to $365,692,144, increase $124,000,000.

Quebec, $158,287,993 to $217,244,073, increase $59,000,000.

Nova Scotia, $23,592,513 to $32,545,939.

New Brunswick, $20,972,470 to $22,133,681.

British Columbia, $19,447,758 to $38,013,515.

Manitoba, $12,927,439 to $27,609,268.

Prince Edward Island, $2,326,708 to $1,851,615.

The manufacturing returns of Canada for the last fifteen years have been as follows :

1891	$368,696,722
1901	481,053,375
1906	712,664,835

The increase in 1901 over 1891 was $112,356,652, or 30 per cent. in 10 years.

The increase in 1906 over 1901 was $231,611,460, or 48 per cent. in five years.

Nova Scotia, which held third place among the provinces for the value of its manufactured products, has now given place to British Columbia, which in 1901 was only sixth.

New Brunswick, which stood fourth in 1901, is now seventh, both Manitoba and British Columbia having come in ahead. Manitoba climbs from seventh place up to sixth.

Ontario Does Well.

Ontario's increase in the five-year period amounts to 51 per cent.; Quebec, 36.7 per cent.; British Columbia, 94.7 per cent.; Nova Scotia, 38 per cent.; New Brunswick, 5.5 per cent.; Manitoba, 113.8 per cent.; and the new provinces, 287.7 per cent. In other words, Manitoba, Alberta, and Saskatchewan have more than doubled. British Columbia, too, has almost doubled.

In Eastern Canada, Ontario has made the heaviest gains. There are 114 cities, towns, and villages in Ontario alone that enter into this return of manufactures, 42 in Quebec, 20 in Nova Scotia, 10 in New Brunswick, 9 in British Columbia, 5 in Alberta, 4 in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and 2 in Prince Edward Island.

Montreal Leads Way.

The manufacturing centre of the Dominion, of course, is Montreal, the product of whose workshops last year was given as $99,746,772, compared with $71,099,750 five years before. Increase over $28,000,000. Next comes Toronto, with manufactures valued at $84,689,253, as compared with $58,415,498, increase $26,000,000. The expansion, however, is relatively larger in Toronto than it is in Montreal.

If Maisonneuve, St. Cunegonde, St. Henri, St. Louis, be included with Montreal, the total for the latter would be $18,000,000 larger than the above figures show. On the other hand, Toronto Junction's manufacturing output would add three and a half millions to the total for Toronto.

Hamilton is Third.

Hamilton is the third manufacturing city of the Dominion, with a factory and mill output that amounted last year to $24,625,776, as compared with $17,122,346 five years before.

Winnipeg takes fourth place, with an output of $18,983,290, as compared with $8,616,248 in 1901.

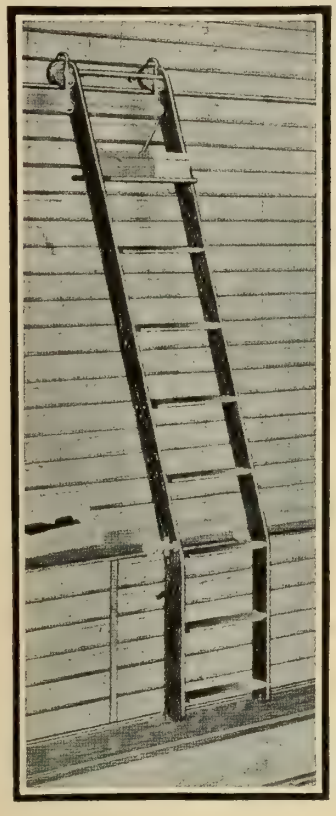
London is fifth in the list, with $12,626,844.

Peterboro is sixth, with $11,566,805.

Quebec is seventh, with $11,388,045.

Vancouver is eighth with $10,067,556 ; St. John, $6,918,628; Brantford, $8,545,679; Chatham, $3,590,220; Guelph, $4,814,925; Kingston, $4,329,607; Ottawa, $9,336,024; Peterboro, $11,566,805; Sault Ste. Marie, $5,225,663; Sarnia, $3,825,470; Stratford, $3,524,586; Maisonneuve, $6,866,107.

A MERCHANT TO HIS CUSTOMERS.



A general merchant sent the following circular letter to his customers announcing his change from the credit to the cash system of doing business:

"After twelve years of successful merchandising, I have sold my interest in the old store and stock, thereby putting myself in a better position to serve you. I now have a clean new stock of general merchandise, bought for cash at close competition between the largest wholesale houses. In opening my new stock for your inspection, it is my purpose to so shape my business policy that all will receive like treatment, and there is but one way in which that end can be reached—by selling strictly for cash.

"You can readily understand how it is impossible not to discriminate when a credit business is being done, when its workings are explained to you. 'A,' a cash customer, buys $200 worth of goods in a year. 'B' buys $200 worth on a year's credit. Money being worth 6 per cent., 'B' pays only $188 for the same amount of goods that 'A' pays $200 for. In other words, the merchant pays 'B' a premium of $12 for not paying cash (out of money that ought to go to 'A')—besides the expense caused by 'B' in bookkeeping and the loss in bad debts. These premiums, amounting to $1,200 on $20,000 credit business, together with extra expenses and losses, as above, I propose to pay in dividends to all my customers, by pricing my goods so much below what I would have to get for them were I doing a credit business.

"A few years ago a strictly cash system would hardly have been the thing, while to-day modern merchandising conditions, as well as the financial conditions of our people demand it. I need make no exceptions to my rule, as my price concessions will confirm you in the belief that I am right. The price of every article in my stock is marked in plain figures, and that is the price to all. I take this opportunity to thank all old patrons for the confidence they have heretofore placed in me, and trust they will be able to take advantage of my price concessions."

DO YOU KEEP PROPER BOOKS?

"Any man who fails and who has not for five years before his failure kept proper books, shall be liable to a fine of $800.00 and one year's imprisonment."

That's the law.

You will notice that the law makes distinctions— it assumes that there is a difference between properly and improperly kept books.

The law distinctly specifies that a man must keep proper books.

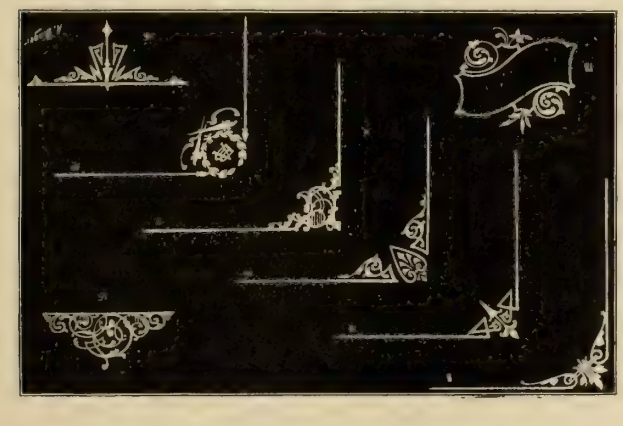
SHOW CARD WRITING

BY CRAFTSMAN. (Continued from June Number.)

Scrolls and Panels.

To more clearly indicate the brush strokes in the construction of the scrolls, we have engraved them on a black background. It will interest the student and all professionals to see the wonderful versatility of our artist, and to learn that every line on these plates was executed with a brush, and, with the few exceptions mentioned, freehand.



It is advisable, at the beginning, to use a drawing pen for all straight lines, which will then be of uniform thickness, and, guided by the edge of the ruler, they will be exactly straight. Figs. 1, 2, and 3 were constructed freehand with a No. 7 brush. Figs. 4, 5, 6 and 7 are drawn from shapes cut from paper. Fold a sheet of paper; draw on the right side of the crease one-half of the design; then cut out the double-folded pattern with a scissors. Mark out the pattern by laying it flat on your card, using a pencil. Such patterns can be used for small price tickets, trade mark panels, initial centres, or, when mortised, after having your photo engraving made with black lines, can accommodate any kind of type. These panels, cut from thin card, can also be used to advantage for spray or spatter work in any size desired.

Atomizers.

Atomizers used for spraying designs can be bought in any artists' supply store. One kind is operated by applying one end to the mouth and blowing steadily through the tube, which meets another at right angles. One end of the latter extends into the bottle, holding the spraying liquid. Another kind has a rubber bulb, which is pressed in the same manner as in perfume sprayers. You should place a large sheet of paper on your table to prevent it from being stained, as the liquid sometimes spreads further than one might suppose possible. The atomizer should be held at a distance of from six inches to one foot from the card. A little practice will enable you to show light and dark tints as desired. Professional card writers use an air brush to do this kind of work.

The best, cheapest and most effective color mixture for spraying is any of the standard lettering inks. Use about eight parts of water to one of the ink.

Spatter Work.

A primitive and inexpensive method for producing spray effects, but of coarser appearance than that which is accomplished with atomizers, is to use an old tooth brush and a small stick like a toothpick. Dip the brush into your diluted color, and shake out the color so that it does not drip. Hold the brush with the bristle side within six inches or a foot from your table. Draw the stick across the bristles while holding the brush in your left hand. Fern leaves, letters cut out of any kind of design on card or paper, are laid flat on the paper or cardboard to be ornamented, small weights are placed thereon, and by liberal spattering around the design the card will show a plain surface when the pattern is removed, and the design will stand out clearly.

Lettering on Mirrors or Glass.

If you desire temporary signs on mirrors they can readily be written by using any of the white or water-color mixtures. If you wish them to remain on the glass any length of time mix the paint in the same manner as for card work. It can be removed by using hot water. If the sign is to stand for a few days, add only a few drops of mucilage to the water-color. Flat brush strokes are the best for this purpose. If you wish a temporary sign on the inside front of your show window, trace your sign on the outside with chalk or soap; then follow these lines from the inside of the glass. Any colors may be used.

Ribbonettes.

These designs are intended for use on stationery or box labels, and can be used to good advantage as corner designs on show cards. In the latter case the show cards should be tinted, the outlines in black, white, or gold.

Duplicating Cards by Engraving

When large quantities of the same card are desired, whether it is a small ticket or a full-sheet card, it is advisable to make one carefully lettered design in black on a white card ; then send the design to the photo-engraver, in order that a zinc etching may be made from it. The desired quantity of cards may then be printed in any color or combination of colors, on any kind of plain or colored card. Comparatively few printers are equipped to handle cards larger than quarter-sheets, 11x14 inches. Many cards are printed in this manner, and the first or "initial" letter is afterwards painted by hand and finished with scroll-work. Others are printed entirely on tinted cards, and only the shading of some of the words is done by hand, giving the card a much better appearance than if printed from several plates.

Another method is to engrave the displayed lettering

(that is the bold letters), then print and fill in the undisplayed words by pen hand-work. The displayed letters can, of course, be shaded by hand, which, to the average person, creates the impression that the printed letters are also hand-work.

Scrolls.

Figs. 21, 22 and 23 show the simplest construction of scrolls. The beauty of designs 24 and 25 will appeal to the most ignorant and untrained eye. Scroll-work should not be designed with a pencil. It should be practised often. From the very beginning make your strokes as rapidly as possible. You will soon be astonished at the endless variety of designs that you will originate. It is very much easier to originate scroll designs than to copy them. By practising Figs. 24 and 25 and gradually joining them, as in Fig. 23, you will become acquainted with the construction of intricate designs.

SHOW CARDS.

People like to see other people work, especially if it is work that requires some particular skill. Why wouldn't it attract a crowd if the store's show card writer should do his stunt one afternoon each week in the show window? Fix him up an easel and let him turn out bold legible cards as rapidly as he can. The crowd will take notice. They'll spell out each word as it flows from the artist's pencil, and if the phrases are apt and striking they will get the full advertising value out of them.

If you doubt the drawing power of the plan, just look out for the next bulletin painter you see at work and notice how many other people are watching him. The knack of making letters is not common enough to fail to attract attention.—Advertising World.

IMAGINATION IS WORTH CULTIVATING.

The man who can read easily and intelligently holds the key to all human knowledge.

If he reads with imagination alert his mind will be progressive.

He will become more and more self-reliant, and will become self-confident in result of his realization of his imaginative powers.

He will each day become more valuable to himself and to his employer, because he is alert and receptive and because imagination will permeate all his ideals, his thoughts and his activities.

The man with imagination is equal to all emergencies, for when one way of accomplishing a desired result proves inefficient he will think of another.

The imaginative gift broadens his outlook and creates resourcefulness.

To the artist, the student, and the philosopher the development of the imaginative faculty is of the greatest value, but to the worker in the business or mechanical world its value is little less.

The man who has imaginative strength never can be downed, for, when one of his schemes has failed, he always has another ready, and will derive a living from it.

SOMETHING VERY UNUSUAL.

A Georgia cotton mill has taken a step rarely heard of in the history of the cotton trade. This mill has just ordered 500 bales of cotton shipped back here from Liverpool, at an expense of nearly two cents a pound more than the market price in the United States. It is claimed the order was placed as a result of the scarcity of unsold raw cotton in the States. Cotton has been shipped back from Liverpool to New York and New Orleans for speculative purposes; but so far as is known this is the first instance in which a mill has had to place abroad an order for the staple.

The Methods of a Show Card Writer

By T. E. Weaver, with Crowell's Department Store, Sydney, N.S.—Some of His Work Illustrated — Purpose of Cards is to Sell Goods.

The sole purpose of show cards is to sell goods. They should be very plain and readable to catch the eye of the passer-by. It is needless to urge the value to the window of snappy, attractive cards. People will pass by a window with just a glance, but put a card in, and it in some way stops them.

One of the greatest difficulties the beginner has to contend with is the lack of good tools. Without such the work is trying and discouraging. In a small city or town proper materials are not often sold. However, catalogues of card writer's needs are issued by several firms in the large cities, and from these one can select the necessary outfit. With the following one can handle all ordinary work. Red sable rigger brushes Nos. 1, 3, 5, 9 and 12, camel's hair brushes Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 9, water and oil colors, ruler, knife, T square, scissors, sponge rubber and white chalk pencil. Red sable brushes should be used for water colors only, and camel's hair brushes for japan or oil colors.

To clean water color brushes, simply wash them in clean water and squeeze the water out with a dry cloth. The oil color brushes are cleaned with turpentine or benzine and vaseline worked into the hair to keep it soft and pliable. Before using them, clean the vaseline off with turpentine. When putting brushes away see that the hair is straight ; lay them flat on the table or desk. Care should be taken that the color be not allowed to dry in the brushes. If you want to produce good work, take good care of your brushes.

For mixing and filling the brushes with the right amount of color, I find the palette very useful. One may be bought very cheaply at art stores. I made one out of a hardwood board one-eighth inch thick, sand-papered it smooth, and gave it three coats of shellac. The best water color ink I have found for show card writing is the prepared sort that is always ready to use. These dry quickly and spread smoothly. They can be had in several colors, also in white and black.

All of these preparations, being water colors, are not suitable to use on cards exposed to dampness. For such signs I use drop black ground in japan and thinned with turpentine. When properly mixed it makes a dense black and dries without gloss.

Designing the inscription or wording to go on the card, sign or poster is very important, and requires much practice and study to produce a nicely balanced piece of work. A show card looks much more attractive and readable with a wide margin than one with little or none. Let us take a card 11x14 inches in size ; first draw a faint line 2½ inches from the edge of the card, leaving a space 6x9 inches for the wording. When the card is lettered a neat border can be added by using the No. 1 or 3 brush and drawing a line around the card about half way between the lettering and the edge of the card. There are many attractive borders that can be used. They should be neat and not too heavy, serving as the frame to the picture, to help throw out the inscription the better.

By watching the current magazines and trade journals many suitable borders, scrolls, corner pieces, etc., can be clipped. They will suggest ideas that can be used. I have a scrap book in which I paste attractive designs that I get from the source already mentioned. I also clip reproductions of show cards that appear in The Review and several other papers. These I carefully study and note their good points. I have obtained valuable help in this way.

Now we come to the lettering, the most important part of the card, and right here I want to say, boil down the inscription. Let your words be few, but to the point. People have not time to read a long story. The reading matter on the card should be indicated by making crude markings so that you can tell the letters and spacing and to see if they will fill the space evenly. For this purpose use a hard lead pencil if the card has a smooth, hard surface, or soft pencil for rough surfaces, and white chalk pencil for dark colored cards. Rule lines across the card to denote the height of the various letters. No rule can be given accurately to guide the letterer as to the space to leave between the various letters. The important words of the inscription should be brought out in good large letters, while the less important words may be quite small, or one-third as large as the chief display lines. With special sale cards the price should be the most prominent feature. A good style of letters to use are Egyptian, round full block, Roman and antique Roman. Show cards can be made more attractive by the use of illustrations taken from the numerous trade journals. Apply to the card with photographer's paste. They should illustrate the subject of the card as near as possible.

A HAMILTON COMPANY.

An Ontario charter has been granted the City Laundry of Hamilton, Limited, with a capital of $40,000, divided into $100 shares. The object of the company is "to acquire, take over and carry on the business of The Beaver Manufacturing Company, Limited, and to do business as a laundryman, renovator, cleaner and dyer, and to manufacture, buy, sell and deal in shirts, blouses and other wearing apparel."

FAILURE YOUR OWN FAULT.

Young people are too prone to feel that the men of the past and present generation have had greater advantages in acquiring education and amassing fortunes than can ever come to them; when the facts are that success in the professional and business world has opened up many new avenues and made it possible for all who are so inclined to not only repeat these achievements, but to exceed them.

Never before in the history of this country has the prosperity of a generation rested so absolutely with themselves as at present.

One has only to watch the development of young business men to realize that in nine cases out of ten failure can be traced to a lack of proper application, sobriety, and intensity of purpose; while, on the other hand, untiring energy, correct habits, temperance, and integrity have been abundantly rewarded when perhaps there was not as much talent possessed by the successful as by the "failures."

TORONTO BOOST CLUB.

The boost fever has now reached Toronto and a club was formed there on June 7. The organization meeting took place in a room at McConkey's restaurant, and was attended by nearly twenty men, filled up to the brim with boosting enthusiasm. The new club expects a brilliant future. The following are the officers: Arch Booster, C. E. Peabody; Festive Booster, C. E. Haight; Glad Hand Booster, D. O. McKinnon; Scribe, W. F. Ralph; Coin Keeper, Rex Croasdell; Boost Committee, Dudley A. Landall, John B. Mill, T. J. Tobin and Harry A. Watts.

The Boost Club, the fame of which has gone far afield, had its inception at a noonday meeting in New York of four men brought together by a community of thought and interest, who pledged themselves to let no opportunity to pass by that they could use to help—boost—one another. For three years its spirit and purpose has kept banded together a group of men, who, undismayed by reverse and criticism, have gone pushing ahead supported by the knowledge that the Boost Club had an excuse for existence and a right to claim some day a brilliant future.

To-day the Boost Club has realized to a great extent the fruition of its early promise and stands, with clubs at New York, Chicago, St. Paul, Los Angeles and Eustis, Florida, at the threshold of success, only needing the support and brotherly work of old members and the infusion of fresh enthusiasm of new members to stand pre-eminent as an organization of great power for good.

It has no other gospel than the kind word and helping hand; it has no other purpose than to make one's daily life fuller of that happiness that comes of doing good to others, and the bringing together on one democratic level all men who enjoy goodfellowship in all that the highest interpretation of that term implies.

The motto of the Boost Club is this:—"We pass through this world but once; if, therefore, there be any kindness we can show or any good thing we can do for our fellow-being, let us do it now; let us not defer nor neglect it, for we shall not pass this way again."

SUCCESS STATISTICS.

Professor E. G. Dexter, of the University of Illinois, has studied success from boyhood. The following are success facts that he has accumulated:

Musical talent matures the earliest, and therefore musicians achieve success at the earliest age.

Inventors must wait long for success. They rarely attain it under fifty-five.

Scientists succeed early, if at all. If they are not noted at forty they never will be noted.

The actor's success comes to him at thirty.

Authors achieve success between thirty and thirty-five.

A business man's success is usually assured at forty. Thereafter, unlike the success of the writer, which is apt to wane, the success of the business man grows steadily till death.

Only one-fifth of the world's successful men are college graduates.

To women success comes later than to men.

THE PAQUET COMPANY LIMITED.

WHOLESALE DIVISION

The Largest Fur Factory in the Dominion

THE well known house of J. Arthur Paquet, which will hereafter be known as The Paquet Company, Limited, Wholesale Division, was established in the year 1892 by the late Honorable J. Arthur Paquet, Senator.

The Fur Factory, which is by far the largest establishment of its kind in Canada, and one of the largest in the world, is the only fur factory in AMERICA where every process, such as dressing, tipping, dyeing and finishing of furs, from the raw skins to the finished garment, is conducted under the one roof.

Year by year, this branch of the business has expanded, until to-day there are no less than eighteen travellers employed, covering the entire country from Newfoundland to the Yukon.

In 1895 was laid the foundation of the immense Hat importing business, which has grown to be a very important branch. Here is the source of supply of the renowned "Carter" and "Wilkinson" Hats, which are now famous from coast to coast. These are the most widely advertised Hats in Canada. More than 190 painted signboards are used along the lines of the great Canadian railways, from Halifax to Vancouver; and thousands upon thousands of attractive booklets, showing the principal styles, have been mailed direct to the customers of Hat dealers in every part of Canada. A series of newspaper advertisements is now running in a strong chain of papers which practically covers the entire country. Dealers are given every possible aid in advertising and selling: such as Ready-made Ads, Free Newspaper Cuts, etc. The remarkable increase in the sales of "Carter" and "Wilkinson" Hats is the best possible proof of the soundness of this policy.

Shortly after the Hat Department was an accomplished fact, the Glove Factory was established. Here are manufactured the famous "J.A.P." Gloves and Mitts, which are now handled by the majority of Dry Goods and General Stores throughout the country. Over 2,000 different styles are made, from the finest of ladies' kid gloves to the strongest of workingmen's mitts.

The total floor space occupied by the Wholesale Division is 97,402 square feet, not including the branches at Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and St. John, N.B.

Over 400 people are employed in all departments of the wholesale division in the City of Quebec, exclusive of the branch offices, in each of which a separate staff of clerks is employed.

The Winnipeg branch occupies a handsome building of its own, and carries a complete stock of Furs, Hats and Caps, Gloves and Mitts, to meet the demands of the rapidly increasing Western trade. The Montreal branch also occupies an immense building, which is used as a distributing point for that district. In Ottawa, Toronto and St. John, N.B., commodious suites of offices are maintained, and the new branch office at Vancouver, B.C., was formally opened last week.

We take this opportunity to thank the Retail Merchants of Canada for their hearty support and co-operation in the past, and to solicit a continuance of the same.

THE CANADIAN FUR TRADE

Advance Orders Placed for Fall have, Generally Speaking, Been Good.

Fur travelers have nearly all been over their grounds and their reports are good. Out west, particularly in Saskatchewan and Alberta, trade has been splendid in all lines. As has been usual for some time now, the business booked in southern Manitoba was away below the former average. In the Maritime Provinces business has, with a few exceptions, been slow. Some firms, with established connection, say orders are good from this section. Ontario and Quebec are, generally speaking, only fair.

Manufacturers are receiving very little fresh business, although factories are all busy on goods already ordered for Fall.

Prices are firm, and deliveries are expected to be good, if merchants place early.

Small Pieces in Favor.

Buyers have shown increased confidence in muffs and neckpieces. The tendency in the cities seems to be toward large shapes in these goods. They have had a big run in Paris and across the line. Smooth furs in flat muffs are also fair.

Heavy Coats in Demand.

The business in all fur garments, with only about one exception, is up to the standard of a year ago. Ladies' fur-lined coats are much talked of. A fur-lined cloak is very comfortable, with its wide, full sleeves, and is, withal, a fashionable garment..

Some manufacturers, making a feature of ladies' fur-lined garments, claim that they are displacing the staple Persian lamb jacket, which remains very firm in price to-day. Last year the short supply of Persian lambs stiffened the market considerably and prices are high this year. However, advance orders have been satisfactory with many firms, and the assured position of the Persian lamb jacket has not been materially weakened.

Fur-lined coats for men, with muskrat linings and otter trimmings, are just as good as ever. Coon coats continue popular also, notwithstanding the high prices asked.

Quality Counts.

The tendency among a lot of merchants to be swayed by the idea of big discounts and low prices is one that should be checked. These considerations lead them, very often, to buy much larger stocks than they can handle, and they soon become discouraged in regard to their fur departments.

Year by year merchants are coming more strongly to desire quality, perfect finish, and exquisite style, without, at the same time following an extreme vogue. Good, reliable articles bring a valuable reputation to the retailer, and his customers are willing to pay a little more when they feel assured that the goods can be depended upon.

Money in Furs.

There is money in furs, if a merchant will carefully watch what the general run of customers keep asking for, and also what seems to sell easiest. At the same time he should keep his eyes open for novelties, and new ideas. While he may only buy a few of these lines, they always tend to give a new look to the department. However, he must be careful not to overstock, as the carrying over of furs ties up a good deal of money, and entails not a little risk and trouble.

THE PAQUET COMPANY, LIMITED.

The fur factory of J. Arthur Paquet, and the retail business of Z. Paquet, Quebec, have been sold to the Paquet Company, Limited, recently organized with an authorized capital of $1,500,000, the total assets representing more than $1,600,000. The management remains unchanged and the business will be carried on as before.

G. A. VANDRY.

A few details as to the personnel of the company are here given:

George Alfred Vandry, the president and general manager, who is 41 years of age, was educated partly at the College of Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere, where he followed the classical course, and partly, on deciding to follow a business career, at the Quebec Commercial Academy, where he took the complete commercial course. In 1898 he entered the service of the Paquet house as bookkeper, so distinguishing himself in this position by his ability and business expertness that later he was made manager of the fur factory at Hare Point. Appreciating his talents at their just value, the late Senator Paquet soon singled him out as his "right-hand man," and thus Mr. Vandry was brought into such close touch with the retail business that on the senator's death he was at once chosen to succeed him as general manager of both establishments. He has filled the position of president of the Quebec branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association during two terms, and at the Winnipeg convention last year he was chosen as vice-president of the association for the Province of Quebec.

J. O. PAQUET.

Joseph O. Paquet, the vice-president of the new company, is the second son of the late Z. Paquet, the founder of the house, and is 52 years old. Educated at Levis College, where he took the full commercial course, he entered his father's employ immediately upon the completion of his studies, and has been closely connected for the past thirty-five years with the establishment.

Dr. Victor de Lotbiniere Laurin, is one of the directors of the company. Dr. Laurin succeeded the late Hon. V. W. Larue, who died last December, as one of the executors of the late Senator J. A. Paquet. He is 60 years old. Educated at Levis College and the Nicolet Seminary, he graduated as a physician from Laval University, Quebec. He has long been one of the most prominent in military circles, holding the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the militia. He was formerly commander of the 87th, or Quebec county battalion, and saw service during the Fenian Raids and the second Northwest rebellion.

Forcing Trade in July

Push and Keep Pushing During the Mid-Summer Season —Some Suggestions.

During July and August business has to be forced, and one suggestion is that special attractions, such as bargain counters, etc., be provided day by day. Many stores find it profitable to conduct a cheap jewelry sale in which souvenir goods are prominent.

On account of the backward Spring, stocks, generally speaking, are heavy. All Summer articles must be cleared out. The Summer season is to be shorter than it has been in years.

As July is the month before semi-annual stock-taking odds and ends must be cleared out to make stock as light as possible. The keen housewife will see the bargains advertised and take advantage of them.

Some stores have different colored tickets to indicate special bargains, and they are not used at any other time. A lot of attention should be given to window displays and advertising.

A plan that has been tried, with success, is the holding of a "9" sale. It lasts for nine days and all prices end with the figure 9. A good deal of interest can be aroused beforehand by the use of "blind" advertising. A space in the local paper containing the figure 9 or a row of them, with the line "What does it mean?" beneath, will excite curiosity. This must, of course, be followed by an announcement later on.

In many cases, during May and June, merchants buy special lots of goods, but on account of the department to which they belong being busy, they are held over for the midsummer sale.

Though rushed with business never let the ordinary routine of work cause any annoyance to customers. Parcels should be delivered promptly and no inconvenience to customers should be caused by too many salespeople being away on vacation at one time.

Special attractions in smallwares will draw trade. Souvenir goods of all kinds can be used to advantage.

Now, as at any other time, do everything possible for the comfort of visitors. A rest room will help very materially during the hot months.

Catchy, attractive sale phrases are in order at this season, when every retailer is desirous of catching the eye of every other person who has a dollar to exchange for dry goods. "Aftermath" was a word used by one of the Montreal stores during a sale that lasted for seven or eight weeks.

The last thing to be said is Push and Keep Pushing during the midsummer season.

News of the Knitted Goods Trade

The Backward Weather Affected Business Considerably — Ten Per Cent. advances For Spring — The Advantage of Buying Early.

Underwear for Spring, 1908

New Lines Out and are Being Shown to the Jobbers— Fall Orders Heavy.

The underwear trade throughout the past month has been only fair, owing to backward weather, and Summer underwear has as yet received only a moderate proportion of the consumer's patronage, though the month has probably been busier in the men's departments. The warmer weather experienced in the last ten days or so has had a happy effect upon the situation and is tending to establish a rush period.

Those stores which indulge in a periodical scare when a few cold days come along have gone in for lots of advertising, and this certainly has served to draw the crowd. Men's cheap balbriggan have been freely rushed, and have, in consequence, captured a fair share of the trade. Cotton and lisle vests have also sold freely in a wide range of prices, running from 12½c at the one extreme, to $3 at the other.

Large Spring Sorting Orders.

The jobbers' sorting trade throughout June was up to every expectation, and, as a consequence, stocks were well cleared before the arrival of Fall goods. Low lines of ladies' vests, etc., were not in plentiful supply, and full rates were easily secured. Good trade has been done in Swiss wool and in silk and wool mixtures.

Retailers are depending more and more upon stocks in the jobbers' hands for assorting purposes, and it is the houses that maintain large and well assorted open stocks that do the bulk of the sorting trade.

Advance order business in the underwear field has been practically completed, and orders for Fall have been heavy. At wholesale, men's fleeced goods have sold well, owing to the scarcity of other lines to retail at 50c. Wool underwear has also been popular, and the same may be said of elastic rib goods.

In women's Fall underwear, advance orders have been to the fore, and fine elastic ribbed goods have been better than ever. Competition has been very keen on these lines and manufacturers and jobbers have cut goods very close. Ladies' fleeced goods have been up to the average, and the usual scarcity of these lines will be apparent when the selling season is on. The higher grade goods have also met with marked favor. Combination suits have in some sections sold freely, and in others the report comes that there have been few sales in these lines.

Spring, 1908, Lines This Month.

Domestic and foreign manufacturers are now showing to the jobbers their lines for Spring 1908, and it is clearly evident Canadian mills will secure the larger part of the trade for that season. The price advance, in values, will average ten per cent. in both domestic and foreign goods, although the consumer will hardly be able to detect the difference.

Golfers and Sweaters

A Feeling for Short-sleeve Golfers and Collarless Model Also—The Norfolk Jacket Again.

The present demand for golfers and sweaters is by no means brisk, although for the early Fall they will again be active, as this season always opens up with a large demand for these goods, and orders have already commenced to come in. Golfers and sweaters are used exclusively now for outdoor sports, and their use for street wear is a thing of the past now.

There is a particular feeling for short sleeve golfers, and the collarless model is also to the fore. The principal colors are white, black, navy and cardinal. There is quite a feeling for pretty combinations of white trimmed sky, white trimmed cardinal, and white trimmed navy, etc. The bright colors are prominent this year and are selling well.

The Norfolk jacket is counted upon as a novelty again, as it is quite a comfort to the golf-loving public. The style for this season is medium length; the extremely long jacket, while not neglected, has fallen to the rear.

Qualities have been well maintained by all makers and the Canadian mills have gone strongly after the trade. Jobbers are showing a good range of domestic goods.

Jobbers are maintaining prices, notwithstanding the increased cost of yarns, although no repeats will be accepted by the mills at the price now paid.

The Hosiery Situation

In City Stores Tans Have Given Way to White, Pale Blue, etc.—Lines for Spring, 1908.

The advent of warm weather has worked a welcome change in the hosiery department, and the counter demand is not only becoming heavier, but its character is changing. In the city stores little else but tans have sold, but in many of the smaller places the tan craze has not developed yet. The wholesale houses that provided for a big run on tans are, in consequence, well supplied.

Now that the Summer lines can be worn, the city stores are finding that the sale of tans is falling off, and that white and colors, particularly pale blue, pink, navy, helio and grey are unceasingly called for. The very popularity that tans have enjoyed in the past few months is one cause, no doubt, of this change. There is no reason to suppose that it will be permanent, and tans promise to be good sellers during the coming Fall.

The underlying style idea undoubtedly is hose, shoes and gown to match, and the fancy effects and colors in shoe lines means a corresponding call for colors in hosiery. Footwear to match the gown is no longer reserved for dress occasions, but is much in evidence for street wear.

The whole tendency is toward light weights and embroidered gauze effects in small, neat self patterns are taking best with the exclusive trade though, as the season advances, more laces will be seen. This demand for embroidered hose has as yet hardly developed for country trade.

There has been quite an active sale of children's hosiery in half, three-quarter, and full length stockings. Colors predominate—all shades of tans, black and the lighter shades, such as pinks, sky, red, etc., are to the fore. White has scarcely begun to sell, but the warm weather will soon bring out a strong demand. It is said on good authority that the fine rib goods are gaining in general favor, and are slowly but surely taking the place of the plain goods, which, in many cases, did not fit the limb or give satisfaction.

A tour of the market shows a steady business of considerable volume being done in practically all wholesale departments where desirable lines are carried. Lines of cashmere, woolen and worsted hosiery for Fall are being stocked in good quantities by retailers. Lace hosiery in lisle thread is also bought freely. Prices are still on the advance. With many manufacturers they have been withdrawn entirely.

Both Canadian and foreign mills are showing lines for Spring, 1908, and jobbers in most cases are placing as quickly as possible, owing to the scarcity of goods, and notwithstanding the advance in prices experienced. Both domestic and foreign manufacturers are showing an advance of about ten per cent. on most lines. Manufacturers state demand is heavy and the early buyer will reap the advantage of good delivery.

NEWSPAPERS AS TRADING STAMPS.

We have received many letters from readers directing our attention to a scheme instituted by a London Sunday newspaper, by which they are to allow their names and addresses to appear in that paper, and in return to give customers who produce a coupon from the paper a discount of a penny in the shilling, says the Draper's Record. We are not surprised to find that our correspondents criticize this scheme very warmly, and if there are any of our readers who have not given the matter careful consideration, and who may even have thought of adopting it, we think it well to lose no time in warning them against it. A penny in the shilling is equal to 8 per cent. This is a rather large sum to pay for advertising of this description. There are many objectionable elements in this scheme, one of which is the condition laid down that only one trader of a kind in a town will be allowed to adopt it. Not that drapers are likely to show any special anxiety for it. The newspaper really constitutes itself a weekly trading stamp, and the system it is endeavoring to popularize in its effort to increase its circulation is one which has been condemned by retailers' societies all over the British Isles.

TIME'S VALUE.

One of the first and most important lessons to be learned by every man who would get on in his calling is the art of economizing his time.

A noted scientist was wont to call his time his estate; and as with other estates of which the young come into possession, it is sometimes rarely prized till it is nearly squandered. Then, when life is fast waning, they begin to spend the hours wisely, and even to husband the moments.

Unfortunately, habits of indolence, listlessness, and procrastination once firmly fixed cannot be suddenly thrown aside, and he who has wasted the precious hours of life's seedtime finds that he cannot reap a harvest in life's Autumn. Lost wealth may be replaced by industry, lost knowledge by study, lost health by temperance or medicine, but lost time is gone forever.

The men who achieve the greatest things do them not so much by prodigious but fitful efforts as by steady, unremitting toil, by turning even the moments to account. They have the genius for hard work, which is the most desirable kind of genius.

COLONIAL WHITEWEAR CO.

An Ontario charter has been granted to the Colonial Whitewear Company, Limited, Guelph, with a capital of $40,000, divided into $100 shares. The incorporators were: Edwin H. Chart, commercial traveler, and Annie C. Chart, Toronto; Robert B. Bryson, of Perth, commercial traveler; Alfred. L. Moritz, of Montreal, manufacturer, and Alex. C. Renshaw, of Berlin, gentleman. The object of the company is "to manufacture and deal in ladies' and children's ready-to-wear garments."

GRUMBLING IS FATAL.

Grumbling kills friends. The business man who is ever grumbling and growling about things makes a blue atmosphere about him.

There is no good in grumbling. Grumbling is an evidence that you are looking at the world through blue glasses; that you haven't the proper estimate of other people.

Grumbling is an advertisement to the world that you are not a success. Grumbling won't help things a bit. The more you indulge yourself in grumbling the quicker you form the habit, and it becomes so fixed upon you that later on you find it almost impossible to shake it off.

If you are starting on the grumbling path pull yourself up short.

Cutting Down Expenses

Fully 2,000 Salespeople Discharged From New York Stores Owing to Unsatisfactory Conditions.

New York Commercial : Fully 2,000 sales people, and probably more, have recently been discharged from the big department stores of this city. One big concern has reduced its sales force about 600; another 400; another 300; several from 100 to 150, and so on. The causes generally given are unfavorable weather, restriction of demand by high prices, the necessity for economy in management and the effects of financial reaction.

In keeping with early expectations of merchants who foresaw the advancing prices of dry goods, the large retail department store managers are being forced to reduce expenses. Popularly this is attributed solely to adverse weather conditions, but merchants in intimate touch with department store methods and costs believe that the reduction of expenses is being forced by the necessity of arriving at a profitable merchandising margin while first costs are as high as they now are.

It is plain to many merchants that the consumer can pay very little more than he is now forced to pay, and it is to meet this condition that many striking reductions in costs are under way. In the metropolitan district alone, it is estimated that the selling force employed by the different retailers has been reduced in the past four weeks between at least 1,500 and 2,000 hands. There has also been a sharp reduction in the wages of many of those who have been retained, and enforced vacations of between three and four weeks are expected during the coming Summer months.

These changes are proceeding wholly independent of other happenings of a similar character among garment workers and other tributary factors.

Some Interesting Details.

Some details of a very interesting character were obtained pertaining to the state of the local retail trade which not only verify, but accentuate, the conditions which have prevailed throughout the entire Spring selling season. These conditions have grown rapidly worse owing to the delay in the improvement of the weather.

A number of the department stores in Manhattan and in the Borough of Brooklyn have felt the pinch so severely that they have reduced the number of salespeople and clerks in all divisions materially.

When officials were questioned, they were either reticent, or said that these statements were not based on truth, or that they were greatly exaggerated.

High-class Stores Affected.

From other sources, however, it was learned that not only were employes being released from their duties each week, but where this had not actually occurred, reductions in salaries, in some instances as much as 40 per cent., have been ordered. In one Broadway house it is stated that over 600 salespeople were dispensed with recently. This firm, it is reported, has also discontinued one of its custom departments.

In another of the up-town districts between 300 and 400 were discharged. One Fifth Avenue store, which caters to the high class trade, has released about 150, and still another in the Fifth Avenue district reduced its selling force by over 100. These are only isolated instances. The reduction has been quite general.

Many of the help, much dissatisfied by having their salaries reduced, are making more advantageous connections. The salespeople who work on a commission basis in addition to their salaries, are also much perturbed, as the edict has gone forth in some quarters, ridiculous as it may seem, that cash books must show a given value of sales each day. Inquiring customers must be pleased and a sale recorded under penalty of a reprimand. Constant explanations are in order as to why customers have not bought merchandise they have examined. Working under such conditions has proved most unsatisfactory to clerks.

Other Reasons for Slow Demand.

Aside from the weather, another reason advanced for the poor business this Spring is the exorbitant price asked for merchandise at the commencement of each season. The expenses of conducting a department store in this city are enormous. But the opinion is quite general that New York City is the highest priced retail centre in this country. As soon as received 25 per cent. is added to the sale price of goods for running expenses, and in many departments 50, 100 and sometimes 200 per cent. is added before the price basis is reached.

The consumer of this city who deals with the retailer is becoming cognizant of this fact, and the result is that goods show a decided disposition to lag at the beginning of each season. It is a common occurrence for prospective customers to examine a piece of goods, comment favorably on its appearance, obtain the price and then inquire : "When do you expect to hold a sale on this ?"

From these and other pertinent facts known in the wholesale trade the conclusion is being drawn that there are other things than the weather affecting the retail business, and not the least of them is the necessity of more economical forms of distribution to the consumer who buys at the counter.

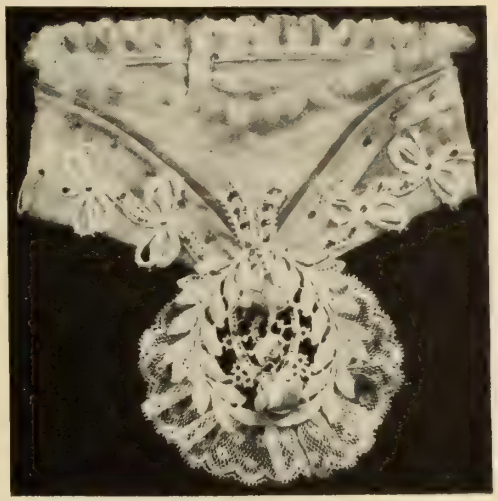
Neckwear News

Severe Tailored Effects and Stiff Collars Slow — Fall Season Will Be a Good One.



The fine warm weather has started the sale of Summer neckwear in earnest, and now that orders are again pouring in, the manufacturers are realizing that the breathing space given them by the cold weather has been a decided advantage, as it has enabled them to almost catch up with their back orders, and to prepare for the Summer rush.

Nothing in the way of novelty is shown, but there is a good enquiry for most lines. Frillings have picked up enormously in the past week or so, and a splendid frilling season is promised. One firm, at least, is putting in new machinery in preparation. Everything in the Peter Pan style is selling, and turn-downs, tab collars, etc., and everything in the nature of a Windsor or a string tie, is in strong favor. The only slow lines are the severe tailored effects and stiff collars. However good stiff collars may be in New York, they certainly have not caught on in this market, and, in spite of the immense amount of fashion advertising they have received, they have been uncompromisingly turned down in Canada in favor of softer, more feminine, and last, but not least, more comfortable styles. The early Fall, or more probably still, the early Spring of 1908, may witness a revival, but just at present the more becoming, soft, pretty effects are most decidedly more favored. Manufacturers are also of this opinion, judging from what can as yet be seen of the new sample lines for Fall, which are now in course of production. Following the latest Paris ideas jabots are very much to the fore, and detached jabots are a novelty from which much is expected. Lace and chiffon are the principal materials and a frequent decoration is little rosettes and bow knots of narrow velvet or ribbon. Tinsel effects are also introduced in many ways, just a touch of silver or gilt entering into the majority of the new collars. Beads—pearl, gold, and in various colors—are highly favored, and in laces, valenciennes, the new net laces, and heavy lace galoons and motifs, are freely used. All white, white and gold, white and ciel, white and mauve, white and pink, etc., are all to the fore and neckwear of cream and ecru, combined with the fashionable tan, browns and leather shades, promise, as striking a new note, to be important. Dresden louisine is much used, and dainty ruching effects edge the neck of the majority of the new stocks.

The manufacturers have every confidence that the coming season will be a large one, and, consequently, have entered upon the necessary preparations with enthusiasm. Members of the different firms have, in most cases, made personal trips to Paris and New York, and the trade is assured of a splendid line of neckwear novelties for the coming Fall.

Lace Promises Well

It Has Not Declined to the Slightest Extent in Fashionable Favor.

There is no gainsaying the fact that lace has not lost the least measure of its fashionable favor, and the coming Fall promises to be an extra good one in this department. Lace is the accepted trimming for the costume gown, and it will be only the most severe of tailor-mades that will lack it as a garniture.

Lace is to be the trimming par excellence for the bodice of the gown and the principal part of the waist will be composed of net, or lace allover, with a trimming of bands, galoons, etc., of a contrasting lace, sometimes of a heavy make, or, more fashionably, of either filet or valenciennes, and there are indications that cream and butter laces will be increasingly used.

Filet and embroidered lace nets will be a leading material for the formal evening gown, with low-cut bodice, and lace robes, and coats of all lengths, will be in demand for the better trade. Also net top flouncings, for use in the construction of elaborate undersleeves, and bands to match, will be asked for later in the season.

Manufacturers are buying heavily of laces and nets suitable for handsome blouses.

(Designed and Fitted by Harris & Sheldon, Birmingham)

View of Fancy Department—Turner, Son & Nephew, Birmingham, Eng.

Filet is the Paris novelty, and word comes from that centre that the makers of the fish-net or filet lace curtains, in the south of France, are all working upon trimming laces now for the Paris dressmakers. Filet net laces, and laces of fine net with filet introductions, promise to be the later feature for Fall. Filet valenciennes is another new effect, and one, perhaps, that does not promise much permanence, but will sell as a novelty.

The Glove Situation

Jobbers Have Placed Orders for Spring, 1908—Deliveries of Fall Goods Will Show No Improvement.

Long gloves continue in splendid request at retail, and it will be regretted by all enterprising merchants when the public demand turns to other goods. Long gloves have accustomed the public to paying a good price for gloves generally, and when another line comes to the fore retailers may anticipate better profits.

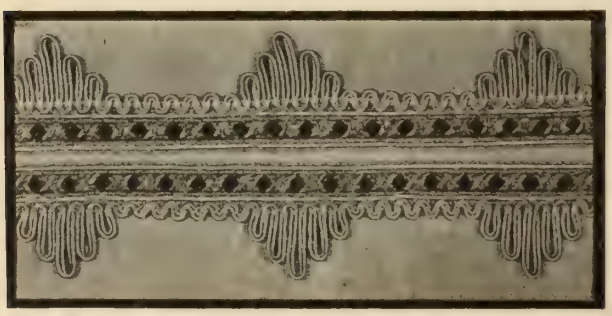
Fall lines of ringwoods and cashmeres have done fairly well, with the former in much better request, especially in neat patterns.



Fall lines of kid gloves are now fairly well sold, and a large business has been done in 12 and 16-button lengths, in glaces, with but few suedes in request, as consumers have learned to appreciate the wearing qualities of the glaces.

Among the wholesalers the glove situation for Fall,

Soutache Braid Motif.

in regard to fabric gloves, is very acute. Short lisle gloves, especially in black, are absolutely off the market and are not to be procured. Taffetas and silks are also scarce. This scarcity is explained in part by the fact that manufacturers have been giving most attention and preference to the manufacturing of long gloves. The general opinion is that the few lines circulating on the market are priced at least 25 per cent. higher than the values warrant. Short silk gloves, which were easy sellers, in past years, at $4.50, will not likely be found next season for less than $6, with every likelihood of their being higher. The cause of these high prices is the poor delivery from the manufacturers, and owing to this many jobbers and importers in Canada are buying from wholesale houses in the United States, who were more fortunate.

New Soutache Trimming.

Deliveries have been very slow for Spring and the general expectation is that they will be no better for Fall, as manufacturers are being delayed by spinners, who, owing to the large trade being transacted, can command their own prices.

Some wholesale houses are placing orders at the present time, and others placed a month ago, for Spring, 1908. In view of the conditions prevailing, every jobber should anticipate requirements at once and order liberally, as no relief from the present high rates is in sight. Those who put off placing, expecting lower prices, are sure to be among the unfortunates when Spring, 1908, arrives.

Trimmings, Braids, Buttons

The Outlook is Promising—Japanese Fashion Tendency —Some Handsome Novelty Trimmings.

The outlook for trimmings this Fall is decidedly promising, though the line is a more restricted one than the manufacturer hoped it would be when the season's samples were first shown. Braids will be, it now seems, its characteristic feature, and chiefly in pulls and soutaches. Worsted and fancy braids in the wider widths are also selling, and there is some call for tubulars. Bandings, vestings, and fancy ornaments of novelty braid soutaches—the soutaches sewn upon edge—form the novelty trimming, and some very handsome effects are shown in this class.

Wherever a trimming departs from the ordinary braid some touch of tinsel is used in its make-up. Gilt and silver are generally seen, but the latest Paris idea is to use platinum or copper. The use of these latter metals is due to the Japanese fashion tendency, and they are freely introduced in the Japanese and Chinese embroidery designs which are being so beautifully reproduced by the St. Gall manufacturers. The exclusive trade has already made free use of these trimmings upon Fall costumes and wraps. They come in the form of bandings, etc., and form a decidedly novel trimming.

The high class trade promises to go in rather extensively for black spangle bandings, and this fashion decidedly has the stamp of Paris approval.

The button question for Fall has largely narrowed down to the use of the covered button, and the manufacturers of ready-to-wear garments are using them in quantities. The newest idea in covered buttons is the combination idea—the centre of one fabric, and the rim of another.

The Ribbon Market

The Average Advance Has Been About 25 Per Cent.—Orders for Spring, 1908.

Prices continue firm on all prices for Fall and as the season progresses further advances are sure to take place, owing to the conditions of the market.

Prices on velvet ribbons have advanced 25 to 35 per cent. within the last three months, and indications so far show that there is every likelihood of their going hgiher. Other lines have advanced 10 to 30 per cent. The average advance, on most lines, as compared with figures ruling a year ago, is 25 per cent.

Jabot Effect for Fall, of Chiffon, Embroidered Net Lace, Pearls and Gold.
Shown by Rhys D. Fairbairn.

The conditions of the silk market still remain very much strained. Prices have advanced heavily in both American and foreign markets. This acute silk condition explains in part the steady advances in ribbons.

Orders for Fall in jobbing and millinery circles are very satisfactory and indicate another lustrous taffeta season, especially in wide widths. The demand for failletines is active. In fancy taffetas, striped combinations are in good request and over-check and plaid ideas are represented. There has been a strong feeling in all lines of fancies for Fall. Colors run prominently on staple shades.

In view of the acute ribbon situation some jobbers have already placed orders for Spring, 1908; in fact, deliveries by many manufacturers cannot be promised earlier.

MISLEADING ADVERTISING.

Gradually, the ill-advisedness of exaggerated and misleading statements in retail newspaper advertising is being appreciated by the majority of retailers. However, competition causes them to become careless sometimes in the exactness of their statements. An instance of this inaccuracy has been brought to the attention of The Review.

John Hunter & Sons, Huntingdon, Quebec, in a recent advertisement in the Canadian Gleaner, of that town, stated in substance that they were in a position to sell Priestleys' dress goods at a lower price than competitors, as they were buying these goods direct from the manufacturers and saving the profit of a jobber. Greenshields, Limited, Montreal, sole Canadian agents for Priestleys' dress fabrics, and who distribute these lines in Huntingdon through Pringle, Stark & Co., noticed the above advertisement and upon calling the attention of Hunter & Sons to the facts, that firm printed in the Gleaner the following retraction:—

Duncan McCormick, Esq., K.C.,
Atty. for Priestleys', Limited:

Dear Sir,—In our advertisement in The Canadian Gleaner, issued on the 7th of March last, 1907, appeared the following, to wit:—

"Buying Priestleys' direct from the manufacturer, we get the inside track of the dealer who gets these goods from the Canadian wholesalers."

We regret the insertion of the above in our advertisement, as we do not buy Priestleys' goods direct from them.

Hoping that you will accept this expression of regret.

We are, yours sincerely,
JOHN HUNTER & SONS.

Montreal, June 6th, 1907.

As the trade is well aware, Canadian retailers cannot purchase these lines direct from the manufacturers, and Hunter & Sons, recognizing the prestige of these goods, eventually secured them through a London or Glasgow jobbing house. Priestleys' goods are stamped every five yards on the selvedge, besides the protection of the varnished board. This protection is further strengthened by the vigorous policy of the Canadian agents in safeguarding the interests of retail distributors.

Careless advertising brings its own reward, and this example is one of the pitfalls retailers might fall into.

Dominion Threads are the only threads made in Canada—and the only threads owned by Canadian capital alone.

They are the only threads not made by a foreign trust. Dominion Threads are manufactured from the highest grade of Cotton—prepared and finished by a special process used only in the Dominion Thread Mills.

Dominion Threads are free from knots and imperfections usually found in imported brands—and are the best for hand and machine use.

All numbers, from 10s to 70s, are ready for immediate delivery. 300 yard spools—as well as 200s—are put up in white cardboard boxes of a dozen each.

Coats

Loose Gibson Effects Strong Sellers—Deliveries Will be Slow—Growth of the Industry.

Advance order business in the garment trade has been as good as usual, although more merchants than ever are realizing that it gives a decided price advantage to order early assured staple styles. Early orders, as well, always mean prompt deliveries. However, the style question plays such an important part, in some sections of the country, notably in Ontario, that a number of merchants wait until the early part of August before placing the bulk of Fall orders. This applies chiefly to separate cloth coats and suits.

Manufacturers, in some cases, have all the business they can look after successfully for the coming Fall season, while other houses still have their travelers on the road soliciting orders.

It was generally anticipated that one result of the poor Spring would be an early showing and movement of Fall lines, as manufacturers have not for years had so much time in which to prepare their samples. While factories in Canadian centres have continued busy, Fall lines were not out any earlier than usual.

Owing to the late delivery of materials from the manufacturers abroad, and the continued scarcity of skilled help, manufacturers here in most cases state that deliveries are sure to be slow. Prices continue to advance. The steady rise of materials and skilled labor bring the manufactured aeticle fully 25 per cent. higher than figures ruling a year ago.

In view of these conditions, merchants who intend putting in a stock of these goods should anticipate requirements and order liberally, as no relief from the present high rates, or slow deliveries, is in sight.

The difficulty in securing materials has, in some degree, abated, and although garments are higher on account of the advance in the price of wool, silk and cotton, buyers will have a larger assortment from which to select. Dark striped mixtures and plain cloths will be prominent. There is also quite a feeling for black beaver. Colors predominating are dark plain shades, such as black and navy, and dark shades of olive and olive brown.

Orders from salesmen on the road run strongly upon the loose type of garment. Semi-fitting lines are also well favored.

Plain, mannish styles in tweed coats are largely represented in every line and have done well for Fall in 48-inch lengths. The only distinguishing trimming features, however, are the touches of velvet or cloth and soutache attached to the cuffs and collars. These lines have sold best in the broad shoulder or Gibson effect.

Most retailers will have less difficulty this year than for some time past, in selecting their lines in coats, as there is a united feeling that loose models will again do the bulk of the business. The varieties shown enable every merchant to procure exclusive styles in tweed coats, and plain lines of black and navy. The growth of the industry in Canada, and particularly in Montreal, was never more apparent than in the present year, and the large number of lines shown will undoubtedly be absorbed. Merchants doing a popular trade will find their interests have been catered to extensively, and splendid lines are shown to retail at $10, $12 and $15. The growing quality trade in Canada is well looked after by houses making garments adapted to the better class of consumers, and every feature is in keeping with the latest style ideas, correct fit and workmanship.

Gibson Shoulder Effect, Trimmed with Velvet and Soutache. Fancy Braid Buttons, with Enameled Edge. Inlaid Velvet Collar, Box Back, and Lap Pleat Front and Back.—Shown by Sam Wener & Co., Montreal.

The Raincoat End.

Plain raincoat materials were very slow during the Spring months, although a slight inquiry has been received for Fall. The demand for light tweed coats has been carried to the limit, and the three-quarter and seven-eighth lengths proved slow sellers during the latter end of Spring season. The popular feeling has been for short, jaunty models. This aspect of the Spring season tends to prove that when another Spring comes around, rainproof materials will once more claim a share of the garment business.

Silk, rubberized and satin goods, in fawn and slate colors, ranging in price from $14 up, have done fairly well in the larger centres. Special automobile waterproof coats are featured by the raincoat houses in some city stores, and sales, generally, are satisfactory. Popular priced lines are also having a fair sale in prices ranging from $10 up.

Owing to the continued scarcity of raw material and labor, from five to ten per cent. is a conservative estimate of the advance put into effect recently by the manufacturers on most lines of rainproof garments. The price advance on most lines as compared with figures ruling a year ago, averages as high as twenty-five per cent.

Skirts

Pleated Styles are Strong—Shorter Lengths Spoken of—Silk Lines Very High.

The outlook for Fall, from the manufacturer's point of view, is fair. Although trade has not opened up as expected, owing to one of the most backward Springs in years, it is now picking up a big part of the ground lost earlier in the season. The general opinion among the trade is that business has been on a par with the same period of last year.

Some manufacturers state their lines are complete, while others say they are still preparing, and this is due to poor delivery of materials. Prices continue to advance. Silk skirts will be extremely high, as silk has gone up 40 per cent. within a year. Within the past two months some lines advanced 10 per cent. The rise of materials and labor bring the manufactured article 25 per cent. higher than a year ago.

For Fall, pleated and self-trimmed skirts still hold strong. The general demand will unquestionably be for the pleated skirt. Tailor-made goods will also be to the fore.

The choice of materials lies between dark tweeds and dark, plain cloths. Navy, black, brown and wine colors are favorites, with green following in the rear. In the better class lines cloths of chiffon, panama, voile and London twine are to the fore. Favorite colors in these goods are black, blue, navy, cardinal, myrtle and brown. A popular everyday skirt is of amazon venetian cloth. In the dressy lines silk and braid will predominate.

With regard to the popular lengths some manufacturers state there is quite a feeling for shorter garments.

Freakish Sleeves

Ruched Directoire, Fitting the Arm and Descending to Knuckles, the Latest.

The shape of the sleeve, generally speaking, is the most prominent feature of a garment, and old designers say that if the sleeve is up-to-date the rest of the garment will pass muster. For a fairly lengthened period now there has been no particular change in the shape of sleeves, but signs are not wanting that this period is passing, and it seems not unlikely that, in the novelty end at any rate, a period of freakish sleeves is upon us.

Many of the new ideas are most contradictory, and while voluminous wing sleeves are seen on numbers of the new wraps, ruched directoire sleeves, fitting the arm, and descending to the knuckles, are put forth as the latest style. There are also many indications of undersleeve styles. To balance the exaggerated shoulder line, which is a feature of the Japanese styles, sleeves are becoming decidedly larger, and the short ones now worn are very full and gathered into wide, but not deep, cuff bands, and have also a frill of lace or material as an additional finish. The Review illustrates a number of the latest smart sleeve designs.

Fall Styles

Recommendations Made by National Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Association.

At the recent meeting of the National Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Association, which was held recently in Cleveland, Ohio, the following style recommendations for Fall, 1907, were adopted :

No. 1—Loose coats made with full backs, in 50 and 52-inch lengths, the new sleeve effect to be the novelty features for the coming season.

Some of the New Sleeve Styles.

No. 2—Fitted and half-fitted coats, 50 to 54 inches long, plain tailored effects, with straight fronts predominating; coat sleeves with some shoulder fulness.

No. 3—Short coats, made only of pile fabrics (resembling fur) 22 to 27 inches long, in fitted and semi-fitted back, straight front and full sleeves.

No. 4—Raincoats, loose and fitted effects, 54 to 56 inches long, coat sleeves with fulness at shoulders.

No. 5—Suits to be tailor-made effects, tight-fitting and semi-fitting backs and fronts, lengths to vary from 22 to 36 inches. Skirts of suits to be pleated or flared.

No. 6—Separate skirts, to be pleated and flared effects, and cut full.

Petticoats

The great advance in both silk and cotton materials is very noticeable, and the retailer searching for a $5 silk skirt, or a 75c sateen one, for a leading line, is finding some difficulty in securing a desirable garment. The fashionable colors in the dress goods department govern those seen in petticoats. Black is always the big seller on this market, and this season so far brown, navy and tans lead for street wear, with white, ciel, rose, and yellow in evening shades. Plain taffetas trimmed with strappings of fancy checked or striped silk are the novelty, and ribbon velvet to match and in contrast forms another favored trimming. The closest possible fit around the hips and much fulness around the feet is the cut aimed at. Tucks and bias folds are much used as trimming, and ruchings are seen, but are sparingly used.

Corset Association

The Corset Manufacturers' Association of the United States was formed early in the present year, and has recently adopted a number of interesting resolutions. These resolutions, it is stated, are the outcome of the increased cost of labor and materials, and of the fact that the corset manufacturers generally have not reduced the quality of their products, nor advanced the selling price of their goods.

The resolutions are as follows :—

That no members of the association loan or give to any customer any mirror, counter, counter-top, awning, board or wire sign, show-case (excepting a single show-case to cover a mechanical form) or any permanent store-fixture, or make any contribution or allowance toward the payment of same.

That no member of the association shall give or sell any glove envelopes, notion bags or wrapping paper of any description or pay anything toward the same.

That no member of the association shall exchange Summer goods at the end of the Summer season for heavy goods, or exchange heavy goods for Spring or Summer goods ; and, furthermore, that no member of the association shall make a contract, either in writing or verbally, to make such exchange.

That the use of corset lacings in the boxing of corsets be discontinued by all members of the association, and that they be not furnished gratis or sold below cost to any merchant; except that in cases where, because of the peculiar construction of a corset, lacings must of necessity be an integral part of the corset, such lacings may be permitted.

That all goods shipped from San Francisco offices to points west of Denver be sold at New York prices net, and that goods shipped to such points from Chicago and New York offices or from factories be billed at New York prices regular, no freight to be paid.

That no allowance be made by any member of the association to merchants for advertising in catalogues, booklets, pattern sheets, pamphlets or any of their individual issues of any description.

That no member of the association consign any goods to any merchant.

The association, whose membership includes about all the leading corset manufacturers in the United States, expresses an earnest desire to work harmoniously with merchants and to co-operate with them, so that the best interests of the trade may be conserved.

The Canadian trade will be interested in the new rules regulating corset selling put out by the recently formed association of United States corset manufacturers, as they will affect many Canadian retailers.

Imitation Furs

Line of Coats of These Materials Among the Later Novelties—The Colors.

Crushed plushes and fur imitations made their appearance in the States last year, and were so successful that the fashion is extending this year. Canadian garment manufacturers think well of them, and one of the season's later novelties will be a line of coats of these imitation furs. Though there are many ideas showing, the imitation broadtail is the one that is expected to make the best success, and in black, particularly, it is a striking reproduction of the fur. The colors are grey, brown-grey, or a mixture of brown and white, and black.

These imitation furs are being made up into coats from 22 to 27 inches, in both fitted and semi-fitted styles, and with straight fronts and full sleeves. Fancy collars and cuffs of velvet are sometimes added.

Success With Woolens

The rapid development of our trade in high-class Woolens is largely due to the connections we have with leading mills at home and abroad. A striking instance of this is the phenomenal distribution of Vickerman goods, including lines adapted to ladies' wear, and the lifting of

Vickerman Worsteds Vickerman Cheviots
Vickerman Serges Vickerman Vicunas
Vickerman Dress Coatings

into a prominence never before reached in Canada by any make. We show in every transaction the supreme faith we have in the goods we sell, which serves as a guarantee that everything going out from here is full first-class.

As Regards Prices

We have discounted present market conditions to probably a greater extent than any house in the trade. Contracts running now were made more than a year ago, before the higher prices, and our customers are getting every advantage that we possess. This applies to Linings and Trimmings as well as Woolens—to Dress Goods as well as Linens.

NISBET & AULD

LIMITED

Toronto

Dress Goods and Linens

Along with the encouragement of good times and good business we have been equally insistent that merchants needed to plan farther ahead than ever before in regard to their buying. Present market conditions are generally admitted to be the most difficult in the last 40 years, with all lines of manufacturing affected by the increased cost of raw materials. The result is a continued advance in prices all along the line, with considerable difficulty even then in getting shipments as required. We anticipated this condition of things by making large advance contracts last year, which enables us to sell many lines now at prices distinctly below the market. For instance:

54-inch Broadcloth at $1.75

Same as previous years.

Set of Table Linen to retail at $5.00

Comprising one hemmed Damask Cloth, size 71 x 90, and six hemmed Napkins in same design, size 22 x 22.

In all lines of dress goods, linens, woolens and linings we strongly urge the placing of orders promptly in order to make sure of deliveries. The trouble with railroad shipments last winter is a reminder to the wise and prudent to anticipate requirements and be ready with goods enough on hand for the season's trade.

H.M.

Little can be added to the information given by The Review when first samples were shown for the present Fall, as the retail trade has, as yet, exhibited no marked partiality for any one class of fabric. Buying is not far advanced as yet, and orders received have been practically spread over the whole range.

Though plain, unspottable face cloths, broadcloths, etc., have been the biggest sellers, fabrics with a little rougher surface are beginning to be featured. What may be termed semi-rough surfaces in tweeds, serges, cheviots, etc., are certainly coming to the fore. The majority of these cloths, with the exception of greys, are decidedly dark, with the colors mingled and the pattern indistinct.

So far the buying of plain goods has been more vigorous than of fancies, but fancies have also done well. Fancies, it must be borne in mind, are of the subdued kind, and are exceptionally quiet in effect.

The past few weeks have seen a further developmnt in favor of stripes, and they claim at the present date to be classed as the leading idea in fancies. Small block checks and plaids are much in evidence. These all come in combinations of dark colors—brown, dark red, dark blue, and dark green being the colors most favored.

Between plain and fancies are the cheviots, serges, etc., showing herringbone, or chevron stripes.

Voiles, particularly in black and cream, are selling very freely at present, and are also being taken for the making of dressy gowns for the coming Fall. Orders are already being placed for voiles for next Spring, for which a big veiling season is predicted.

There is a steady gain in the sale of black materials at the present time, and the opening of the Fall season will see black fabrics in a still better position. Lightweight fabrics in wool, or wool and silk, are the big sellers, and plain fabrics are selling much more freely than fancies.

Tartans are strong, and the tendency is in favor of plaids showing a fair mixture of red.

Brown and blue will be strong rivals for the color supremacy. Navy in light, dark and royal is coming to the fore now in New York, but it must be remembered that browns have had a big run over there, a run that has as yet had no duplicate in Canada. Wine shades and greens promise also to be represented. Though the length of time, and its immense vogue, should, it is thought, lead to its retirement, grey, in medium shades, has so far done remarkably well. Some buyers maintain that this cannot last, but grey is certainly a color that is well liked by Canadian women.

Pile Fabrics.

The most interesting feature is the strong revival of interest in crushed plushes in imitation of furs. Notwithstanding the heavy advances, velveteens promise to be very much worn. They have been adopted in Europe and America, and also by the exclusive trade here in Canada. In the late Spring at the horse shows and the race meetings the number of velveteen suits and gowns worn was much remarked, and this vogue, it is claimed, will become much more extended this Fall. Plain velveteens will be most in demand, and the selling colors are black, blue, wine and brown.

Silks.

More silks are selling than is at all usual for the Fall trade, and this in spite of the big advances in price. Taffetas, as usual, lead, and black is the best seller. The sale of veilings, selk nets, etc., is leading to a bigger call for colored taffetas for foundation purposes. For waists and suits, satin-finished silks are in unusually big demand, and messalines, satin duchesse and silks of a similar finish occupy a strong position. A good deal of interest is manifested in fancies, and the range of samples put out is both extensive and interesting. Samples of exclusive novelties will be shown later, and a considerable business promises in this section of the silk department.

S. W. Ewing, chairman of the Montreal branch, Canadian Manufacturers, was so elected by acclamation. S. S. Boxer, general manager Watson-Foster Co., Montreal, was chosen vice-chairman.

FANCY GOODS AND NOTIONS

The backward Spring has so helped manufacturers in their deliveries that retailers state stocks are complete; in fact in some cases they have more goods on hand than is usual at this season. As a consequence, special sales will be held, in order to provide space for Fall and holiday lines.

Great attention is now being paid to tourist trade, and considerable activity is expected in this section of the business. There are hundreds of lines that the tourist will buy. In some cases souvenirs could profitably be given a department to themselves.

This is the time to push wash belts, and the trade in them, from now on, should be considerable. Leather belts, particularly in white and tans, in both crush and in wider effects, are doing well, but the really important indication is the way in which silk belts are picking up. From samples for Fall already shown and in course of preparation, indications are that belt lines will again be very varied, and that the trade will not confine itself to any one line. Fancy beltings and elastics are showing in big variety, the latest novelty being the Japanese effects. These are printed designs, Japanese in color and pattern, on a white or colored ground. Tinsel still keeps its place, and a more or less heavy touch is seen in many of the new beltings. Fashion is not confining herself to any one belt width, and narrow and wide effects are shown side by side in a line. Both narrow and wide elastics are strong, and in the better lines of elastic and silk belts, back buckles, and also back sets, are featured. Belts in this class will come expensive, and will sell better for the holiday trade than in the earlier part of the season; that is, for the general trade. Steel studded elastics again promise to make a success. Leather belts are expected to do exceedingly well, and come in big variety, both in wide and in narrow effects. Many are steel-studded, and tans and browns, in sympathy with dress goods lines, promise to be a big feature. Interest in silk belts, at present, seems to centre around Dresdens. Some very handsome belts in shirred girdle styles, made from Dresden louisine, are included amongst Fall samples. Little rosettes, knot bows of velvet, etc., decorate the back, but back buckles and ornaments seem slated for prominence later. Buckles are of fancy metals and are jewel-set. The new buckles and ornaments are outre in shape, being wide at the top and tapering off to nothing at the bottom.

Merchants who stock Japanese fancy goods will find many choice lines for the Fall and for the holiday trade. Travelers on the road are showing chinaware, baskets, etc., etc.

Opera bags are seen in extensive range. Silver, nickel and oxidized fixtures, mounted with rubies, sapphires, etc., are among the features. Bead bags, ranging from $1 to $45, are again selling, but the latest novelty

The comb trade still continues active. Cut steel goods, with the high back, have sold well so far. Pearl grey effects are popular, and jet-trimmed lines are also prominent.

Picture post cards are a line worth considering in every store. Enquiry among manufacturers and wholesalers, publishers and importers, develops the fact that the business has settled down to what is regarded as a permanent activity. Picture post cards were first accepted as a fad, but they have passed entirely out of that stage, and are classed as a real convenience. The scenes continue to hold first position. Manufacturers are turning out many lines of novelties for Fall and holiday trade.

Now is the time for the fancy work department to get busy, as many women use fancy work to while away the Summer afternoons during vacation time. Stamped linen goods are active at this period, but the class of goods stocked should be those for personal wear. It is embroidered blouses, hats, parasol covers, corset covers, etc., that sell now, rather than household articles. Fancy pillow covers are always in demand, and The Review shows a late idea for making up into a really handsome and artistic pillow. This cover is of hand made Arabian lace. Squares like the one shown can be bought, and also smaller squares and corners. The frill should receive a decoration of Arabian lace to correspond with the square.

Import orders are of good volume. Prices remain firm, and deliveries are not expected to be much improved upon. Therefore, early orders are advised.

COMPARISON WITH CATALOGUE PRICES.

The day is coming when there will be no big retail catalogue houses, and the people of Canada will buy almost entirely from their home merchants. That time may be quite a long way off, but it will arrive when the consumer is satisfied that he can buy just as well from the local retailer as he can by patronizing the mail order plan. Its advent can be hastened by the retailer if he but give the matter constant study, and follow that up with intelligent efforts along the lines that we indicate, supplemented by any additional action that the local situation may suggest.

It is not nearly so convenient to purchase through a catalogue as it is to go to the store down street, or—in the case of residents of the country—in the neighboring town. Following the latter course the goods themselves may be handled and their value examined; following the former, cuts, descriptive advertising, and price must be depended upon, and two or three days must elapse before delivery is made to even the nearest point. Then, further delay may be caused by the unsatisfactory filling of some items in an order and the necessity for exchange. Besides this there is the postage, express or freight to be reckoned as part of the cost.

Why, in face of these conditions, do so many people, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, give the mail order concerns a large share of their trade? Simply because they believe that it pays them to do so; and the only manner in which the situation can be changed round in favor of the home merchant is through the latter giving them proof that their present idea is a misconception. The catalogue houses boast loudly of cheap prices. We want every drygoodsman in Canada to satisfy himself as to how his figures compare with theirs. That must be his starting point in the campaign to oust them from their position as a powerful factor in the merchandising of this country.

In the news columns of this issue The Review compares the prices of a large mail order concern, on some sixteen staple lines, with those of a number of local retailers. In the list cities of fifteen thousand and villages of seven hundred population are represented, and the information given should be of wide interest and value. Generally speaking, the comparison contains a great deal of encouragement for the merchant who is really striving to do business along the best and most economic lines.

The Review had the various materials purchased through mail order, and samples were sent out to the retailers mentioned, with the request that they quote us their regular selling prices on the same quality goods in stock. In order that the comparison might be an absolutely fair one, no mention was made of the purpose for which the figures were desired, or of the origin of the materials from which the samples had been cut.

One merchant, in a town of about two thousand population, sent in samples of some goods on which he had quoted prices. We found several of them to be of better quality and much more desirable in every way than those secured from the catalogue house. If other retailers had done likewise the same would probably have been found to be the case.

This comparison will likely be carried further later on, but in the meantime the lists which we have compiled should be carefully studied. We will be glad to have other retailers send us samples for examination alongside of the catalogue house goods.

If a merchant cannot compete with catalogue prices

The Review wants him to ask himself why—and insist upon a definite answer. If his buying methods are at fault let him think out a plan for improving them. His selling methods, etc., should also come in for complete analysis. We are satisfied that a way will be found by which catalogue prices can be equalled or surpassed in attractiveness.

From our investigations we are convinced that a good deal of headway is being made against mail order competition in the larger towns which can boast of up-to-date stores and aggressive merchants. However, more mail orders than ever are being sent from the smaller places and the rural districts.

We have occasionally run across a retailer who looks at the situation through blue spectacles, so to speak, and appears to have little hope of ever meeting catalogue prices. At the same time, he acknowledges that he possesses no very definite idea as to what these prices are. If he would take a firm grip on the situation and set about improving his methods in every respect, he would find justification for a good deal of optimism. Very probably his prices, assortments, advertising, premises, etc., are unatteactive, and while they remain in that condition he may expect that his customers will continue to patronize the mail order plan. Before they will confine their trade to him he must be able to give at least as good values as the big city concerns, and transact his business in modern surroundings that shall add to the comfort of buyers and the attractiveness of his goods.

It must not be imagined that the catalogue houses have no troubles of their own. They have, and plenty of them. Every piece of goods received by us through mail order was an inch to two and a half inches over measure. If that occurs in even a fair percentage of orders filled the loss must be very considerable. Then we asked for galatea and received duck, for navy broadcloth and received black. Some exchanges would have been necessary had the order been sent by a consumer. This must strike customers as very unsatisfactory and set them thinking as to whether or not mail orders are the best thing after all.

The Review has several times criticized paragraphs, inspired by merchants in local papers, on the subject of mail orders. We claimed that the principal result of publishing such items would be a lot of cheap advertising for the catalogue houses. The reason was that they appealed to sentiment and not to the business sense of the people—a great deal was said about it being the duty of every man to support local stores, without any mention of the values he would find there. Now if a merchant can compile a list of materials, with prices, and show that the latter compare favorably with catalogue figures, we would most certainly recommend that he publish the information. We would like to see this done, and will assist in any way possible to make the comparisons.

The Review invites merchants to give it the benefit of their suggestions in this matter.

MAIL ORDERS IN LOCAL STORES.

Most dry goods stores, even the smaller ones, do some mail order trade, and a number have made it an important factor in their businesses. A few issue twenty to thirty-page catalogues, and send out circulars at regular intervals.

In a town of 2,500 population, which The Review visited recently, one merchant advertises that he will fill orders for anything that can be purchased locally. Along with dry goods items, he has requests for hardware, boots and shoes, etc. If anything is unsatisfactory it may be returned at his expense. The plan is working splendidly, and the business which the big catalogue houses did in the district surrounding this town has been cut down very materially.

Every retailer should cater to mail order trade. Many have been surprised at the degree of success that has attended their efforts along this line. They regard the patronage received as practically found business, and are able to offer their customers good inducements in the way of prepayment of express or freight charges, as well as attractive prices. Where it is considered worth while to issue a catalogue, we would recommend that a local hardware merchant, a boot and shoe merchant, and any others considered desirable, be interested in the project. You could all club together and get out a real good catalogue, representative of your several lines. In this way we believe that a mail order trade of considerable proportions could be worked up.

THE LONG GLOVE QUESTION.

How to get a sufficient quantity of long fabric gloves to supply their customers is the chief problem confronting many merchants at the present time; but it seems to be giving ground before the question of how much longer the long glove fashion is to last.

The glove question is, in effect, the sleeve question, for the length of one determines the length of the other. Knowing the present state of deliveries, and of the market generally, The Review has canvassed the best authorities for views and opinions that might prove a guidance for the future. Leading ladies' tailors state that Paris is trying to force the long sleeve, and a newly imported gown conforming to this idea was shown to us in one establishment. The sleeve had a scant pouf, finished with a close-fitting mitaine cuff which followed the shape of the wrist and hand and reached to the knuckles. It is so radical in shape, and so opposed to the present vogue, that some time will be required to introduce it. There is, however, no reason to doubt that the trend of fashion is in the direction of a longer sleeve. The general tendency in Canada is toward the three-quarter length for general wear and the seven-eighth, or wrist length, for coats and tailor-mades, and the three-quarter sleeve calls for the long glove. The sixteen button length will be the best seller, although the shorter ones will receive more consideration than for some seasons.

There is every reason to expect that the Spring of 1908 will again see long fabric gloves in a leading position. Such is the view of most Canadian buyers, and that buyers from elsewhere are of the same opinion would appear to be indicated by the orders already placed with Chemnitz manufacturers. One man just returned from the market tells of seeing a single order for twenty-five thousand dozen of long gloves.

Though there may be a dropping off of sales in the exclusive city trade, the popular trade has not yet done with long gloves. Buyers are reminded of the fact that they have had a more extended run in New York than in Canada. and that the change there is as yet only indicated. The much cheaper price should operate in favor of short gloves.

The situation is interesting and one that it will pay the glove buyer to watch closely.

CATALOGUES AND CIRCULARS.

The advertising value of catalogues and circulars has been pretty thoroughly tested by Canadian manufacturers and wholesalers during the past few years, and many of them, in different branches of the trade. have informed us that, for the future, they intend securing publicity almost entirely through trade newspapers. The policy which they have been following seemed to be encouraged for a while, but so many firms adopted it that the retailer was nearly inundated with literature, and he was not backward in declaring it a nuisance. At the same time various concerns vied with one another in the publication of high class catalogues, profusely illustrated, some running into several thousand dollars for each issue. A great deal of time was spent in their preparation, and in a number of cases the services of an expert in such work had to be employed. A new season meant new catalogues, and the expense became enormous. Meanwhile, the merchant was losing interest in them, and in the circulars with which they were supplemented at regular intervals. Firms dropping them will have about the same number of cuts made each year, but they will be used in trade newspaper advertising.

When a retailer picks up his trade newspaper he is in a receptive mood for anything that a manufacturer or wholesaler may have to say to him. He reads the market and fashion news, and then, naturally, turns to see what the advertisers have to offer. A paper like The Review gets closer to the merchant than a traveler is likely to, and if properly used it will certainly give results. This brings us to a very important point, that of ad-writing. The firm which buys so much space and fills it with unattractive, unconvincing matter cannot reasonably expect returns. The fact that some concerns have used that sort of copy, and then unfairly concluded that trade newspaper advertising did not pay, is responsible for the establishment of our ad.-writing department. Any advertiser may avail himself of the services of this department, entirely free of charge. Every ad. prepared here must pass close examination, and the first question asked is: "Will it sell goods?" The Review brings expert knowledge of market conditions, of styles, and of the attitude of the retailer to bear on this matter. This consideration is leading manufacturers to drop the advertising agencies, whose staffs have been trained to write copy for the consumer and do not pretend to have any knowledge of the dry goods trade.

LIGHT UP WINDOWS IN EVENING.

In a city of about 15,000 population, one evening, The Review noticed that the windows of all the dry goods stores were dark. At first thought we concluded that there must be something wrong with the incandescent circuit, but we were informed that it would be very unusual if the store fronts were illuminated. Now the retailers of the city in question are leaving idle one of the best and cheapest advertising mediums that is open to them. There, as everywhere else, many people pass down the streets in the evening and, if given an opportunity, the ladies would look for interesting offerings in the windows. They have more leisure then to do so than during the day. In this connection we might mention the experience of a Toronto trimmer. As an experiment he put in a display Saturday, between five and six o'clock, of goods to be sold Monday morning at eight o'clock. The plan was so successful that he continued it for some time. The windows sold the goods without the aid of a single line of newspaper advertising.

CHEAP HELP.

The importance of good service in a dry goods store cannot be over-estimated ; and it is not possible to give it with a poor class of help. In an up-to-date establishment, where the buying is well looked after, an efficient staff of salespeople will pay for themselves several times over. You depend upon them to sell goods and please customers. Cheap help is not capable of doing this, and it will steadily lose trade for you. Put yourself in the place of a lady in a hurry going into a store and being attended by an inefficient salesperson, who wastes her time, and is so lacking in tact, and the ordinary common sense of experienced salesmanship, that she decides not to purchase after all. Over at your competitor's she finds a staff which is required to be efficient and is paid in accordance. There she is served quickly and satisfactorily. The chances are in favor of your competitor getting a large share of her trade in the future.

Cheap help is very likely to be careless about stock-keeping and the measurement of goods.

There is no department in which well trained salespeople are not necessary. In ready-to-wear, for instance, there are successful retailers who count them as the most important requirement.

Some merchants allow five per cent. of the gross sales for salaries. They keep exact record of each employe's checks and those who sell most goods receive the most money. Any who fail to come up to a certain standard are promptly replaced by new hands.

DISCRIMINATION IN EXPRESS RATES.

Retailers have frequently complained to The Review that express rates are excessive, and at first glance some of them were inclined to favor the recent proposal in regard to extension of the parcel post system, because its adoption would mean a big reduction in their expense for carriage of goods. When it was pointed out that instead of being benefitted by the changes which the Postoffice Department contemplated—at the instigation of the catalogue house interests—their welfare, and that of every local merchant in Canada, would suffer tremendous injury, their attitude was immediately reversed. A second glance convinced them that the result of any such revolution in the postal system would be the increase of mail order business in every section of the country. That was the object of the proposal, pure and simply. For this reason it was not intended that it should be made known to the public until such time, at any rate, as its materialization was assured. When, however, its declaration in the House of Commons was forced by direct enquiry of a member—prompted by his constituents in the dry goods trade—it put on the guise of a public benefactor, the mission of which was to give the people of Canada the cheapest possible express tariff. That would be all well and good if it were not for the very important consideration that hundreds of small merchants would be sacrificed, and the trade of all local retailers damaged. This, in the minds of any persons giving the matter the least study, defeats any claim that the changes proposed would bring "the greatest good to the greatest number." Their disposal is an old story, but one that it is well to bear in mind, for another attempt will be made, before long, to have them put through, perhaps in modified form. They must never be adopted, while retail mail order concerns occupy the position that they do to-day, and the trade would feel much better satisfied if it were left to Parliament, and not to the Postoffice Department alone, to deal with such matters. For the present we will just say that the Government must protect the local merchant, but that the latter must be wideawake in his own interests.

The trade is satisfied that extension of the parcel post system, and the ultimate absorption of the express companies, would be disastrous to its welfare. It must next concern itself about rate discrimination. The majority of merchants believe that express charges to catalogue houses are lower than to themselves. If evidence proving this to be so can be collected The Review will have it laid before the Railway Commission. That body would speedily obviate discrimination, and, very likely, decide that the general tariff be revised on the basis of the preferential rates now enjoyed by the catalogue houses.

LARGER BUSINESS WITH LESS STOCK.

A dry goods business in one of the larger Ontario towns furnishes an excellent example of the advantage of present-day methods over those of a few years ago. In 1904 it was conducted along old-fashioned lines, and was steadily losing ground. Then it changed hands and the new firm adapted it to prevailing conditions. A big improvement was at once made with respect to assortments. Goods were purchased in wider range and smaller quantities, and sorting orders were sent in frequently. The result is that the firm carry $10,000 less stock than their predecessor, and still do a much larger trade. Their stock is turned more often, goods are fresher, and, besides, they have $10,000 less money tied up in their business.

THE MARKET.

Now that a new season is opening up the question of prices looms large in the trade, and the continuous rise in the values of all raw materials is brought forcibly to the retailer's notice. Cotton, wool and flax values have been steadily climbing till they stand to-day at a level that has seldom been reached. In sympathy with these advances most of the staples have gone up, approximately, fifteen to sixty per cent., and it is not by any means impossible for many of them to go still higher.

Thus far the retail trade has been, in a measure, protected by the contracts of the manufacturer and wholesaler, but now that these have run out, buyers must be prepared to feel the full force of the advances. For some time yet a change in favor of the retailer cannot be expected.

The existing conditions are due to greatly increased demand, following general prosperity, and the manufacturers find it almost impossible to turn out an adequate supply of goods. It is of great importance that the trade should be clear as to the exact situation, and as to the necessity for a revision of the general conception of values.

CANADA'S MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS.

The census and statistics department has issued another bulletin giving the details of the manufactured products in Canada for 1900 and 1905, according to the census of 1901 and 1906. The total value is placed at $715,035,956 for 1906, compared with $481,053,375 for 1901. There was a decrease of over a million and three-quarters in woolen goods; cottons increased from $12,933,052 to $14,223,447; hosiery and knit goods from three to six millions; men's custom clothing decreased from eight to six millions, while ready-to-wear clothing increased three millions and a half; women's custom clothing decreased from four to three millions, while ready-to-wear garments increased from two to nine and a half millions. Gloves and mittens increased from $1,000,000 to over $2,400,000.

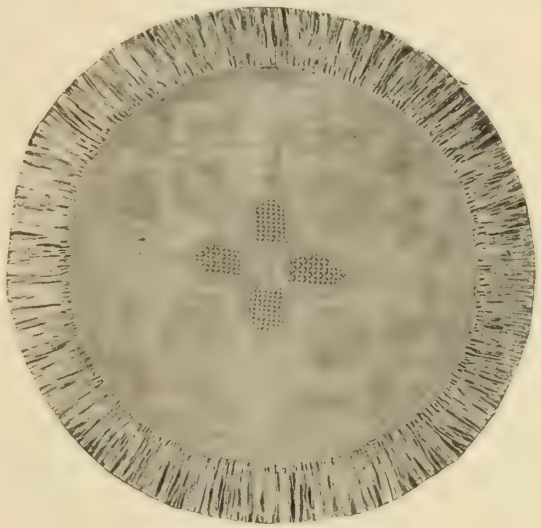
STAPLES AND RAW MATERIALS

Cotton Goods Price Situation — Flannelettes and Wrapperettes for Fall—Linens.

Retail trade in staples and wash fabrics, taking into consideration the backward Spring, has been fair. Prints, in light grounds and small figure effects have sold steadily. In muslins the demand has been for silk organdies with neat floral designs in sheer qualities. Stripes, checks and polka dots are favorites at present in white muslins. The trade in ginghams, so far, is mostly in blue and white, black and white, and brown and white. Quite a feeling has been experienced for chambrays, in plain weaves of plain blue and pink. These goods continue difficult to procure. White lawns, especially Persian, are enjoying a steady sale. The present season has been exceptionally good in creponettes, both in plain and fancy. These articles are very suitable for kimonas, sacques, etc. Silk and cotton mulls in sheer qualities in dotted and embroidered effects, are to the fore also for Summer deesses and evening garments. Dotted Swiss, just now, is a little slow, owing to the mull muslins having taken their place. White and colored ducks are prominent for children's dresses. Colors in popular favor are navy, cadet, and sky in plain and fancy effects. Cotton voiles in good qualities are making a good showing for Summer wash dresses. The favorite colors are white grounds with neat rosebud design.

With the manufacturers the demand for goods for present delivery continues brisk. Repeats are coming in much better than was generally anticipated. There are practically no jobs on the market. Domestic mills, although working to full capacity, state that they are distributing their product to the general satisfaction of the trade.



Travelers are now on the road again, pushing cotton lines for Fall delivery. While orders have been booked throughout June to the general satisfaction of the jobber, they have not been so large as those taken during May. The situation on white or bleached cottons and grey cottons continues as acute as ever, and deliveries are unaccountably slow, as these goods, easy to manufacture, are generally first to arrive of Fall shipments. Prices of these goods continue high.

Comparing Canadian conditions with those across the line, Canadian mills are in an enviable position. The general feeling among many merchants, in parts of the United States, regarding the cotton situation, is that existing conditions do not justify the prices now charged. Much resentment is also felt towards the manufacturers, as merchants claim that the high prices are both artificial and unreasonable. They also believe that, although prices are more than double figures ruling a few years ago ; also, notwithstanding the higher cost of raw material, wages, etc., manufacturers are taking altogether too great an advantage of these conditions. Another point to be considered in this regard is that deliveries, in nearly every case, depend largely on the price the buyer is willing to pay.

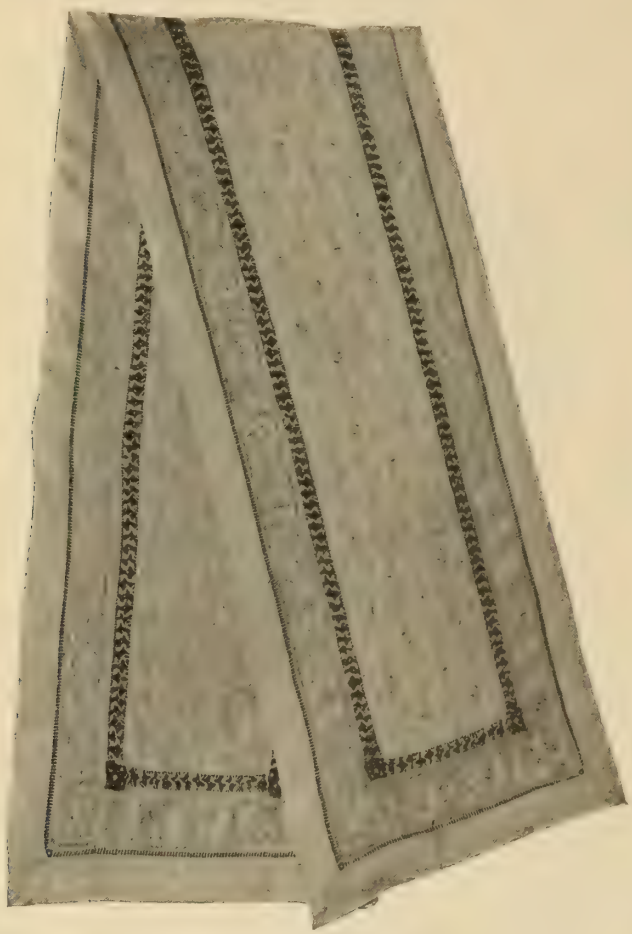
As a consequence, owing to these conditions, many merchants have ceased pushing cotton lines and have gone in for silk and wool fabrics, where a sale is possible in these goods.

There is a decided disposition on the part of large Canadian jobbers to place contracts for Spring, 1908. From this it may be judged that prices are expected to continue firm.



As regards possible advance in printed materials—when of a staple character—it will likely be sufficiently great to warrant buying on the safe side, as the increase in price will likely more than pay interest. In a recent advance, six to seven weeks ago, some lines of cotton goods went up from 5 to 7½ per cent. The rise on most lines, as compared with figures ruling a year ago, averages from 15 to 20 per cent.

Sheetings and tickings, and a few lines of cambrics, show probably the heaviest advances over any other lines in the staple department. The reason stated for this is that these goods were not previously advanced to the extent that the cotton market warranted. Prices have gone up fully 22½ per cent. over those of a year ago.

Fall orders for flannelettes have been good on all lines, and manufacturers have received heavy repeats. Prices continue to advance, and in some cases mills have withdrawn lines from the market. A recent advance on flannelettes took place about the middle of June, in the neighborhood of 5 per cent., though the average return to the mills, on their entire line, is considerably less. This advance was necessitated by the recent heavy bull movement in raw cotton, which, so far as this year's crop is concerned, shows no disposition to recede. The same refers to both American and English goods.

While orders are heavy, on white Saxony flannelettes, they are particularly scarce. Some mills are sold up till November, which means that manufacturers will not accept any orders, except for a very late delivery.

Orders for Fall on all lines of wrapperettes are inclined to be large. Bookings of repeats by the manufacturers are far in excess of expectations.

In patterns goods have followed pretty much the staple lines of last year, but there has been a decided demand for extravagant designs in printed tartans. Large patterns in spots and fancies are to the fore. There has also been quite a feeling among the trade for Empire twills and kimonas.

Manufacturers of staple lines state that deliveries will, in most cases, be on time for Fall. Mills have already made large shipments, but the congested state of freight traffic has delayed deliveries to the jobbers to a great extent. The large jobbers state that deliveries have been exceptionally slow on the better class goods. Prices remain firm. The advance on one line from 8 to 9½ cents, which went into effect the early part of the year, has not affected this trade to any great extent, as the increasing demand, on better class goods, has more than made up any slight deficiency on the 9½c. business.

Canadian mills are now preparing for Spring, 1908. The lines turned out are expected to be more varied than anything yet shown. Printed lines will have many additions in novelties, which were formerly imported. Dot and check effects, as usual, will be staple.

Good Year for Textile Co.

Annual Report Shows Sales of $8,500,000 — Directors Re-elected—Dividend on Common Stock 1¼ Per Cent.

At the annual meeting of shareholders of the Dominion Textile Company, Montreal, held on May 30th, the report of directors gave the results of the operations for the year ended March 31st, 1907. David Yuile occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance of directors and shareholders. After the disposal of routine matters the president referred to the statement of the company which showed sales for the year to have been $8,507,013.81, being an increase of $376,008.86 in value over the previous year.

As a sufficient quantity of raw cotton to cover all wants has been purchased for the mills at an average price they are now in a position to handle all orders they have taken. The company has in operation 8,048 looms, 368,905 spindles, and employs about six thousand hands. The wages paid out were over one and three-quarter million dollars, being a large advance over the previous year. On the first of April a further increase of wages was given the employes. Owing to the large demand for cotton yarns from the knitting companies, which has taxed the capacity of the yarn mills to their fullest extent, it has been deemed advisable by the directors to increase the output of their yarn plant at Montmorency Falls by the addition of another story to the yarn mill. Work on this plant is now in progress. When completed the company will be in a position to look after all wants for some years to come. The bleacheries are also under preparations for improvements. The facilities for turning out bleached goods will be of the first order when they are completed.

The financial statement showed that the net earnings for the year, after writing off the large sum of $205,825.82 for repairs, betterments, etc., to the mills, amount to $898,518.30. Out of this amount has been paid interest on bonds, dividends on preferred stock, rent of Dominion and Merchants' mills, amounting in all to $731,838.60, leaving a surplus of $166,679.90. This sum, together with the dividends received, since closing the books, on the shares of the capital stock of the Dominion and Merchants' Companies held by them, will increase the surplus for the year to $286,927.70, and leave a balance at credit of profit and loss account of $523,842.05, which, in the opinion of the directors, ought to be considered satisfactory.

In view of the showing made for the past two years, and the bright outlook for the present year, the directors have declared a dividend of one and one-quarter per cent. on the common stock of the company, payable on July 2nd.

The board of directors, which comprises fourteen members, was re-elected, as follows: David Yuile, Hon.

Linens

Art Linen Department is One of Growing Importance—Fall Business Always Large.

The continued fine weather has benefited the whole of the linen department, and has quickened the demand, not only for dress linens, but also for household goods. Even before the weather became bright and warm a few linen gowns were seen on the streets, but the first warm days brought them out in great number. Though linen has more rivals this year it is as yet the first favorite. More colored linens than for some seasons past are selling, but the majority of the dresses seen are of a fairly heavy weight of white linen. In fact, the tailored suit of white linen is assuming a staple place in the trade.

Even in the smaller stores the art section of the linen department is of growing importance. Merchants find it a most profitable one, and one in which there is activity all the year round. Fall business in this line is always large. There is steady selling all through the Autumn months, and, in addition, Thanksgiving and Christmas trade. October brides are also becoming almost as numerous as those of June, and high grade linens always form an acceptable wedding gift.

Manufacturers are looking more closely after the art linen trade, and there is a much wider variety of goods now obtainable. Drawnwork, both Mexican and Japanese, is perhaps most prominent as it can be had in popular priced goods as well as in more expensive lines. The new samples of Irish hand embroidered linens make free use of drawnwork. It is introduced above hems, and is effectively used for flower centres, leaves, scrolls, etc. French knots and eyelet work are also used for this purpose. Tea cloths, tray cloths, doilies, runners, etc., more or less ornately decorated, according to price, are amongst the best selling lines. In more expensive goods come bedspreads, sheets, pillow slips and shams and cushion covers. Heavy Cluny trims many pieces in the new lines. Handsome circular cloths, up to dining table size, and down to small mats, have a very deep border of specially woven, heavy, hand-made Cluny lace. The centre is of fine linen and quite small compared with the size of the border. These Cluny-edged cloths are the latest novelty in art linens.

No small part of our largely increasing trade in linens is due to the big demand in the past year or so for high grade linen towels. Samples for import orders are now coming to hand in this class of towels and while some of the old standard patterns are repeated a number of new and artistic designs have been added.

The Reliance Knitting Co., of Toronto, have recently purchased the plant of the Coupe Mfg. Co., Dunnville, and are moving same to their new factory, corner King and Bathurst Streets, Toronto. This will enable them to procure additional hands, which could not be secured in Dunnville.

Men's Furnisher and Clothier

POINTS FOR THE MEN'S WEAR MANAGER

By E. R. BOWIE, Toronto.

Many firms which carry both dry goods and men's wear have each confined to an exclusive store. That is certainly the best plan, but everyone cannot adopt it. In all cases, however, the men's department should be isolated as much as possible. A man does not like to try on clothing where there are ladies close by, and even if he does do it once, the chances are he will not go back to the store in which such an arrangement exists.

Window displays are important, and some retailers do not seem to realize that they offer the cheapest advertising medium at his disposal. In numerous dry goods stores it is difficult for the manager of the men's department to get window space. However, he should have it, occasionally at any rate. At this season he can put in an effective window trim of two-piece suits, wash neckwear, collars, negligee shirts, belts, duck trousers, outing outfits, traveling bags, etc.

Stock should be thoroughly gone through at least once a week. That is the only way in which lines can be kept sorted up and fresh. Goods that are found to be holding back must be worked out at once.

It is good policy to always treat the traveler with business-like courtesy, and the merchant will find it profitable to look at as many samples as possible. If he makes a practice of wasting the time of salesmen who call on him, there may be times when he will not be given an opportunity to look at the best lines. Some merchants show little consideration for the fact that travelers are on the road at considerable expense, and that their time in each place is limited.

Stock should be selected with care, always keeping in view the class of trade which you serve. If you have a fairly good idea of market conditions it will help you very materially in buying.

It is essential that you employ the right kind of salespeople. They should be of good address, courteous, obliging, attentive, and have a knowledge of the goods which they are selling. They will find a study of the store's customers both interesting and profitable. It flatters Mr. ——— to know that a salesman remembers his likes in regard to a hat, collar, etc. The article offered for sale should be calculated to suit the man buying it. For instance, a short, stout customer would not be shown the same style of hat as he who is tall, thin and sharp-featured. In employing salespeople it is well to give the preference to those who are smart dressers.

The first endeavor of a salesman should be to give a customer what he wants. At the same time it is generally possible to introduce something a little better. satisfied customers are the best and cheapest advertisement that a store can have.

If you give your salesmen some responsibility they will work much better. Goods which they have a voice in buying they always try harder to sell. At any rate they know, even better than you, what will suit your trade.

P. M.'s or spiffs are a good thing, especially in clothing, to facilitate the clearing out of undesirable goods. However, care should be exercised as to what people these goods are sold to. The usual spiff is 25 to 50 cents.

A men's wear department should always be neat and clean. Have a quantity of goods out on display, but not enough to give a "mussey" appearance.

Good fixtures are an excellent investment. A nice hat case, for instance, will pay for itself in a short time. For one thing, you can serve three or four people, where, under the old arrangement, you would serve only one. Hosiery should be kept in stock boxes.

Constantly aim at creating a demand for better goods. Lots of merchants would be surprised at the result of a little effort along this line. No doubt they would like to handle more expensive and more profitable stuff, but they are afraid to buy it. When new goods come out, try to be the first in your town to have them on display. Buy novelties that are not extreme. Endeavor to keep your customers interested in the style changes.

Always remember that a man likes to make his purchases as quickly as possible. See that your salesmen appreciate this fact. They should be familiar with all such things as the differences in sizes between English and American hats.

I am convinced that boots and shoes could be profitably carried in men's wear departments of any size. They are the only articles of male apparel that cannot be purchased there. I know of one men's store that has made well out of a footwear section.

Representatives of the Hawes-Vongol Hat Co., New York and Danbury, Conn., are seeking a location for a Canadian factory. The tariff has forced them to do this. A staff of 100 hands will be employed the first year. No concessions of any kind are being offered.

The Glove Department

Some Interesting Suggestions for the Retailer in Regard to Selling Methods.

How do you do your glove selling? Do you hand your gloves out haphazard to your customers? Do you allow them to try them on themselves? Do you make good all gloves returned that have split, ripped, or what not? These are vital questions, says Men's Wear, and every outfitter should be able to answer them satisfactorily to himself.

Should the percentage of complaints on a certain glove reach a point where you feel a doubt with every sale, you should examine into the cause at once. It may be the fault of the glove, and it may be the fault of yourself or your assistant. If you find on investigation that it is the glove that is poor, your only course will be to change makes. Of course, if the maker voluntarily makes good your losses, you would be justified in giving his make another season's trial. We can easily understand that the glove manufacturer may receive a poor lot of skins, and that one shipment may turn out bad to the very last pair. But when the badness covers several shipments there is certainly something radically wrong – a wrong that can only be righted by a change of manufacturers.

There would be much less fault found with gloves, however, if the outfitter would make it a hard and fast rule that they Should Be Fitted Whenever Possible.

If this is done, and done intelligently, the percentage of returns for replacement would be perceptibly less.

The retailer should stand behind his gloves, even if he cannot induce the maker to back them up. But this is not a difficult thing to obtain, most manufacturers making "good stuff" being only too willing to guarantee them against poor leather and faulty workmanship.

Two-thirds of the glove mishaps come through the carlessness or ignorance of the purchaser in putting them on himself for the first time. If the assistant offers to try them on, the customer will usually accept the offer, and consider it as a little extra attention, and feel flattered at the same time, while you are only taking a precautionary measure to make yourself safe behind your guarantee.

But to fit gloves properly there should be a regular glove department, with a glove counter specially prepared for that purpose. The usual glass counter case is too wide and too high to give the salesman any chance to do justice to his task. The glove counter should be about 34 to 36 inches high and from 18 to 20 inches wide. If a glass counter is used it should not be more than 34 inches high, and a good thick cushion should be used to rest the customer's arm upon. If a wooden counter is used the top should be upholstered.

Dressed by W. C. McClelland for R. McKay & Co., Hamilton.

A Lesson from the Draper's Shop.

One of the very best ways for an assistant to get pointers on the fitting of gloves would be for him to accompany his lady friends to a large drapery shop and study closely how the assistant at the glove counter there turns the trick. If he does this he will find that the girl who knows her business will select a glove that will fit the hand nine times out of ten without a second trial. She knows her stock of gloves. She knows those that have short fingers from those makes that have long. She knows those that have more elasticity than others, and all the little points that are necessary to know to be able to unerringly measure the customer's hand and fit it with the first pair.

All hands are not alike. Some are long and slender, while others are short and chubby. All gloves marked the same size are not alike, or these different types of hands could not be fitted.

Before trying on a glove she will find out just what style and price glove is required. She will also find out the exact shade. She must be sure that the glove put on her customer's hand will suit as well as fit, because too many "tryings" on of a glove render it unfit for trade.

Some Useful Hints.

Having selected the proper glove she will first spread out the fingers with the glove stretcher. This will be done without unduly stretching the leather or straining it at any point. Next she will give the inside a liberal application of French chalk. This must be done thoroughly, so that the glove will slip on the fingers easily without sticking to the warm, moist hand and stretching the leather more at one point than another.

The customer is seated at one side of the counter while she stands on the other. She takes the hand, and, resting it upon the counter at the elbow, raises the hand into an upright position, the back of the hand facing her. She then gently but firmly inserts the fingers into the glove, working the glove on at the fingers, first one and then the other, keeping all as nearly together as possible.

When the fingers are nearly, or quite, on, the body of the glove will be brought up sufficiently to allow the tip of the thumb to be inserted into the thumb of the glove. In working on the thumb she will take care that the outer part, or seam side, of the glove is worked downward simultaneously with the thumb or opposite side.

The Glove and the Hand.

This working on of a glove evenly is absolutely necessary if there is to be no undue strain diagonally across the glove. It is often these diagonal strains that cause surface breaks. In working on the glove care must be taken always that the leather is not stretched unevenly, away from a seam. Then, too, no glove should be fastened at the wrist until it is thoroughly worked on to the hand.

This method of procedure adopted by an outfitter means more gloves sold to satisfied patrons. His shop will, in the course of time become known as "the place where you can get good gloves."

Any outfitter can follow the ideas presented here, adapting them to his own circumstances. If he does he will experience far less trouble, and make more money than by following the haphazard method of selling gloves. It should also be remembered that the assistant must give strict attention to the minutest details, for the success of the glove department depends primarily upon his carefulness and a thorough knowledge of his stock.

Ready-to-Wear Clothing

Showed Big Increase During the Past Year—Good Orders for Fall.

During the past year—as shown by statistics quoted in another section of this issue—the value of ready-to-wear clothing manufactured in Canada increased enormously. This was to be expected when conditions are considered, including the great improvement in the product. A heavy increase may be expected each year while this improvement continues.

The clothing department is one that it will pay every merchant to give a great deal of attention to. It has a great future if properly handled, and there must be a constant striving to get the best class of goods on the market. That is the only way in which the patronage of good dressers can be attracted.

Orders for Fall have been heavy notwithstanding the fact that Spring and Summer business at retail, especially on two-piece suits, has not been up to the mark. There is practically no change in styles. Blues and blacks have been purchased strongly, but there has also been a good demand for brown mixtures.

Hats

Demand for Straw Hats Came With a Rush When the Weather Changed.

Straw hat trade was dead up to the middle of June. Then the hot weather set in suddenly, and there was a big rush for light headwear. The stores were actually besieged for a couple of days, and many kept open until ten o'clock each evening to take full advantage of the change. One merchant told The Review that he had ceased promising to deliver old hats, left to be sent home, within a week. Stocks of straws are light and there is no likelihood of any being carried over.

This time last year The Review criticized the tendency to cut prices early, and wishes to again draw attention to it. There is no sense or reason in offering goods at reduction prices just when the season is at its height and everything should bring full rates. This year we would strongly advise that the cutting be deferred at least until August 1.

The black stiff hat will lead for Fall. The flat brim with full crown and wide band promises to again be a popular line. There will likely be some call for browns to match the new suitings.

Neckwear

Big Season for White Wash Goods—The Indications for Fall.

Of course, wash neckwear occupies the position of prominence now, and the sales, since the middle of June, have been very satisfactory. There is an excellent variety in these goods, but the chief demand has been for white, with neat self pattern. This is in line with the wide patronage of white shirts. The combination gives the wearer a nice, cool appearance.

It will not be long before Fall lines are shown. So far there is no indication of anything very new, unless it be the prediction of a spirited call for light shades of brown, and tans, and a few of the "louder" colors that, according to precedent, should have been here last Spring at the latest. A fair percentage of consumers will welcome shades with more life in them, but the leading shades for Spring will again be favorites.

Wash foulards have had a good sale, particularly those with coin spot.

Bows are in fair demand. One of the new lines is in shetland plaid with border ends in black and blue.

While small widths have for some time been the vogue in New York, the Canadian consumer has no idea of making a change from the wide cravats, which seem to meet his idea of what is neat. So long as this continues the really loud colors will be discouraged. Few manufacturers would be bold enough to put them out, and few people would have the courage to wear them, in less than one and a half to two inch widths.

The lowering of quality necessitated by raw material conditions has been most apparent in baratheas and has hurt the sale of these lines somewhat.

The Review knows of merchants who are selling neckwear as high as $1.50, and not to what is commonly called exclusive trade or for any special occasions either. They simply talked quality, and the sales were not difficult. As a matter of fact one good cravat at $1.50 will just about outwear three at 50 cents, and it looks better all the time. Generally this more expensive neckwear is in black, four-in-hand fold, with self pattern.

Shirts and Collars

Popular-priced Shirts in Coat Styles—Fall Orders Good —Other Notes.

Orders for Fall have been large, and it is very evident that the majority of retailers were resolved to buy early, so as to get the best possible delivery. Summer trade was, of course, very slow till the real hot weather set in.

Just now the white negligee, with self pattern, is the prime favorite. A very attractive line has a satin stripe.

Shirts to retail at $1.50 are now being made up coat style, which is steadily becoming more popular. Anyone wearing one of these garments will find it so convenient and comfortable that he will not think of going back to the old pull-over-the-head style

The attached cuff has hardly made the progress predicted for it. The Review can very well understand why this should be so. For business wear the attached cuff is a nuisance, because it gets in the way when the wearer is writing. Then it only requires a couple of hours—if the color be anything light—under ordinary conditions to qualify it for the laundry, and a very few trips there renders it too shabby to be of further use. No, there is not the slightest chance of the separate-cuff shirt being crowded off the market. Many shirts with separate cuffs are also being made coat style.

There is little new in the Fall lines. Two-toned colorings in combinations of red and green, tan and green, and helio and tan are being shown on backgrounds of white, light blue, gray and very light champagne, in both plaid and stripe effects. Helios, rose, green and tan are also prominent in the usual monotone patterns on backgrounds of white, light blue and gray and browns, the backgrounds and designs varying according as the colors contrast.

Colors are conspicuous, both in the blended colors and in cloth where the whole effect is pearl with self stripes in darker shades of gray running horizontally, contrasted with perpendicular lines and stripes of the same bright colors mentioned in the foregoing fabrics. Browns and tans look good, and are being regarded by some as strong numbers for spring, 1908. They come in self plaids and stripes on a tan ground and also run the gauntlet of the popular colorings in contrasted designs. Jacquard figures are liberally sprinkled through all lines and are seen in self-colored effects.

The Review again counsels that every retailer give the stiff bosom shirt a place in his Fall stock. The negligee and pleated bosoms will again be the leaders, but there is sure to be some feeling for the other.

Complaint re Glove Supply

Local Retailer Criticizes Wholesale Houses, Who are Doing Their Level Best—Big Stores Have Trouble as Well as Smaller Ones.

Editor Dry Goods Review,—I am in receipt of your circular, re scarcity of merchandise, and asking what lines we would like to see advertised. In reply, would say that several lines are very scarce, possibly the most important being gloves. I will not mention other lines, as, without doubt, other merchants will specify them. Our customers frequently ask us why it is that we cannot get gloves when the city merchants have them. They may be out of them at times, but in most cases are able to supply their trade, while we cannot get sight of any. There is no difference if we have placed orders months ahead through the wholesale houses. Is it because the city stores have more influence with the manufacturers than the wholesale people? How can country stores compete with city stores, and hope to hold local trade, if the wholesale houses, whom they depend on, cannot protect them with scarce goods in demand?

Possibly some of the wholesale houses can explain how it is that city stores have the more influence.

J. N. C.

The writer of the above has lots of company in his trouble, not just in Canada alone but in Europe and the United States, for the condition he complains of is world-wide. Notwithstanding the fact that buyers across the line have been so keen after scarce goods, and will pay almost any price to obtain them, the long glove shortage is so acute in New York, Boston and numerous other cities that firms there have repeatedly canvassed the Canadian wholesale houses in search of supplies.

The scarcity is due to the unprecedented increase in demand, which cannot be supplied. The basis of silk and lisle gloves is a knitted fabric, from which the gloves are cut. Makers of this fabric are unable to produce it fast enough, and that has caused the trouble. Then it must be remembered that about three times as much material is required for a pair of long gloves as for a pair of short ones. The manufacturers are away behind in their orders, and numerous cases could be cited of orders placed a year ago not yet being filled. When complaints are made the answer is: "We are doing our best and will ship as early as possible." In one instance where this occurred the Chemnitz manufacturer had been in receipt of large orders from the firm for the past ten years.

The Canadian wholesaler is protecting the interests of his customers as carefully as it is possible for him to do. Glove stocks are in charge of the department manager himself, and no orders are filled without his permission. As shipments arrive they are divided up among the waiting customers.

The city department stores are having their full share of glove troubles, and are finding the greatest difficulty keeping up their supply. They are even applying to the wholesale houses, and The Review was shown a very large order for fabric gloves that had been turned down by a wholesaler.

The only advantage the department store enjoys over the majority of wholesale houses is through having resident buying agents, who are on the spot, and able to pick up any lots the manufacturers may have through cancellations, etc. They are also able to offer premiums for scarce goods, and in this way they pay prices that the wholesale buyer could not meet, as his customers would not, generally speaking, stand for the necessary advance.—Editor.

The Canadian Millinery Review

As far as the wholesale trade is concerned, the season's business has been done, and all interest is now centred upon the preparations going forward for the Fall. The retail end is devoting all its energies to the clearing out of the remnants of Summer stocks, which—though the season has by no means been an unprofitable one—are, owing to the cold months of April and May, rather larger than the trade had hoped they would be at this time of the year.

As yet there has been little made-up millinery shown for Fall and that only of minor note. Foreign buyers are keenly watching the trend of the late Summer modes for it is here that the key to the future lies.

At fashionable events in Paris large picture hats are, as a rule, worn, and these are decidedly picturesque and also not a little eccentric. They are often of the cloche order, the brim lined with colored taffeta, and with large tan crowns. Hats made of taffeta, to match the gown, are also a feature that promises to be repeated in the Fall. The entire crown covered with either feathers or flowers is another leading style. Fruit is also pressed into service, particularly cherries. These are tied into careless, drooping bunches, and it is not at all necessary that nature's coloring should be followed. Black ribbon velvet is much used on all hats.

Convolvuli, or bindweed, as the Parisians call them, are the latest thing in floral garniture. Feathers are just as much worn as flowers, and all the eccentric novelties that were introduced in the past Spring are to the fore now. Long willow plumes, uncurled ostrich, osprey, gouras, paradise, etc., are all used in profusion, and are placed at all possible and impossible angles. Some look ready to tumble off the brim, some cover the high crowns and some are bunched at the back. Long quills springing from large wings are seen shooting off at side angles.

Judging from the new shapes, another attempt is being made to launch high crowns, and not always in conjunction with wide brims, either. The Review saw recently a late arrival from Paris, with a perfectly round squarely cut high crown. The brim was narrow and slightly drooping at the back and sides, and turned up off the face in front. The only trimming was an immense bunch of small flowers placed right in front. Small turbans and walking hats are showing and sailor shapes prettily trimmed with ribbon and wings are expected to be good.

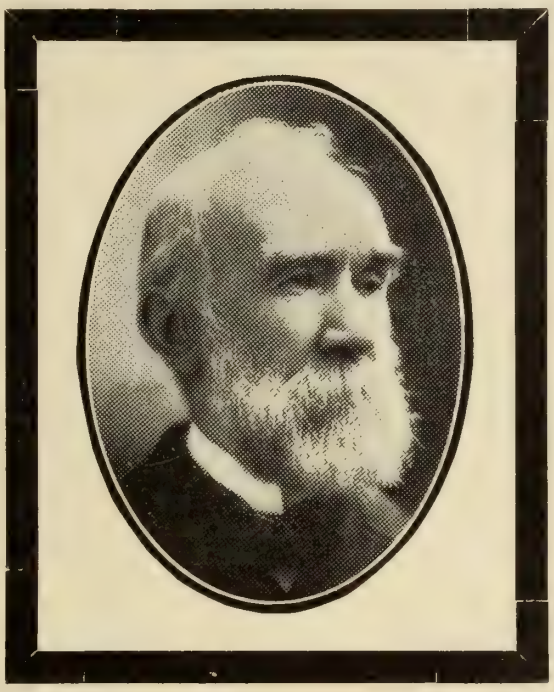
The vogue of velvets, etc., is expected to be interfered with because of advances in price, and because they come at so high a figure felts are expected to be more worn. Quantities of ribbon will be used on the new hats. Taffeta silk is coming into use for hat trimmings, and immense bows the full width of the silk, and hemmed and wired, are used. Two, or even three yards of silk are required in making one of these bows. Two colors that are coming into prominence in millinery are sapphire and peacock blue.

Dugald McCall Dead



Founder of the D. McCall Co. Passes Away — One of the Pioneers of the Millinery Business in Canada.

There was a general feeling of regret at the passing away of Dugald McCall, president of the D. McCall Co., Toronto. Mr. McCall was a familiar figure in the trade, as he may be said to be one of the pioneers of the millinery business in Canada. He came to the Dominion as traveler for Thomas May & Co., Montreal, and his first connection with Toronto was as manager for their branch house in that city. He next became a member of the firm of McKinnon, Proctor & McCall, from which he retired in 1880 to found the business that now bears his name. During his long career he has witnessed many changes in the personnel of the trade in Toronto, as there are few houses in that centre which have so long a business history as that of D. McCall & Co.

Mr. McCall had suffered for some time from acute indigestion, but even up to three or four days preceding his death no serious results were feared. He died on Dominion Day at his house on Spadina Road. He is survived by a widow, four daughters, and two sons, the elder of the latter, Douglass, being the general manager of the business.

Paris Fashions

By A. E. DACAM, for "Dry Goods Review."

Most Interesting Period of the Year for Paris Dressmakers and Milliners—Features of the Mode Described.

These two weeks preceding the Grand Prix de Longchamps are, without doubt, the most interesting of the year to the Paris dressmaker and milliner. Many firms, for an advertisement, will spend large sums dressing a smart "mannequin" in the hope that her costume or hat, as the case may be, will be remarked and so bring them trade. Many white costumes are being made for the occasion, not only in cloth but in silk and mousselines. White taffeta is being used as foundation for transparent "etoffes" in pale shades, of which mauve and wistaria, pervenche blue and a coral pink are the most popular. A shot effect is often given to these mousselines by having them double, one shade over another. The materials are so soft and so gracefully manipulated that there is not the slightest suggestion of clumsiness about them. Another "dernier cri" is the redingote, or rather evolutions of it carried out in this fragile fabric. Those made of lace last year had a considerable success, but these long mousseline garments, in many cases more than three-quarter length are infinitely smarter. Mi-centre and open over a vest or waistcoat, they are worn in black over a black skirt, over pale shades or white (the latter is by far the more "distingue") or again in white over white or black. The trimming on them must of necessity be very light, but at the same time elaborate, consisting, for the most part, of lace entredeux, applications and tucks of all widths. Ruching, for the moment, seems entirely neglected. The weather is, no doubt, responsible for the great number of white and other cloth costumes which are so much worn at all smart reunions and race meetings, instead of the silks and froufrou which are generally considered "de rigeur" at this season. These costumes are made with pleated skirts, neatly stitched and towards the hem being checked by means of straps and braidings. The half-length jackets reaching to about the knee, are rarely cut straight round, but brought down to points, either front or back, or at each side. The sleeves, which are cut without an armhole seam, are elbow-length, sometimes Japanese, with two or more "etages," or made of wide, vertical tucks which are carried from the neck. This latter gives a good effect, and the tucks can be brought down to the bust line, back and front, under a trimming, then joined underneath the arm to form a sleeve, which is finished with a wide band, ornamented with the same trimming. Another style, which changes the form entirely, is made in two parts, the skirt being a corselet form brought up to a point at front and back, and the upper part formed of pleats or deep tucks taken from the skirt and over the shoulder, leaving a V-shaped opening at back and front. These pleats, of which there are six in number, are continued till they reach the elbow, the lower being joined together underneath the arm and forming a wide sleeve. The open yoke and edge of sleeve are edged with a band of heavy embroidery and the skirt is ornamented at the point, both back and front, with two large coraline buttons, the fastening being invisible. A simpler style is a tight-fitting, half-length jacket in "verte mousse" cloth, with roll collar of black velvet and black velvet tabs replacing the buttons down the front. The elbow-length sleeve, which is cut in one piece with the jacket, is very wide, the only trimming being a narrow rever of velvet at the edge, having the effect of a velvet lining with a piece turned back. The sleeve is taken into shape by means of narrow tucks, two of which are across the top of the shoulders and half a dozen others underneath the arm. A small vest of cloth is embroidered with sky blue and black silks, above which shows a collar and yoke of white lace. Many cloaks are made with capuchons or pointed capes at the back, the point being finished with a gland or tassel. These glands are play ing an important part in trimmings.

Jacket of Blue Tussor, Bands in Blue Tulle, Ornamented Ochre Guipure Encrustations.

Corsage-Blouse in Soie Rajah, Beige Color, Ornamented Embroidered Tulle Bands.

Pale suede and champagne colors seem, after white, to be used more than any shades, and with good reason, for, in the case of a cloak, they are dressy enough to be worn over silks and gauze, and not too dressy to be worn over the toile skirts which are much in use, and when handsomely trimmed with entredeux and encrustations of filet and Irish lace are very smart looking. Some of these models are showing in thick tussor, but so far they have not caught the public fancy. Silk waistcoats are very much seen, in silks that recall the Empire mode —white grounds with Louis XV. paniers and bouquets of all descriptions, but, to wear with the toile and coarse tussor costumes, the dernier cri is the filet of cretonne fansaisie. These are worn equally with the long jacket and the short sac paletot. The cretonnes used for furniture, and toiles ve jouz are employed, a narrow border of taffetas or braid recalling the leading tone in the flowers, or white is used as edging, and small Saxe buttons, which can be had in all shades, go remarkably well with them. Another distinctive note of the season is the plastron, which, from being a combination of the bretelles and shoulder cape, has now grown into something much more important, covering both front and back, with the exception of a round or V-shaped yoke, as the case may be, and the necessary opening under the arms. This plastron is generally carried out in the same material as the skirt, or in a coarse toile, and worn over a mousseline-de-coton or lace blouse.

The black taffetas ribbon, so much worn on hats earlier in the season, is now giving way to white taffetas on straw, arranged in the same style—generally a huge bunch in front, with sometimes a flower or two introduced into the centre. The lace and embroidery hats are most beautiful. They are made of narrow little ruchings of valenciennes, completely covering both crown and brim; wide valenciennes with an edging of the narrow or of guipure with the same border. This guipure looks well made with a high crown. These hats also are trimmed in front with a large bow of white taffetas, both with and without flowers, or they are ornamented with enormous bunches of large flowers and foliage, such as full blown roses, peonies, and such like blooms, while the sprays of wild flowers and grasses, as many as 9 and 12 varieties in a spray, which only a Frenchwoman seems to arrange with good taste, are very chic standing up in front. One of the latest hats out is a "cloche" form made of mousseline-de-soie or gauze, and trimmed with a wreath of marabout tips—anything more fragile could hardly be imagined. A smart hat now being worn at the Athenee Theatre is a cloche shape with rather high crown of dark green straw, the brim being lined with pale pink taffetas. In front and at the left side the brim is turned back, showing the lining. In front, between the crown and upturned brim, is a large fantaisie of feathers with osprey carried out in grey and pink tones and falling back over the crown. Another hat, to be worn for walking, is of black straw, the brim wider at the back than in front, where it it slightly turned back. Dozens of different colored quills, for the most part keeping to yellows and blues, are brought from the centre of the low crown and curve onto the brim, a few only reaching to the outer edge, but the great number employed and the width of the brim make the hat gigantic. A more dressy model is carried out in white crin, the wide brim slightly drooping at each side. Fastened in the front is a large bunch of light fantaisie feathers imitating osprey, which fall to each side and over the back. In the front, to hide the stems, is a bunch of black taffetas ribbon. This same hat has been carried out with roses in place of the ribbon. The large white and black wings, fastened in front of the hat and spreading out to each side, are as fashionable as ever. So also are the large, high-crowned hats, trimmed simply with a bunch or spray of flowers and leaves in front.

Belts and Neckwear

It was confidently anticipated that this season would see a run on quite plain leather and kid belts, perfectly straight and fastened through a neat buckle in front. It is true that many of them are being shown in the shops, and they are being used with tailor-made costumes for morning wear, but they do not seem to have made the slightest difference to the enormous trade that is being done in the fancy article. Perhaps the freest seller of the moment is made in "toile brode." The toile range is very wide, including the narrow, straight belt, the Empire form, which is wide in front and narrows off behind, where it fastens in a buckle, or they are made straight but twice the usual width. The white belts are embroidered in white, with sometimes a touch of color introduced into the centre of flowers, or as shots, etc. The colored ones are worked with the same shade or in white. Many models are sold with the design simply traced ready for the customer to embroider. I have seen some of the white belts covered with spotted muslin under the embroidery. Another good seller is the soft kid with two centimetre wide bands of pleated taffeta let in from one end to the other. The taffeta is in some cases replaced by gauze in gold and silver shades, generally two bands of it running the length of the belt, as in Sketch 1, which is in white kid with two gold gauze bands and kid buckle.

The sketches 4 and 5 are both carried out in white toile; the former fastening in front is shaped to fall low in the centre (a style which we shall have with us as long as the "plus que droit" corset remains popular). This model has a conventional design of flowers embroidered in pale blue, and the buckle is covered with toile. No. 5 is a particularly smart model, made with two sets of minute tucks, 3 in each, and finished with an edging of white cotton spots slightly raised. No. 2 is an Empire belt in chevreau embroidered with a garland design of leaves in gold with chevreau buckle. This belt is brought low in front and fastens behind. The last sketch takes us to yet another line, silk lined with kid. In this instance it is a soft silk of white ground, with large pompadour design of pink flowers and green leaves. The enamelled ornaments recall the same shades. The silk elastic models, worn so much last season, are still much seen in all widths with front buckle only.

As regards neckwear, the assortment is so large and so varied that it is most difficult to make a selection. The long ruching worn from neck to waist has become very popular, but, so far, the price has prevented it from falling into the common. It is sold with or without a collar, in the latter case being worn with a starched linen one.

THE NEW YORK MODE

The First Glimpse of Winter Millinery—Some Impressions and Forecasts.

Summer is hardly upon the land when the attention of nine-tenths of its inhabitants is focused upon Winter. Once more the Winter hat is with us fresh from its wooden box and needing no explanation as to its origin, for surely no other centre on earth but Paris would have the daring to launch such things upon the public at large. You remember the great cry that went up when the picturesque mushroom first made its appearance. It was doomed by the wiseacres and voted too extreme—but not a bit of it. The Summer hats have been getting larger and larger, and more bewilderingly fashioned, and the Winter models which have found their way to United States soil follow in their wake.

Of course, it is very much too early for positive statements, for there are many months ahead in which fickle Fashion can change. At the present writing I would say that there are fewer changes in shape than is usually the case at the beginning of a season. Hats, large and small, continue to droop most decidedly at the back and sides, and not infrequently in the front as well, but I want to draw your attention to the fascinating rolled-back effect shown in the photographs. This is the very newest feature, and, as can be seen by the straw model shown, with its wide bow, this fashion is already in high favor in New York.

It is, perhaps, not unnatural that this roll, which brings the under part of the brim into prominence, should result in facings being once more in vogue. Wide ribbon, silk and velvet, is used for this purpose. Taffeta, bengaline and moire vie with one another for first place. Moire ribbon is at present the favorite, and the Summer girl does not consider her wardrobe complete unless there is at least one hat with a "splashy" bow of wide ribbon across the front or back, as her fancy may dictate. I cannot impress upon you too strongly the importance of the sailor shape, albeit they are worn in a most unsailorlike manner. Ribbon made into enormous bows is invariably the trimming chosen, but whether the bow crosses the front and leaves the back plainly banded, or whether the front is left severely alone and the bow is worn at the back of the crown, is purely a matter of individual fancy. In connection with this style of trimming, mention must, of course, be made of the large-headed pins which are always prominently placed.

No. 2.

There has been, for several seasons, much talk of the supremacy of ribbon, but until this present season it has been practically all talk. While now from three and a half to six yards of wide ribbon is considered necessary for a smart bow, we are told and shown by the hats already here that such quantities for Fall will be entirely inadequate. So let the ribbon trade rejoice, for not only are ribbons now in greater demand than they have been for years, but we are just on the threshold of another season, in which ribbon will be used more lavishly than ever before. And such ribbons! Exquisite sash width effects in moire and silk, as well as the beautiful lustrous and pliable satin weaves. Illustration No. 1 shows a hat of golden brown bengaline silk with velvet. A huge high-standing cluster of seven variegated tips and osprey trim the sides. The high crown is banded with wide faille ribbon, which is made into the most intricate of bow-rosettes at the back, this being large enough to cover the entire back of the hat. As nearly as can be ascertained, there were nine yards of ribbon five inches wide used on the back of that hat. It is worthy of note that most of the ribbon is used at the back, and nearly all on the upper part of the hat, since bandeaux are either conspicuous by their absence, or else are so very small that they require little or no trimming other than the inevitable maline. With but very few exceptions all of the hats set back on the crown of the hair, displaying quantities of front hair arranged in puffs and curls and completely concealing the back hair by the elongated backs which are rather more extreme than ever. Nor are these shapes at all trying if the hair is dressed in the prevailing mode. They are, however, simply fatal to the woman who wears her hair severely parted or drawn in closely around the temples. Hat and hair must form a softening frame for the face, and if this is accomplished the result is very rejuvenating. Artistic in the extreme is the prevailing mode. The well-dressed woman of to-day and of next season, judging from the present trend, will be more picturesque than smart, and altogether delightfully feminine.

No. 3.

It has been my privilege to see some of the newest feather effects. They are high, and are variously described as tree, branch and shrub effects. While, of course, ostrich is par excellence, there are many clever and more or less beautiful designs in coque, hackle, blondine and kindred plumage.

The hat shown in illustration No. 2 was a Copenhagen blue silk and corded velvet, trimmed with a straggling bluish-green bird, whose tail feathers covered practically the entire hat, which was a medium-sized affair with the rolled front brim, and the longer drooping back brim.

In the third illustration the same bushy feathers are used. This hat is not unlike the popular Belle of Mayfair model which is at present pre-eminent, excepting that the crown is larger at the base, and a trifle higher. In this instance it is made of ivory moire silk, the underbrim being faced with black paon velvet. Ostrich tips are combined with the fancy feathers, these falling low over the brim. The silk is laid in wide folds and very large jet pins are introduced. This hat is known as the "Natural Bell," as you can see it very closely follows the outline of an ordinary dinner bell. There seems to exist no doubt in the minds of the millinery merchant as to the success of this shape. It has already appeared in leghorn and has been found extremely picturesque and becoming.

As to color, at present crocus is being exploited. This name seems hardly appropriate for the rich amethyst color it designates. There is really nothing distinctive about the shade, so, of course, it must needs be rechristened. Browns, especially in the leather shades, have not diminished in popularity, and the smoke greys are still very strong.

In setting forth these impressions I would like to impress upon you the fact that these impressions are taken only from the advance styles. It is far too early to be positive about color, material or even shape, although of the latter there is least doubt of all. If it is true, as it has been proven again and again, that it takes two seasons to establish a mode, then it seems quite safe to predict the reign of the "Bell" hat, which must in no way be confounded with the bell crown, and of the continuation in favor of the Empire and extreme mushroom shape known as the Belle of Mayfair.

No. 4.

I will return to more seasonable topics. The leghorn hat, rose and ribbon-trimmed, and the linen or white serge or flannel suit are now at their zenith. Circular skirts have given way before the more youthful plaited models which are hardly more than instep length. Box and cutaway coats are worn, or lovely little cape effects which barely cover the shoulders, or else fall half way to the knees.

Jumper dresses and lingerie dresses, displaying the Empire or princess trend, with frequently a fichu trimming, ring the changes in gowns. Stripes and polka dots are the rage, and have quite ousted plaids from the top notch of public favor. Colored shirt waists are making a gallant fight for popularity, and are affected by many, although white waists are still supreme.

The British Markets

Cold winds and uncongenial skies have been freezing the sources of business in England as well as in Canada, and the very worst Whitsuntide weather on record for many years has left its mark upon the trade. Notwithstanding this, Autumn orders are beginning to come in, as buyers realize the importance of making early arrangements for goods, in the present state of the market. Another factor that is having a disquieting effect is the depression in the investment world. Consols have been shrinking since the beginning of the year, and are now at the lowest price in half a century, and the investing public are now reducing their expenses in the hope of making up for at least a part of their lost capital, and this fact is hitting the drapery trade hard.

There is to be a change made in the name of the old-established firm of Cooper, Corah & Sons, St. Margaret Works, Leicester, and they will in future be known as N. Corah & Sons, which is going back to the original style of the firm when founded in 1802. The present partners are John and Alfred Corah, grandsons of the founder of the firm, Nathaniel Corah, and the St. Margaret works have been under their sole control since Mr. Cooper retired in 1899.

Bradford.

There can be no doubt that the strong hardening tendency exhibited in cross-bred values at the last series of sales in Coleman street has gone into effect in Bradford. Users of combed wools and worsted yarns have come into the market and have covered their requirements for at least a month or two. The result is that wool combers are not wanting business, and will accept new orders only at extreme rates.

The way wool values are being maintained indicates the enormous business that is passing, for the quantity of wool absorbed in the past season is a tremendous one. In Australasia alone 1,447,000 bales have been sold, and adding to this amount the 420,000 bales sold at the London sales, the total is 1,865,000 bales purchased by the trade from that continent alone.

This is exclusive of the clips from South Africa and other sources, and all this wool has apparently gone into consumption. This enormous amount has been profitably handled in spite of the fact that a 6 per cent. bank rate has ruled for the greater part of the time. So far as can be seen there are no stocks accumulating, and it appears just now as though, if the present rate of consumption keeps up, wool will be just as scarce in the manufacturing centres six months hence as it has been during the latter part of the present year.

Manchester.

The usual between-seasons uncertainty as to the future of the cotton crop prevails at the present time, and the conflicting United States crop reports are to hand also. The crop is late beyond a doubt, and the present tendency is toward advancing prices. The stock of yarn, it is said, was never smaller than at the present time, but the stock of cotton in hand is certainly larger than it was a year ago.

Sorting orders for the home trade, owing to the weather, come slowly to hand, but orders for heavy goods for Fall are being given out at an unusually early date. The high price of goods is restricting buying for the eastern markets, and, though enquiries are fairly numerous, not much business has been done. Yarn values are well maintained, and spinners find the present rates very profitable. There is a scarcity felt in some counts, and stiff rates are exacted for present delivery.

A subscription of £1,000 has been received from Mrs. Rylands towards the building fund of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Nottingham.

The report of the Board of Trade shows that not only the lace trade is prospering but employment is much better in the hosiery industry. Lace workers' wages have increased 6.2 per cent. during the past year, and the wages in the hosiery trade 9.2 per cent. Though there is a falling off in the demand for narrow valenciennes edgings, it is more than made up for by the increased enquiry for wider widths and special makes. Cotton and plain silk nets hold a strong position, and prices are very high. Tulle is in good request in all the leading shades and in black and white. From Calais comes report of great activity in the tulle and lace trades, and after a splendid year, so far looms are still working upon orders received several months back. Matters are not so bright in Plauen, and trade is by no means brisk in that centre.

Belfast.

The only change in the linen situation is the higher prices ruling for flax. According to the Flax Spinners' Association, there were, at the beginning of the year, 34,723 power looms in Ireland, and there is abundant work for them for some time to come. The fact that the number of looms is not large furnishes the reason why, in view of present demand, lower prices cannot be expected Carpet and Rug News — New Lines of Wall Paper — Mattings a Good Summer Line — Oil-cloths and Linoleums — Other Items.

Carpets for Fall

Another Advance in September is Prophesied—Wholesalers Placing Orders for Spring.

Summer trade in carpets and rugs is now well under way. Carpets are selling as well as they ever do during the Summer months, and in some cases the extra hands employed for the Spring rush are still retained. Merchants at the present season are not specializing in their various carpet lines, but, rather, are going in for certain rugs suitable for use in Summer, and for mattings of all kinds. The demand, at present, for three-quarter piece goods is principally on Wiltons, Brussels and Axminsters, in the better grade goods, and tapestries in the cheaper lines. Green still continues to hold first place as regards popular colors, with brown a close second. In almost every case, it will be noticed, the soft shades of fawn, brown and golden brown have been favorites.

Princess Wilton Rug.

Now that Summer has set in in earnest, after one of the most backward Spring seasons in years, practically all the roadmen of the country carrying carpets and rugs have finished their trips for Fall business and returned home. The reports indicate that a large business has been put through in both domestic and foreign goods.

No particular line, so far as can be learned, stands out as a leader in point of sales, although manufacturers of both body and tapestry Brussels will, perhaps, give the most emphatically favorable reports as to their orders for Fall. It has been stated that the sale of rugs was shutting out the demand for carpets, but this is far from being the case, as Fall orders booked show. Although rugs promise to be popular, good three-quarter stuff, and ingrains as well, have been bought freely.

All grades of Brussels, Wiltons and Axminsters are to the fore. Tapestries have also sold well. Colors predominating for Fall are fawns and greens. Reds are behind schedule, and except in a few cases, blue shows no movement.

Prices still continue firm, with a tendency upward. Wholesalers who sold goods at a certain figure last year are now asking from 7½ to 10 cents per yard advance, and, notwithstanding this increase, retailers are placing large orders.

A representative of British carpet manufacturers, in conversation with The Review, stated that the best indications pointed to another big advance some time during the Fall season. September is the month in which it will likely take place.

Wholesalers are now placing for Spring, 1908. So far as can be learned, values are on a par with the present season.

Big Demand for Rugs

Those Merchants Who Have Covered Their Requirements Early Will be in Profitable Position.

That rugs will enjoy a big sale next season goes without saying. The demand continues large. Under the circumstances it would be unwise for merchants to neglect to secure a stock sufficient to take care of all orders anticipated. Large retailers throughout Canada have placed extensively on rugs for Fall, in the different lines and grades, and they are sure to be in a profitable position.

Axminsters in greens are being stocked largely by some houses. Wholesalers state quite a demand for tapestry squares. Plain centres, with small designs, continue in popular favor. Persian silk and antique Persian and Turkish rugs for the better class of trade have been ordered by large carpet houses. New styles and colors in Indians are among the selections of big stores. Orientals continue scarce and are much in demand. Lighter shades, such as fawns and pinks, and greens and pinks, are undoubtedly the best colors to stock.

TIME TO PUSH MATTINGS.

Mattings should be sold in large numbers from now on. Many large stores have been selling these goods for the past month. Push mattings during the Summer months and give them sufficient advertising space, and good sales are sure to result, not only in mattings themselves, but in better goods. Windows, besides newspapers, can be used for advertising purposes. Both Chinese and Japanese mattings are being pushed. Japanese are sold in blues, greens and natural color at popular prices. China mattings, in practically the same colorings, are offered at an even wider range of prices. These mats are to be had at retail from 15 to 60 cents.

New Wall Papers

The 1908 Samples Contain Many Beautiful New Designs —Some of Them Described.

One of the latest and most important developments in Canadian wall paper manufacturing circles is the varnished tile designs now being turned out. These are the washable goods so extensively used for papering the walls of bathrooms and kitchens. Up to the present time these goods have been imported very largely from the United States, because they were not manufactured in Canada. A duty of 35 per cent. was therefore added to the wholesale price, which naturally resulted in somewhat limited sales. But now the same goods, in all the very latest tile effects, plain and fancy, can be obtained from domestic manufacturers.

Hanging No. 723, base No. B4 — The Watson Foster Co., Montreal. The design embodies a high type of modern art—Nouveau idea, confirmed by strong contrast coloring, a lower done in fabric effect, strapped at seams by plain flat white wood moldings, and is a good sample of decorative art.

Leatherette Effects.

One of the handsomest lines being shown for the Fall trade by one firm is the embossed leatherette. This line is manufactured in a variety of designs in many of the sombre leather-like tints. Its general appearance is that of fine embossed leather.

Inlaid Pearl.

Another design which bears a promise of great popularity is the inlaid pearl. The design itself is a conventionalized flower and leaf, on backgrounds of a large variety of beautiful tints. The feature of note about it is that the design is a striking imitation of inlaid pearl.

The tendency is growing stronger year by year to give household surroundings as strong a touch of outdoor color as is possible. This desire on the part of the public is being catered to by the wall paper factories. One of the latest natural designs is the "forest effect." The design consists of masses of branches and foliage, in dull finish, which gives the impression of a natural woodland scene. It is printed in colors suggestive of the seasons. Closely allied to the forest effect is the "cloud effect" ceiling. This design is a representation of fleecy clouds drifting across the sky. Such an unique and well-carried-out design deserves great popularity.

Scenic Borders.

The popularity of the Dutch scenic borders in recent years has amply justified the continuance of that form of border decoration. Among the new borders for the Fall trade the "Bay of Naples" in conventionalized form is worthy of note. Blue sky, delicate purple mountains, a stretch of blue water groups of white, sunlit buildings, and clumps of tall graceful trees make a very beautiful and harmonious design.

The requirements of space forbid detailed descriptions of all the high-grade specialties which are now being, or shortly will be, introduced to the trade by travelers. Textile effects, trellis work in silver, silver block effects, silk stripe, shot silk ceilings, moire and lily effects—all deserve great popularity. Worthy of special mention is the "duplex two tone" line. This is an overlay paper of great strength and beauty, printed in an elaborate fleur de lis design in plain gold, upon backgrounds of green and blue shades. The design is a model of chaste simplicity.

Burlaps.

Imitation burlaps are a very useful design. They are made in all the shades of the genuine article, and, when a comparison was made from a short distance by The Review, of the real and the imitation, the difference was almost undiscernible.

NEW FACTORY OF STAUNTONS, LIMITED.

The Review was recently shown through the new factory of Stauntons, Limited, by E. G. Staunton, who explained the really marvellous mechanism of some of the very recently invented machinery, its purpose, operation and the resulting advancements in the processes of manufacture. These machines are automatic and constitute very important factors in accurate and economical making of wall papers.

The new factory is of the most modern construction. It is built of reinforced concrete, is well ventilated, sanitary, and permits of manufacturing under most favorable conditions.

We were shown a number of the samples for 1908. The new line comprises all grades in a sufficiently wide variety to enable the firm's customers to select their entire requirements—popular grades and specials. It

It was interesting to watch the close inspection of colors. Undoubtedly it is color value that gives wall paper its decorative quality. There is something about the color treatments so skilfully applied in proper color associations to each design that compels interest and admiration, and it is calculated that this quality will endure to give pleasure and satisfaction when the papers are on the walls.

Description of Stauntons' samples will have to be left to the August number.

NEW CARPET MANAGER.

Herb. B. Tait, who joined the W. R. Brock Co., Montreal, last February, has been promoted to the management of the carpet department, which will soon have permanent quarters on the fifth floor of the large new Montreal warehouse. Mr. Tait was engaged as a special traveler for the carpet department, and his good work and general knowledge of the business led to his present appointment. This firm has increased the business in the house furnishings section, and at the present time preparations are under way to make it a leader in the house. Practically everything in the house furnishing line will be carried.

Mr. Tait comes to his new duties right from an extensive and varied experience extending over six years in the house furnishings department of Greenshields, Ltd.,

H. B. TAIT.

Montreal. He has energy and knowledge of the business which should lead to success.

The W. R. Brock Co., Montreal, have arranged for the increased convenience of home trade by appointing G. Dagenais, formerly of the carpet department, as a general house salesman. Mr. Dagenais will be found on the first floor at the entrance and he will personally look after customers' wants.

A CARPET CATALOGUE.

For the Fall season the Moore Carpet Company, Sherbrooke, has issued a small, neat catalogue, which is a sample book in itself. It is handsomely gotten up, and printed on heavy stock. It is about 8x5 inches, and has a soft, gray cover, with green lettering. A view of the mills appears on the cover. Some twenty pages are given over to complete illistrations and descriptions of Wilton and Brussels carpets and rugs. Togo bath rugs, in colors, are also shown. On the back page are to be found a few reasons why the carpets and rugs manufactured by this firm give such good satisfaction to a dealer. A copy will doubtless be mailed on application.

OILCLOTHS AND LINOLEUMS.

Showings of oilcloths and linoleums, for the coming season, include many excellent designs. Linoleums, especially, are shown in a variety of new and pretty patterns. Makers have kept pretty well along the usual lines, although many unique effects are to be seen.

Floral effects are very much in evidence, in light shades. Linoleums, in contrasting colors, such as green and red, and blue and red, etc., are also in high favor.

The general all-round advance which took place on March 18 on oilcloths and linoleums is estimated at 10 to 25 per cent. At the present time the market continues firm.

Domestic manufacturers find business very good, and, notwithstanding the fact that both domestic and foreign manufacturers are working at full capacity, deliveries for Fall are not expected to be improved upon.

Some wholesalers are now placing orders on oilcloths and linoleums for Spring, 1908. As far as can be learned, values are on a par with other goods, that is, there is not much change in price, with values not up to average.

WATSON-FOSTER CO. MEETING.

The annual meeting of shareholders of the Watson-Foster Company was held on Tuesday, June 4, and the following directors were elected for the coming year :— Hugh Watson, S. S. Boxer, W. B. Foster, J. H. Gallagher and W. A. Sutherland. At a subsequent meeting the following officers were chosen : Hugh Watson, president ; S. S. Boxer, vice-president and manager ; W. A. Sutherland, secretary-treasurer.

In Business 74 Years

Donald Mackay Recently Entered Upon His 94th Year, Yet He Visits Warehouse Every Day.

Donald Mackay, head of Gordon, Mackay & Co., is undoubtedly the oldest man in the dry goods trade in Canada to-day. Last month he entered his 94th year, is in good health, and on his birthday he ran half a hundred yards with a representative of The Review at what seemed like a pace of eight miles an hour.

He visits the warehouse every day, making a tour of all the departments, encouraging the young employes, and shaking hands with old customers. While he makes no attempt to direct the business in any way, his presence in the warehouse and among the customers has a good moral effect. He has been in the dry goods business in Canada continuously for 74 years. He came to Canada from the north of Scotland, landed at Halifax, from there taking a sailing boat to Montreal.

Speaking to a representative of The Review on his birthday, he attributed his long life and good health to walking and spending as much time as possible in the open air. He followed no rules of diet, never smoked, drank but little, and while he took part in all the frivolities in Montreal in the early days, he was never under the influence of liquor. He used to walk from his house to the office six times a day, going home for his luncheon and dinner. He was very fond of dancing, and many times he was out until 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning; sometimes he did not get home until 6 or 7 a.m., and then he merely took a bath, breakfast and was at work without taking any rest. He lived in those days with his brother Joseph, who used to stay up for him to come in, and always before retiring family prayers, or "worship," as it is known among Highland families, were held.

He went in for athletics in those early days, too, and won a severely contested walking match. He talks of going to British Columbia this summer to visit his daughter, Mrs. Senkler, the wife of a doctor there. Lady Clark, the wife of the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, is a niece of Mr. Mackay.

News From Various Points

ST. JOHN, N.B.

There is a healthy tone to business generally, notwithstanding the backward season. Retail sales of certain lines of hot weather goods have been light, but the past couple of weeks have been warmer, with the result that the light summer goods have been in demand. All through the month of June the retailers were conducting special sales to clear up their Spring stocks. Confidence is expressed that these Summer lines will move as the season advances. In millinery circles, the wholesalers report that the Spring trade this year was one of the best they ever experienced. The retail trade was delayed somewhat on account of the backward season, but the outlook from now on is extremely bright. In the men's furnishing line, trade has been very good, though there was a delay in the movement of Summer suits, straw hats and similar goods.

It is generally believed here, although nothing authoritative has been given out, that the Canadian Colored Cotton Mills Co., of Montreal, have purchased the Marysville Cotton Mill from the Gibson Company. Several syndicates, it is said, have been bidding for the property, but that eventually the Upper Canadian firm was successful. The relations of the Gibson Company with the purchasers have been very close for some time past. For several years the Canadian Company have been purchasing the whole output of the Marysville mill. The travelers of that company have sold all their goods and the mill has been run under direction of its head office. The Gibson Company's own travelers were taken off the road some time ago. Lawrence McLaren, of Liverpool, England, one of the directors of the Gibson Co., was in Fredericton recently in regard to the negotiations. The property which passes into the control of the upper Canadian company is said to be valued at $1,250,000. It includes the large building and annex, a good many acres of land and al lthe brick apartment buildings.

Macaulay Bros. & Co. are having their premises repaired after the recent disastrous fire. The insurance adjustors have made their report, and the various companies have paid their claims. The total amount of insurance held by the firm was $69,500, and the amount paid by the insurance companies was $60,933.67. The fire sale which is being held by the firm is the biggest success of its kind ever conducted in St. John. The store has been thronged with buyers from morning till night, and they have had to be allowed in in relays.

A novel display of straw hats was shown by Scovil Bros., Ltd., (Oak Hall) a few days ago. The background of the window was covered with loose straw, on which straw hats were arranged. The floor was also covered with loose straw, with a pile of the same material in the centre, in which was a nest with a number of eggs in it. Two boys were to be seen in the act of robbing the nest. One had his cap full of eggs, while the other was in the act of abstracting one from the nest. The arrangement of the boys was very lifelike. At one side was a stuffed fox crouched in the straw, while strewn in front of it was a quantity of feathers, one of the feathers protruding from its mouth. Just above the animal was a card reading, "Where is the hen?" The hats were arranged on high fixtures at each side of the centre pile, and were also displayed—not too abundantly—on the floor. With the help of a few warm days just at that time the sales in the straw hat department were given a wonderful impetus. Small boys took up the catchy words of the sign, "Where is the hen?" and it became a by-word about the streets. Many were attracted to the window and thus converted into buyers of the hats. Thomas F. Drummie, the Oak Hall window trimmer, came in for much praise for his tasty and attractive design. Several other cards were prominently displayed. They read: "The grilling days of Midsummer are stripped of half their terror by an Oak Hall straw hat." Buy one now." "Get under one of our straws—latest styles." "Correct styles in straw hats."

F. W. Daniel & Co., London House Retail, corner of Charlotte and Union streets, have made quite extensive improvements to their quarters. They have taken a portion of the new building put up by D. R. Jack on Union street, adjoining their premises, which gives them about twenty feet additional space on the ground floor, which will be used in extending their dress goods department. The Union street entrance has been remodeled and they now possss an extra twenty-foot show window. A very successful series of alteration sales were conducted while this work was going on.

The Union Clothing Company's store, 26 and 28 Charlotte street, has recently been fitted with a wardrobe system, and is now one of the most attractive and up-to-date houses in St. John.

The extension of Wilcox Bros.' premises, corner Dock street and Market Square, is nearing completion, and this firm will have one of the finest store fronts in the city.

Anderson & Co., hatters and furriers, have moved from their old quarters to the store at 55 Charlotte street, lately occupied by Puddington & Merritt, grocers. This brings them nearer to the heart of the business district. Their former stand has been taken by a moving picture company.

A very handsome new sandstone building for the Royal Bank of Canada is being erected on King street, alongside of the wholesale millinery establishment of Brock & Paterson.

F. C. Smith and S. C. Young, of Scovil Bros., Ltd., were in New York the week of the 10th on a business trip.

J. F. McDonald, representing E. & S. Currie, of Toronto, has been quite ill with an attack of paralysis, but is all right again. He will make St. John his headquarters in looking after the trade in New Brunswick, P.E.I. and a portion of Nova Scotia.

William M. Sanborn, who conducted a shoe store on Main street, has gone out of the business, and is engaged in insurance. His stand has been taken by C. C. Flewelling, who has moved his men's furnishing stock there. Mr. Flewelling thus secures larger quarters for his business.

The firemen of St. John are planning a tournament for Labor Day, September 2, and September 3. A large number of visitors are expected here on that occasion.

KINGSTON.

Kingston is the City Beautiful in June, unique in its historical connection, but more so as the most delightfully located city in America. It reposes on the banks where Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence meet, and the waters which pass by are always clear, pure and blue. Excursion steamers touch here daily. One hour's sail and one is in the midst of the Thousand Islands, and in fifteen minutes one can reach Simcoe, Garden, Horseshoe, Cedar and Wolfe Islands, all veritable gardens of surpassing beauty, where the citizen summers and picnics, and to which people from the United States flock to fish for the hardiest, gamest black bass in the country.

Dry goods merchants report brisk trade, due partly to so many excursionists coming to the city.

While business was exceedingly slow during May and the early part of June, due to the exceptionally cool weather, yet now that the good old Summer time has come in earnest, and the mercury is hovering round ninety degrees in the shade, the drygoodsmen are happy. They report that their stocks of white goods, and Summer goods generally, are going so well that there will be very little left to clean out, instead of the large quantity that they anticipated.

Edward Crumley, one of the oldest of Kingston's drygoodsmen, left a short time ago for Los Angeles, California, where he has purchased an apartment hotel. Mr. Crumley first entered business as a member of Spence & Crumley. Subsequently he severed his connection with Mr. Spence and entered into partnership with his brother, Henry, locating first at the corner of Princess and Wellington streets, and afterwards purchasing and moving into the premises on Princess street, where Henry Crumley continues the business. He was forced to go to California on account of his health. Previous to his departure he enterained about thirty companions of his youth at his home. During the evening he was the recipient of a gold watch and chain and gold-headed cane. His friends hope that he will regain his health, and also meet with success in his business undertaking.

F. X. Cousineau, who conducted the business of the Montreal Bankrupt Stock Co., has been seriously ill at the Hotel Dieu Hospital, but is now convalescent.

The building formerly occupied by Steacy's will be altered for the Knox Co., 5, 10 and 15 cent store, which will make the fifty-seventh establishment owned by this firm.

Kingston is growing. Recently a bylaw was ratified by the ratepayers, exempting from taxation two smelters, zinc and lead, which it is proposed to establish here. Free sites have also been granted. These companies will employ 250 to 350 hands, and others are likely to follow in their wake. The Canadian Locomotive & Engine Co. are extending their works, and expect to employ 1,000 hands within a couple of years—they now have 500.

Samuel Marshall, for over twenty-five years bookkeeper for R. Waldron, has resigned his position to enter the general store business in Alberta.

The London Millinery Store, managed by Miss Sutherland, has opened on Wellington street.

One thousand cavalry and three thousand infantry have been encamped near Fort Henry.

PETERBOROUGH.

Robt. Fair, of R. Fair & Co., left June 7 on his annual purchasing trip to Europe. He will be away several weeks and will visit the leading markets for dry goods lines. While in Ireland he purposes attending the Dublin Exposition.

A matter that has started a good deal of discussion among the merchants—particularly the dry goods merchants—is the number of people calling upon them for advertisements of one kind or another. Hardly a week goes by that a society, church, sporting club, or some other organization is not round selling space on a programme. It is hard for a merchant to turn down the proposition without knowing that others will support his action. Some fear to offend customers, and, consequently, suffer loss of trade. At the same time they are thoroughly convinced that money spent this way might nearly as well be thrown away so far as increased sales are concerned. It is seldom any returns are received for such ads, and the only consolation each man has is that his competitor has been bled in the same way. This class of proposition is by no means the worst that is presented to the merchant. Outside men, styling themselves advertising agents, strike the city from time to time, and unfold schemes which they claim will bring big results. Some retailers bite regularly and buy space on cards published to give a list of fire alarm boxes, a building permit by-law, or some other information that the public is supposed to be hungry for, in such a form that it may easily be referred to. The fact that it is in constant use makes advertising space valuable, of course. Many schemes of this kind are worked every year and some merchants spend a good deal of money on them. It is felt that the Merchants' Associations and The Dry Goods Review should start a campaign against such schemes.

One of the leading drygoodsmen, in speaking of advertising, said that, in his opinion, there is only one medium worth the retailer's consideration, and that is the local newspaper. He could see no money in hand bills, programmes, bill boards or any of these special schemes referred to above. He had tried many of them and all had failed to bring results. He has for several years been using one of the largest spaces in the local papers, and to-day is doing one of the largest businesses between Toronto and Montreal. He has systematically refused all propositions in regard to special publicity, although sometimes it is hard to do so.

S. Dickson Hall, manager of R. Hall & Son, left on June 11 for Europe. He went via the Empress of Ireland from Quebec. He will go to the principal markets to purchase various lines of dry goods. This is Mr. Hall's twenty-first crossing of the Atlantic. His trip will extend over ten weeks and during that time he will travel some 10,000 miles. Mrs. Hall accompanied him.

The J. C. Turnbull Co. have decided to considerably increase their floor space, and put in a larger stock of house furnishings. The store at the rear has been purchased and the stock of carpets, etc., will be put in it and the partitions torn down. The new store has an entrance on Simcoe Street, while the entrance to the main store is on George Street.

The Colonial Weaving Company have decided to erect a new factory. They have secured an option on several acres of land in the south end, and are now asking the city for a fixed assessment. The building and machinery comprising the new plant will be valued at $30,000, and the company guarantee to employ sixty hands, or about double the number they now have. They manufacture labels, and the stock is all in the hands of local men. A by-law will be submitted to the ratepayers of the city.

ST. CATHARINES.

The warm weather has brightened up the dry goods business wonderfully. Up till a couple of weeks ago people were wearing Spring, and on occasions Winter, wraps. The abrupt change brought a big rush for Summer goods.

The dry goods stores here close Wednesday afternoons during July and August. The grocers, however, take a half-holiday once a week during June, also.

A local merchant remarked the other day how greatly the merchandising methods have changed. Formerly goods were carried over from one season to another, but now stock that proves slow is cleaned out at once for what it will bring. The style consideration is the big thing.

The Board of Trade is doing its best to promote the interests of the city. This organization has secured permanent quarters in the Carnegie library building, and the membership fee has been reduced from $5 to $2. This has brought in many new members. Committees are on the lookout for new industries, and, to promote trade, merchants refund railway fares of outsiders purchasing goods above a certain amount.

Welland has organized a Retail Business Men's Association. One of the promoters is Michael Goodsir, a former St. Catharines man. Nearly all of the town's business men are members.

St. Catharines has a Retail Merchants' Association, but its meetings are few and far between. It was organized primarily to promote cash or short credit terms, and to prevent price-cutting. The former object has been accomplished, but the attainment of the latter is yet in the distance. The grocers are making protest against the payment of the fee for adjustment of their scales.

The dry goods trade on Summer lines, up till the middle of June, was very slow. Spring goods were purchased in preference. Merchants cannot grumble very hard, however, for they have all done pretty well, and no one is cramped for money. Day after day now the stores are thronged with customers, and as all do a cash business it shows that there is plenty of money in the city and district. All manufactories are busy, and as employes receive their wages every two weeks there is no necessity for anyone seeking credit, as they did years ago.

A word or two can be said in regard to the men's wear establishments. The firms here are wide-awake and ahhressive. Ecclestone & Sons conduct two stores, one for furnishings and the other for clothing. Swayze have a steam laundry in addition to their men's wear business. John Marshall is an Englishman, who settled here many years ago. The premises he occupied on St. Paul street were too small, so he removed to a larger store, where he is now located.

The St. Catharines Knitting Goods Company, and George Warren conduct the two knit goods manufactories here.

LONDON.

Workmen have for some weeks been engaged in the demolition of buildings on Dundas and Richmond Streets to make room for what will be one of the largest and handsomest retail dry goods establishments in Canada. For many years Smallman & Ingram's, London, has been among the leading dry goods houses in the Dominion, and as a result of the enterprise and energy of the firm it has spread out from time to time. Beginning with one good-sized store on Dundas Street, the establishment has twice been enlarged by the addition of adjoining stores. People agreed that this was progress, but what was the surprise of citizens when they learned that to the present three stores were to be added five others, two on Dundas Street, and three on Richmond Street! It is in the demolition of these five stores that men are now at work, and in their place will rise up a splendid building. The new store will be a modern, five-story, fireproof building of red brick, with ground floor front of polished granite facings. It will be built with steel beams and girders and cast-iron columns. The floors will be of cement, and there will be two passenger and one freight elevator, with provision for two additional elevators when needed. J. B. Smallman, the head of the firm, hopes to get into the new premises by February next, and then the stock will be moved into it, while the present building is torn down and rebuilt in uniformity with that which is now about to be erected. It is expected that the firm will be occupying the entire new premises by August of next year. The entire store, which, of course, will be L-shaped, will have a total floorspace of over 95,000 square feet. There will be entrances on both streets, and the building will run clear back to Market Square. The stand is undoubtedly the best in the city. The Dundas Street front will be particularly attractive, the finest, perhaps, in Ontario. The interior fittings will be up-to-date in every detail. Smallman & Ingram deal extensively in ladies' and children's goods and general dry goods, and it is doubtful if any city in Canada posesses an establishment, outside of departmental stores, to equal in extent and cost that of this enterprising London firm, when it is completed.

London merchants are deeply interested in the matter of waterworks extension, which has become a burning, or boiling, question here. At present the insurance rate is very high, one wholesale dry goods firm paying $6,000 a year in insurance premiums. The underwriters say the rate will remain where it is until the city gets a high pressure fire fighting water service. Such is included among the four schemes now before the ratepayers. It provides that most of the cost be met by those who would be most directly benefited by such a high pressure service, and the merchants and manufacturers feel that they could do that and save money through reduced fire insurance premiums. A vote on one or other of the schemes will be taken some time during the Fall. Meantime dry goods stocks are suffering from insufficiently sprinkled pavements.

James Granger, of the wholesale dry goods firm of McMahen, Granger & Co., has been unanimously chosen to fill the seat on the Board of Education, vacated through the removal of Dr. W. M. English to Hamilton.

W. Boughner, men's furnishings, who has conducted a business near the northwest corner of Dundas and Richmond Street for some years, is being forced to vacate those premises through their purchase by one of the chartered banks. Mr. Boughner will shortly remove to 392 Richmond Street.

Wholesalers report business good. Difficulty is still being experienced in getting goods, which, of course, delays the filling of orders. Prices are advancing, in consequence. The rapid filling-up of the Northwest is increasing the needs of Canada, which, in turn, is making our demands on the English mills greater. A local wholesaler ascribes to this, and the increased demands from India, the fact that the English mills are so backward in filling orders. In addition to this, railway deliveries, both to wholesalers and retailers, are very backward, and retailers complain frequently, particularly as the demand for Summer goods, which has been backward, has suddenly become very great owing to the advent of real Summer weather.

INGERSOLL.

Few towns the size of Ingersoll can boast of so many first-class dry goods and men's wear stores. The clothing and men's furnishing trade is represented by Smith & Kerr, Geo. Naylor & Co., Waterhouse & Co., and E. J. Malone. Business was slow up till the middle of June on account of the backward weather, but when it did start it made up a good deal of lost time. The dry goods stores are conducted by John E. Boles, Hollinrake & Co., and W. C. Forman, ("The Fair"). The two former carry stocks of house furnishings also.

The competition of catalogue houses is felt somewhat, but as people inspect local stock and compare prices more the home trade grows.

The marked advances in cottons, woolens, linens and silks begin to show more prominently as stocks are depleted, and new goods take their place.

Local merchants expect a larger volume of business than usual during July and August, on account of earlier trade being slack.

On account of the very large dairying interests in this section the farmers are always well supplied with ready cash, so that there is little need of doing a credit business.

It may be a surprise to many to learn that Ingersoll is the fifth largest exporting centre in Canada, a distinction of which the citizens are naturally proud. New industries are being gained year by year, and a steady and healthy growth continues. The general feeling among the people here is that the town is one of the brightest and most progressive in western Ontario.

CHATHAM.

The dress goods end of the dry goods business has been very backward in Chatham this season, on account of the long, cold Spring. The merchants prepared as never before for a big business; and as a consequence af the cold weather, were left with a lot of goods unsold. Dress goods selling was confined principally to plain cloths, and those who went in for fancy tweeds were pretty badly left. Everybody seems to be cutting prices as deeply as possible, and even then it is hard to induce purchasers to buy.

In other departments, business has been fair ; in fact, pretty well up to the standard. Of late, ladies' furnishings have been exceptionally good. The last warm spell has started the sale of Summer hosiery, Summer underwear, and all hot weather goods for women; and the merchants anticipate a good deal of business in seasonable goods.

Reports go to show that those handling carpets and house furnishings have experienced a phenomenal season, the biggest in years.

At present conditions are favorable for a good Fall business. Crops seem to be coming on nicely, and farmers in this vicinity are much more cheerful than they were two weeks ago. The effect of good crops should be felt in a good Fall business.

Ald. Meynell is having plans prepared for the remodeling of his place of business. A fine new front will be put in, and the interior of the store considerably altered.

C. Austin & Co. have also building operations under way. The clothing and furniture departments, facing on the Market Square, are to be built up to a height of three storeys, and extended to the full distance of 100 feet back from the street. This will add 68,500 feet of floor space. C. Austin & Co. are signalizing their expansion by a big "expansion building sale," which is being largely advertised.

Fred Blakely, who has been in the employ of the Northway Company here for the past two years, left recently for Orillia, where he has accepted a position on the Merchants Bank staff.

H. W. Ball & Co. have inaugurated something of a novelty. It is the Monday bargain day. It certainly has some advantages to commend it. It gives the week a good start-off, and Mr. Ball considers it better than Friday. It saves a great rush of business at the end of the week. Chatham is largely a market town, with busy Saturdays; and the innovation gives two busy days weekly, one at the beginning, the other at the end of the week. The day catches the employes when they are rested up after Sunday. Mr. Ball's innovation has unquestionably proven a success in Chatham.

"You couldn't buy that for $10 a yard. It is not on sale to-day ; it is advertised on sale to-morrow, and will be on sale at 8 o'clock in the morning." This remark, overheard by The Review man, concluded a conversation betwixt H. W. Ball and a customer. A special line of embroideries marked "for sale to-morrow," was exhibited in a show window, and the lady, happening along, asked if she could get some that day. Mr. Ball explained that the goods were advertised for sale the following day, and that the firm rigidly lived up to their agreements. Despite a popular superstition to the contrary, the lady seemed to appreciate the stand taken.

The question of a weekly half-holiday during the Summer months has been agitating local merchants the past few weeks. At a recent Retail Merchants' Association meeting, the suggestion of a Thursday half-holiday was vetoed. Several strong objections were raised, one being that the closing of the stores on Thursday afternoons would be merely an excuse for shoppers to take advantage of the cheap Thursday rate to Detroit. Chas. Austin objected to the holiday anyway, frankly stating that it practically spoiled the morning's business, and the ensuing morning's business as well. The employes put in the one morning talking over what they would do, and the other discussing the fun they had had. Several other merchants, however, were equally strong in favor of a holiday.

Later, a requisition was circulated for a Friday half-holiday. This was pretty generally signed by the merchants in the three lines concerned, dry goods, men's furnishings and boots and shoes. The outcome of this later movement is not yet definitely settled.

VERY UNUSUAL.

Editor Dry Goods Review,—I measured a piece of Japanese matting twice recently. We are invoiced at forty yards but the actual measurement is only thirty-nine yards. Would some of your readers inform us if this is usual or unusual. We think that a shortage of this kind should be rectified, and at once.—"Floor-walker."

In one of the wholesale houses The Review was informed that this was very unusual. No complaint along this line had ever been received. Every piece of matting is supposed to measure forty yards, but if it should happen that any sent out by this house were short-length they would readily make good the difference. It was pointed out that perhaps the retailer writing the above had used a yardstick, and thumbed it. A tape gives much more accurate measurement.

An example of the window trimmer taking advantage of local events was furnished by G. E. Fraser Sons, Picton, upon the occasion of the visit of Premier Roblin, Manitoba, a native of the county. The display contained large portraits of Premier Roblin and his father in the background of three large windows formed into one.

He has established office headquarters at 30 St. Francois Xavier street, and is representing firms selling the wholesale trade, in which he has an enviable connection.

A. F. Rivol, manager of Perrin Freres & Cie., left for European markets on S.S. Victorian, on June 22nd. Mr. Rivol will remain away over two months. Business of the firm will occupy most of his time. He will also represent the Chambre de Commerce Francaise at the Bordeaux International Convention. G. L. Clinton, representing the firm in the Maritime Provinces, and R. Wolf, who represents it in the west, will accompany him on the trip.

The Redmond Co., Montreal, are erecting a new factory, with location in West Lagauchetiere, Inspector and St. Monique streets. The building, when finished, will have a 76 ft. frontage by a depth of 140 ft., and will cover an area of 12,000 square feet. It will comprise four stories and basement, and will be equipped with all the latest improvements. Owing to the large area of the roof, it has been taken advantage of to supply a splendid roof garden for the convenience of employes. Lunch rooms will also be featured in the establishment. As the building is expected to be ready for occupation April, 1908, work will be rushed ahead with all possible dispatch.

Made-to-Measure Garments

Nova Scotia Retailer Makes a Suggestion Which Manufacturers Say is Not Feasible.

Editor Dry Goods Review,—Can you inform me if there is a concern which makes ladies' suits and skirts to measure ? It is one of the necessities of the dry goods business, as it is a very difficult matter for women to get their dress materials made up. There are so few dressmakers in towns of any size that customers have to accept any old way of getting their suits and dresses made. Dozens and dozens of them ask where they can get this work done. You give the names of half a dozen dressmakers and are likely informed that they have all been called on, but that they have work ahead for two or three weeks.

I believe this problem could be solved along the same lines as men's made-to-measure business is handled. It is very true that women are much more difficult to fit, and that they are exceedingly particular about fit and finish, yet I think this could be overcome quite easily. I am sure a study of ladies' tailoring would reveal some way that would be feasible. A manufacturer might make up a series of waists or coats out of good, strong material, representing all sizes from 32 to 44, varying them as regards the length of waist, size of bust, etc. Let him send a set of these to a customer and keep a duplicate set for himself. I am sure that in this way the greater part of the difficulty could be overcome. The samples used for measuring need not show the style of garment, merely the measurement. Suppose a customer comes to my store for a suit, and I try on two or three of the coats. I find that size 36 fits particularly well, except that it is a little full-chested, or the waist measure is one-half inch too large, but that size 35 is just right in these two points. The order could be sent in accordingly.

I am about certain that it is impossible to take measures for a ladies' suit and give entire satisfaction, more than five out of ten times, but the way I suggest would give nine perfect suits out of ten, and, perhaps, not more than five per cent. unsatisfactory.

I have simply made a few suggestions, and, no doubt, there are dozens of manufacturers who would like to undertake such a business as this if the fit problem could be solved. The workmanship of factories is far superior to that of custom shops, for they have the latest machinery.

Yours sincerely,
J. W. ELLIOTT,

Windsor, N.S.

The Review has made close inquiry, but has been unable to find any firm that would adopt the plan which you suggest. If we understand you rightly, you want a manufacturer to make up the materials from your store. We are sending the name of one firm which will make from measure the materials you have sold into machine-pleated skirts, but will not undertake tailored styles.

The Review has submitted your letter to expert garment-makers, and they unanimously declare that your plan is not feasible. The majority of firms have tried the special order department in many ways, but always without success.

The head of a concern doing a big made-to-measure business states it is impossible to turn out a garment, from measure alone, that is sure to fit. Alterations are always required. This house has a large clientele, and its work is satisfactory, yet it does not guarantee perfect fit ; all risk must be taken by the merchant sending in an order.

This class of business is done satisfactorily only when the retailer co-operates with the manufacturer. This he does by putting in a well-managed alteration department, in charge of an efficient tailor, who takes measures and sees that alterations are properly made. Measures must all be taken by one person, for it is a curious fact that no two persons get exactly the same figures.

In the United States there are any number of extensive stocks, and outside sizes, both small and large, and long and short-waisted, are carried or can be procured from the manufacturer. These are stock garments and the nearest measurement is procured—the alteration department does the rest. Stocks carried, even by the largest of the Canadian stores, are not sufficiently extensive at present to make this class of business profitable. No doubt, in the near future, this change will come, but it is extremely improbable that any manufacturer will ever consent to make up the retailer's own materials, for the cost of cutting and making could not be profitably borne.—Editor.

A SPECIALTY LAWN WAIST HOUSE.

Salem Co., St. James street, Montreal, have decided to discontinue the manufacture of men's shirts and specialties (with the exception of men's fancy Summer vests) in order to adequately meet the demands of the trade for lawn waists. This departure is in keeping with modern trade specialization, and is in line with garment progress across the line. This firm is well situated to conduct a business of the nature indicated, and the organization is now complete. Their aim is to give Canadian retailers the same service as specialty New York houses afford the trade across the line. In order to provide ample factory facilities it was necessary to discontinue all the men's lines except fancy Summer vests.

CHANGE OF TERMS.

J. H. Waldman & Co., the Montreal Garment House, 511 St. Paul street, have sent the following letter to the trade :—

> Dear Sirs,—We beg to inform you that on and after July 1st, 1907, our best cash discount will be 2 per cent only on all accounts paid within 30 days, instead of 5 per cent., as formerly.
> Yours very truly,
> J. H. WALDMAN & CO.

The lessening of the cash discount is in keeping with modern business methods, and Mr. Waldman explained to The Review the benefits accruing to his customers from the change in terms. He claims that as the greater quantity of their output is sold to stores with a separate ready-to-wear department, and the cash discounts in such stores are for the benefit of the office, two per cent. is sufficient for these expenses. In many cases also the discount has simply been added on and taken off again. Further, he says, their garments are priced so closely that a considerable discount is out of the question. He claims that these garments cannot be figured on the same basis as goods at so much per pound or per yard—style, fit and material are considerations besides cash discount.

THE MAN AND HIS WORK.

I haven't much faith in the man who complains
Of the work he has chosen to do;
He's lazy, or else he's deficient in brains,
And—maybe—a hypocrite, too.
He's likely to cheat, and he's likely to rob—
Away with the man who finds fault with his job.

But give me the man with the sun in his face,
And the shadows all dancing behind;
Who can meet his reverses with calmness and grace,
And never forgets to be kind;
For whether he's wielding a sceptre or swab,
I have faith in the man who's in love with his job.

L. B. Berger, of Berger & Co., Montreal, left for New York early this month.

A. Sommer, of A. Sommer & Co., Montreal, returned from a flying European trip, the middle of this month. He has made the announcement that he will take possession of the new building in St. Catherine street, west, adjoining the Princess theatre, now in course of erection.

Sam. Wener, of Sam. Wener & Co., Montreal, spent a few days in New York the early part of the month. J. L. Gittleson, of the same firm, is in western Ontario, taking orders for immediate and Fall delivery. R. E. Hart is soliciting orders in eastern Ontario.

AFTER THE SHUTTERS ARE UP

The following incident concerning one of those small india rubber mats placed on glass cases for receiving cash, occurred some time ago in a certain chemist's shop.

A small, but well-dressed lad entered and asked for a Smith's porous plaster. His change was immediately got for him from the till and placed on the mat before him.

The man of drugs then turned his back to procure the plaster, but when he returned to the counter again he was very much surprised to find that the boy had disappeared.

In ten minutes or so, however, his juvenile customer came back, bringing with him the india-rubber mat referred to and, holding it up, exclaimed in a rather indignant tone :

"Mother says this is not a Smith's porous plaster."

Husband (to wife): "Do you believe in the theory that the greatness of a father often proves a stumbling-block to the advancement of his son in life?"

Wife: "I certainly do. I think am thankful, John, our boy will never be handicaped in that way."

Husband: "Oh!"

Grocer : "Willie, I am glad to see that you are doing the errands quicker. Where were you going when I saw you flying down the street an hour ago ?"

Willie (the errand-boy) : "Me, sir ? Oh, I was going home to dinner then."

A funny story is told of a certain wealthy tradesman who, on retiring from business, erected a mansion in an aristocratic neighborhood, and who with his family commenced to cultivate social relationships with their stylish neighbors.

Unfortunately for their ambitions, the high-toneh people of the locality proved to have the usual prejudices against trade, and showed themselves so very exclusive that after a series of snubs the new-comers could endure it no longer, and determined to dispose of their residence and quit the neighborhood.

But the baffled tradesman did not propose to go without leaving some mark of his resentment, and a huge notice-board erected at his gate sent a thrill of horror through the veins of all the blue-blooded residents in the neighborhood. It bore the words :

"This Desirable Residence to be Let or Sold. Suitable for a Fever Hospital or High-Class Laundry."

Ultimately, so the story runs, the place was sold at a sacrifice, the owner cheerfully foregoing a large portion of its value on condition that the house should be exclusively used as a lunatic asylum ! It has been a bitter pill to the tradesman's former neighbors.—Tit-Bits.

He had risen in the world, and made a fortune, and much fulsome flattery had come his way. His wife and daughter had, against his will, induced him to build a superb and costly mansion, in which he entertained his wife's and daughter's friends, who naturally sang his praises.

He would have much preferred to hear someone say what they really thought of him.

One day a friend visited him and was enthusiastic about his splendid house. But he was puzzled at the gloomy expression of his host.

"Why, whatever is the matter ?" said his friend. "You oughtn't to look so miserable. You can't say you haven't everything you want."

"Yes, I can," replied the millionaire, dolefully. "I want a parrot !"

"Why a parrot ?"

"I should just like to place him over the front door, so that every time I enter this house he would yell out : 'There comes that old fool again.' "

In a certain factory it was formerly the custom to pay the hands every fortnight. The men, having found this somewhat inconvenient from their standpoint, decided to send a representative to the head of the firm to state their grievance. An Irishman was selected for the task. He duly waited on the "guv'nor," who said :

"Well, Michael, what can I do for you ?"

"If ye plase, sor," said Mike, "I've been sint by the workers to ask a favor of ye regardin' the paymint of our wages."

"What do they want ?"

"Sor, it is the desire of mesilf an' of ivery other man in the establishmint that we resayve our fortnightly pay every week."

She was a fresh-colored, guileless-looking schoolgirl, and as she stepped to the glove counter of the great emporium the salesman smiled encouragingly.

"Gloves?" he said. "Yes, miss. What kind? Dogskin is very fashionable."

"Oh," she answered, "I should not like gloves made from the skins of poor little dogs."

He smiled afresh.

"That is merely the trade term," he explained. "They are not really of dogskin."

"Then why do they say so? It is clearly dishonest."

"Oh, it's just the popular name for them. They are a good deal worn now."

"I don't want worn gloves; I want new ones."

By this time the salesman's smile had become a trifle sickly.

"They are all new," he said; "this season's goods. Perhaps you would prefer suede gloves?"

"Is suede the name of an animal?"

The salesman did not know.

"I should so like to know!" she murmured. "Suede —now, isn't that French for Sweden?"

The salesman fell back on his former defence. "It is merely a trade term," he explained. "These trade terms are merely—er—in fact, they are just, so to speak, trade terms."

And to cut the discussion short he reached down several boxes of gloves.

After a long interval consumed in selecting the right shade, the girl made her choice.

"I will take one of these," she said, presently.

"One pair, miss?"

"No, one glove. Right hand, please."

"But we can't split them."

"No. I don't want you to. The gloves would be no good then."

"I mean we can't separate them."

"Oh, yes; simply break the thread that joins them."

Then the young man grew irritable.

"I mean we can't sell you one glove," he snapped.

"The left-hand glove is of no use to me," she said, simply. "My mother has lost her left hand, and I am buying a glove for her. Of course, I should expect to pay the price of a pair."

The salesman regained his good temper.

"Oh, that alters the case," he said. "We shall be very pleased—the right hand glove, I think you said?"

"No, thanks," exclaimed the young lady. "You told me you could not separate them. You told me so twice. I don't want to make you tell untruths for the sake of three-and-sixpence. I will buy the glove elsewhere. Good afternoon."

Mrs. Briggs was in high feather for Mr. Briggs had just presented her with the usual Christmas cheque, and as it was a nice big one there was much rejoicing.

"That is jolly," said Mary, Mrs. Brigg's eldest daughter; "just think of the Christmas presents we can buy."

"And how do you propose to spend the money?" asked the mother.

"I'd buy you a set of sables, and we can get a new bicycle for Tommy. Then I can have that lovely set of furs I saw the other day, and we can book six seats for the pantomime. Sister Clara must have that new muff, and the cook that gold-mounted umbrella we saw last week, and er—er, let me see, I know there's something else. Oh yes, of course; we've forgotten papa's Christmas card!"

Father: "How's this, Eleanor—a $25 bill rendered from Fuss and Feather?"

Daughter: "Oh, yes, papa, dear; that is for my new bonnet, you know; it was lovely, too."

Father (grimly): "It ought to have been."

Daughter: "It was, I can assure you. Jack thought it was a perfect gem."

Father: "H'm! That was very kind of Jack."

Daughter: "Yes, wasn't it? I don't mind letting you, papa, dear, see a bit of poetry he wrote about it on the fly-leaf of my album."

Father (reading):—

A flutter of ribbon, a fringe of lace,
A bunch of posies nodding upon it;
Two tender eyes, a mignon face—
This is my love in her best new bonnet.

"Thanks, my dear. I appreciate your confidence and Jack's rhyme. I will not forget either."

One Year Later.

Jack: "Eleanor, isn't $25 a big price for a new bonnet?"

Eleanor: "Oh, no, not specially; the bonnet is of superior design and elegance. Papa met me and said I had never looked prettier. Oh, and he sent a message to you, too!"

Jack: "What was that?"

Eleanor: "He bade me be sure to tell you that my bonnet was very becoming, and that if you intended to write an ode to it as usual this year, he would suggest that you write in blank verse and affix your autograph."

Jack (reddening a little): "Your papa, Eleanor, is a very funny old gentleman."

The new lady clerk's yellow hair glittered in the flood of sunlight that poured through the window of the office.

But old Duke, the book-keeper, had no eyes for the girl's beauty. He lighted a cigar and set to work.

"Mr. Duke," said the lady clerk.

"Eh?" the old man grunted.

"Look here," she said, imperiously. "I am sorry, but smoking always makes me ill."

"Then," said Duke, without looking up, "don't ever smoke."

Express Rates in the West

Schedules of Rates for Non - Competing Points Differ Widely — Business Men Indignant—Investigation by the Railway Commission.

As compared with the rates charged in eastern Canada and in the western states, the express rate charged in our western provinces are unreasonably high. Western business men have a real grievance in these excessive rates, but up to the present time they have attracted little attention, as people have been more interested in the more important question of freight rates. However, at the recent convention of the Associated Board of Trade of Western Canada, held in Prince Albert, this subject came up and the discussion that followed made it very plain that western business men are becoming keenly alive to the disabilities under which they suffer. H. W. Laird, of Regina, made a very strong speech on this subject, and through his kindness this paper is permitted to quote herewith some very interesting figures which he has compiled. These figures are taken from the official schedules of rates issued by the express companies, and they afford some very interesting comparisons.

Companies' Rates Differ.

One complaint that is made is that the express companies in the west charge different rates for non-competing points, the Canadian Northern Express Company's rates being considerably higher than those of the Dominion Express Company. As illustrating this point, the following schedule of rates is interesting and instructive:

	Miles from Winnipeg.	Dominion.	C.N.
Altona	62	.75	....
Burnside	63	.75	....
Walldon	61	....	1.00
Woodridge	65	....	1.00
Vassar	84	....	1.25
Holland	85	1.00	....
Morden	81	1.00	....
Swift	120	....	1.50
Douglas	121	1.25	....
Cartwright	148	1.50	....
Souris	150	1.50	....
Laurier	149	....	1.75
Barwick	181	....	2.00
Dauphin	178	....	2.00
Virden	180	1.75	....

In contrast with this, note the uniformity of rates charged in the east by the Dominion Express Co. and the Canadian Express Co. to non-competing points:

	Miles from Toronto.	Can. Express.	Dom. Express.
Sarnia	177	1.00	....
Sharbot Lake	172	....	1.00
Orillia	91	.75	....
Norwood	94	....	.75
Brockville	208	1.00	....
Smith's Falls	209	....	1.00

Eastern and Western Charges.

But the principal grievance is that rates are invariably much higher in western Canada than they are either in eastern Canada or the United States. There would be little complaint if the scale of rates were only slightly in advance of eastern charges, for there is a general disposition to be fair in these matters and it is freely recognized that conditions in the west are different from the east and probably warrant a slightly higher rate; but the following figures show a state of affairs that calls for explanations:

EASTERN CANADA.

Dominion Express.

	Miles from Toronto-	Rate.
Brampton	29	.40
Guelph	48	.50
Norwood	94	.75
Ivanhoe	121	.90
Perth	197	1.00
Beaconsville	323	1.00

WESTERN CANADA.

Dominion Express.

	Miles from Winnipeg.	Rate.
Lasalle	18	.50
De Wit	49	.75
Darlingford	94	1.00
Treesbank	120	1.25
Birtle	193	1.75
Qu'Appelle	324	2.75

C. N. Express.

	Miles from Winnipeg.	Rate.
White Plains	21	.60
Marchand	47	.90
Berton	94	1.25
Baldur	116	1.50
Gilbert Plains	198	2.00
Mafeking	321	2.75

A comparison with the rates charged in the western states is equally interesting. Conditions in Minnesota are much the same as in western Canada, and yet the rates charged are considerably lower.

Rates in Western Canada and Western States.

Winnipeg to Birtle, 137 miles, Dom. Ex., $1.75.
Minneapolis to Cloutoub, Minn., 138 miles, G. N., $1.25.
Minneapolis to Brainerd, Minn., 138 miles, N.P., $1.25.
Winnipeg to Broadview, 264 miles, Dom. Ex., $2.58.
Winnipeg to Bruno, 264 miles, C. N., $3.25.
Minneapolis to Mapleton, N.D., 263 miles, N. P., $2.
Minneapolis to Durbin, N.D., 263 miles, G. N., $2.25.

Railway Commission to Investigate.

These figures indicate a real grievance which requires investigation. An Ottawa dispatch the other day stated that the Railway Commission are about to commence an investigation into the question of express rates. The business men of the west welcome the announcement and hope that there will be no unnecessary delays in getting down to business. Owing to the long distances and delays in getting goods by freight, the express companies in the west handle a large amount of business that in the east they do not get. The express bills of the western business man are very heavy in the course of a year, and the figures quoted certainly show that an investigation is necessary.

The above firm recognizes that Canada is now ripe for what has proved a big success in the United States, that is, manufacturing a special article at a special price, etc.

Greenshields Limited.

Every department in the house presents a busy scene, as Fall shipments are being made rapidly, and every effort is made to clear Summer goods in preparation for the arrival of Fall lines.

In their carpet and house furnishings department Greenshields Limited, report that they have just opened up a large shipment of squares, which include latest patterns and designs. For prompt deliveries in carpets, curtains, squares of all kinds, cretonnes, art muslins, mattings, etc., they are well equipped. In addition to above lines, they carry in this department, for Fall trade, a large and well assorted stock of comforters of all grades, also white and grey blankets. These lines have been especially selected and already large orders are booked.

Their range of handkerchiefs is larger than any previous season, and includes every good seller in hemstitched, scalloped and lace-edged goods. In ladies' and men's linen lines they offer grades from 5c. to 10c. In ladies' pure linen lines, they have all grades from 5c. to 25c. All lines for Fall season are of exceptional values.

Their glove department has done fairly well considering the backward Spring, and the conditions of the glove market in fabric lines. In the kid gloves they have been much more fortunate, and Pewny's kid lines have been largely sold.

Greenshields' ribbon department is now in a complete condition, with one or two exceptions. Plains and fancies in all the popular shades and designs are shown. Baby ribbon, in Alice blue, London smoke and pink, etc., are also included in their stock for Fall. A visit to this department is sure to prove useful.

Advance orders in ladies' hosiery have, so far, been very satisfactory, and their favorable contrasts have been appreciated. In cashmere lines, to retail at 25c. they offer two specials, "Defiance" and "Excel." Other lines to retail at 50c. are "Countess" and "E 66." In rib hosiery a special line to retail at 50c. is No. "14X." A full range of this hosiery is in stock in sizes from 1 to 10.

A trial of any of above lines mentioned is sure to prove of mutual advantage.

The W. R. Brock Co., Toronto.

Visitors to the W. R. Brock Company will see a great change in Her Ladyship department, as it has now been moved to the new quarters, and the change should be a great benefit, as in the old quarters the space alotted cramped it greatly as the business grew and outgrew it. They are showing in this department several new lines of voile skirts to retail for from $6 to $10 and as these goods are in such great demand they should sell very quickly. They are for immediate delivery. Lines of white waists are fairly complete, several new lines of them being lately added to their already large range. The W. R. Brock Company have sent out to the trade one of their popular offers for free advertising on overskirts. With every purchase of $150 worth of these goods they give free 1,000 circulars (illustrated) with the customer's prices, name and advertisements inserted. These sell the goods for them and also sell all classes of goods in the store. They reserve the right to confine them to one merchant in a town, and it would repay those who are interested in this to put their orders in at once.

As usual, Brock's fancy knitted wool goods section is full of the latest novelties from Germany, Italy, Leicester, and domestic-made goods—knit shawls, hoods, tams, caps, bootees, infantees, polka jackets, clouds, golf jackets, boleros, ice wool and silk squares and fascinators. Some houses do not bother with these knitted goods, on account of their bulk, and the great amount of detail entailed. Brock's cater to all the legitimate wants of the dry goods trade.

Ladies' and misses' vests and drawers are amongst Brock's specialties. Their lines of ribs "Canuck" T 7 and T 4 meet all possible requirements, and can be retailed from 10c to 50c per garment. Four lines of camel's hair tams, to retail from 15c to 50c each, are about one-half the usual price.

The stock of embroideries and laces for Fall will be found unusually attractive. It has been reinforced by all of the latest novelties from the St. Gall, Calais and Nottingham markets.

The assortment of white bearskin goods for Fall is large and attractive. All were bought before the late heavy advances, consequently last season's prices are being quoted. The stock consists of coats, muffs, hoods, caps, ruffs, boas, mitts, etc.

Silk handkerchiefs in brocades, hemstitched, initial and odd borders for ladies' and men's wear, can be had at Brock's in large variety of prices and designs, direct from the silk handkerchief centres of Japan, etc.

Prepare for the wet season and send your orders for umbrellas and waterproofs to Brock's, Toronto. "Primus" frame umbrellas, self-opening, in "Shoofly" for men and "Shoot" for ladies, to retail at $1 are value not to be beaten. "Leader" raincoat for men can be retailed at $6.50, worth $8 and $8.50. "Lillian" and "Reita," for ladies, to retail at $5 and $6, will sell if shown.

Fifty cent trade attractors—"Llama," black, plain cashmere hose; 98, black, 1-1 ribbed cashmere hose, double knees; "Toeproof," 2-1 ribbed black worsted hose; 829, black plain cashmere hose; W 935, clouds in white, black, cardinal, navy and pink; L 166, white bearskin hoods; W.A.B., embroidered black cashmere hose; "Devaney," ribbed vests and drawers; Ladysmith, fleeced vests and drawers; R 256 and R 257, honeycomb toques in all desirable colors; L 74 X, honeycomb shawl.

Scarce goods for July trade, in stock—white cotton and tan cotton hose; white Persian lawns; white victoria lawns; white India linen; Swiss spot muslins (see a line that is going out in 10, 25 and 50-piece lots, to retail at 12½ to 15c, splendid value). A line of ladies' sunshades, with new handles, to retail at 50c.

The two popular prices for retailers are A1 value to retail at 25 and 50c. The W. R. Brock Co. study this continually, and while aiming to have good value at all prices, make a point of having good 25c and 50c "drives" that are always eye-openers. Many of them are old reliable lines that it is impossible to attempt to eclipse—"New Cairo," 2-1 ribbed black cashmere hose with double knees; "Brockbest" 2-1 ribbed black cashmere hose with plain knees; "Pegtop," 4-1 ribbed black wool hose; "Rusher," 2-1 ribbed black wool hose; "Hustler," 2-1 black wool hose; 417 cashmere gloves and 392 ringwood gloves, both in black, white, navy, seal brown, cardinal and grey; L 153, white bearskin muffs; L 163 white bearskin hoods; "Gaiety" embroidered black cashmere hose.

Brock's carry in their Toronto warehouse white swansdown, white wool boas and white llama fringe.

The men's furnishing department is showing three lines of men's tweed pants that are much below regular price to retail at $1, $1.25 and $1.50. Notwithstanding the recent heavy advances in drills and derrys they are still selling their overalls and smocks at the old prices and report a very active demand for them. Two special lines of men's work shirts are "Rockfast" and "Great West." These cannot be excelled for size, quality and workmanship. The men's glove department are showing two lines of men's gloves which are extra value. "Benson," an unlined kid glove to retail at $1; "Royal," a silk lined kid glove to retail at $1.25. "Premier," and "Brocknit" are two specia, lines of men's black cashmere half hose which are extra value to retail at 25c.

Liddell's Linens.

New sample lines of Liddell's hand embroidered linens are now showing, and these comprise an extensive collection of very handsome bedspreads, sheets, pillow slips, shams, tea cloths and other household linens. All the latest ideas in hand-work are shown. Extensive use is made of drawnwork, and not only do lines of it follow the hems, but flower centres, leaves and scrolls of the finest work are used to enrich the patterns. Eyelet work is seen on many of the designs, and another new feature is a border of hand-made Cluny to many of the articles.

There is a growing trade, particularly in the higher priced goods, for there are few retailers who do not stock art linens, and all who do so will be interested in Liddell's new sample line.

Import Samples of Old Bleach.

The Canadian agent for Old Bleach linens has received the sample lines for the import season, and, as usual, the towel line is an extensive one. Though only to hand a few days, some very large orders have already been placed. This is partly explained by the fact that prices of Old Bleach goods show no advance over last March, when, as the trade will remember, a stiff advance was recorded. As the merits of these goods become known their sales increase. This is particularly noticeable in the case of towels, which are a specialty with this firm. Buyers in closest touch with present market conditions are placing heavy orders, not just for December delivery, but also for March, as they know that they cannot afford to have assortments of towels run out, for they have customers who always buy Old Bleach.

Greenshields Western Limited.

Greenshields Western, Ltd., Winnipeg, have their big warehouse filled with new goods for Fall and Winter, and large shipments are now on the way. They anticipate a big Fall trade, and in order to make room for the new goods direct special attention to many attractive offerings in Summer goods, of which they are prepared to make immediate shipments.

They have in stock an exceptionally full range of bathing suits, lustre coats, outing shirts, fancy hose and Summer underwear in light weights and all materials and colors. The men's wear department is full of good things in hot weather goods, and prompt shipment can be made. A big range of leather belts in all the newest designs is worthy of special mention.

Big shipments of Fall and Winter blouses have already arrived. Flannels, lustres, flannelettes and silk make up an extensive range that is worthy of special attention. This department also offers a large variety of golf coats in plain colors and plain colors trimmed with darker shades. A new thing in golf coats is an Eton golf jacket with three-quarter length sleeves. This is a very dressy coat. The ladies' wear department also shows a large variety of ladies' coats in seven-eighths lengths nicely trimmed. For Summer wear there is a big range of print wrappers ready for immediate shipment and for Winter wear there is a splendid variety of flannel wrappers that should prove good sellers. A couple of lines of ladies' wool hose to retail at 50 cents and 65 cents will net the retail trade a good profit. In woolen toques Greenshields Western have a big variety and they have stocked heavily the pineapple or honeycomb stitch variety which has been so profitable in the past. In cashmere hose, in spite of the big advances made by the manufacturers, Greenshields Western state that they can offer the same qualities as before at the old prices. They have a range of cashmere hose which it will pay the trade to examine.

Three carloads of linoleums have just been placed in stock and the trade will find an immense variety from which to make their selections. There are also many new lines of carpets and the stock is so large and the range of kinds so extensive that all requirements can be met promptly. A big stock of "Sanitas" wall coverings in many different patterns has just been opened out. The warehouse is crowded with new blankets and comforters for the Winter trade and these are offered at attractive prices.

In prints Crum's and the B.B.B. lines are shown in immense variety and repeat orders for Summer trade can be attended to promptly. Sorting orders for fancy muslins and victoria lawns can also receive prompt attention.

A big shipment of shawls has just come in and immediate deliveey can be made.

The dress goods department have a full range of grey suitings for Fall and will be pleased to send samples on request.

M. F. Phelan.

M. F. Phelan, 505 Lindsay building, Montreal, is representing a strong list of English upholstery and carper firms. Representative retailers may secure particulars upon request. Mr. Phelan has traveled in Canada for some years and found that the business needed his permanent attention, so has established the above office.

A Thread Proposition.

The Andrew H. McDowell Co. (incorporated), Montreal and Toronto, have been appointed selling agents for the Dominion Thread Mills, Ltd., Toronto, and are conducting a strong selling campaign direct to the retail trade. The Dominion Thread Mills have reorganized and have extended their facilities. They are so confident of the rightness of their values that an active publicity campaign is being conducted, acquainting retailers and consumers with their product. They are manufacturing machine and six-cord sewing cotton. While they do not count upon sentiment to market their goods it is worth noting the industry is purely Canadian, and it is not connected with any of the foreign thread combinations. Retailers have no duty to pay, an appreciable and active saving. The McDowell Company have made extended tests of these lines and claim they are equal to the best standard goods. The boxing and labeling is of an attractive type, and retailers pushing these goods are assured of good profits and steady sales, as quality is the backbone of the line. Prices are: $4.60 per gross 200 yards; $6.15 per gross 300 yards. Retailers who desire to make comparison with lines now in stock may have a sample upon request to the Andrew H. McDowell Company, Montreal and Toronto. A special line, designed for the tailoring trade, is known as "Peerless," put up on 1,000-yard spool, a splendid thread for basting and hand sewing purposes.

National Skirt Company.

One of the most interesting developments in the Montreal garment trade is the growth of the National Skirt Co., who confine their attention to the wholesale trade. Within a few years jobbers have appreciated their lines to such an extent that this firm has now the largest output of skirts in Canada. Their organization compares favorably with leading New York houses, and their factory at 291 Notre Dame street west is of a size that insures prompt delivery. Mr. Kellnor, the founder of the firm, has made steady progress each year. Recently Mr. Gittleson joined him and will look after the office end of the business. Wholesale buyers will find the range for Spring, 1908, exceeds any previous season's production. The enormous output means consequent savings in material and workmanship. These savings are apparent in their prices. The firm spares no expense in securing the very latest styles, and their designers are constant visitors to the New York market.

John Macdonald & Co.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, state that greater care than ever has been exercised in the buying of their Fall stock for 1907. The markets of the world have been visited by experts and contracts have been made on the most favorable terms. Prompt shipments are assured, and everything possible to make business run smoothly and profitably to their customers has been done. In their warehouses you may expect to see the very latest creations of fashion, as they will appear in the fashion centres of the world—dress goods from the French, German, English and Canadian looms; silks from Europe; blousings, waistings and wrapperettes from the Canadian and United States manufacturers; mattings and mats from Japan; rugs from the Orient; smallwares and haberdashery from all over the face of the earth.

They make special mention of some lines they are showing in plaid and check dress goods, plain cloths in venetians, sateen finish, panamas and voiles, embroidered flannels for waistings, and silks in peau-de-soie, taffetas and chiffon taffetas; also fancy plaid tamalines in a variety of colors. They have added two more qualities to their famous brand of "Imperial" velveteen. All their other lines will be stocked the same as usual.

Universal Mfg. Co., Ottawa.

Few manufacturing concerns have grown more rapidly than the above. Starting in a very modest way a little over three years ago, it now employs over 150 skilled hands, and the product is known from coast to coast. The company manufactures skirts, costumes, mantles and fur shells, which are known as the "Princess garments." The large three-storey building occupied is one of the best equipped factories in Canada, and the show rooms extend right through to Rideau street. Here may be seen a most fashionable diversity of the newest creations. Style, fit, quality and price are the foundation stones upon which this large business has built success. It is a feature of the house they make a motto to always treat everyone well. What is the result ? Simply when the trade thinks of skirts, costumes, mantles or fur shells they naturally think of the "company of satisfaction" in Ottawa.

Card Writing Made Simple.

By the use of Small's letter patterns anyone, without previous experience, can made up-to-date show cards, board signs, etc. They are utilized by experienced sign-writers who want a time-saving method, as well as beginners who have not time to learn the old way. These patterns are not stencils, but true outlines cut from extra durable paper, and with ordinary care will last a lifetime. Small's show card paint is the only water-color paint on the market for this purpose that will show up full strength on any colored surface. It is ground by machinery, and ready for immediate use, with the addition of water for thinning. There are six colors, and they are put up in screw-top jars. Write for circular to W. L. Small, College and Dufferin Sts., Toronto.

Book on Display.

"Window Dressing and Display," the complete catalogue and price list just issued by J. R. Palmenberg's Sons, will be sent gratis to every merchant of standing forwarding his name. It would be obviously unfair to expect that so elaborate and expensive a work could be profitably circulated unless some discrimination was exercised. It must, therefore, be distributed along conservative lines and only among firms and individuals of repute.

Gentlemen,—I have to-day placed my order with your company through your traveling representative, for 134 sections of your "20th Century" clothing cabinets. I will thank you to get this order out by the date mentioned in contract, as I am in urgent need of them.

I wish to congratulate your company upon having gotten up such a thoroughly practical cabinet. It may be of interest to you to know that before placing my order for this outfit, I personally investigated the respective merits of the different clothing cabinets on the market, and went so far as to send two of my representatives to Cleveland, Columbus, Detroit, Rochester, Chicago, Lansing and Grand Rapids, and can conscientiously say that your cabinets are superior from every standpoint.

Yours very truly,
MOSE COHEN

USING THE DULL SEASON AS A MONEY MAKER

Give a little time out of your leisure to go over your stock and make up a case of unsalable fabrics, that only need changing to another color to become as valuable as the newest goods on your shelves.

This story of dead stocks has no place with the Dry Goods Merchant or Milliner who has become a customer of these works.

—No experiment in this business. Our experience goes back to over thirty years and leading houses in all parts of Canada are our customers.

Preparations for Fall, 1907

We have made preparations for the largest Fall business in our history, and to meet the situation fairly we have provided each department with carefully selected lines and with a very limited number of changes in the prices outside of Cotton Goods Staples. In Dress Goods the values are equally as good as last season, with a few exceptions.

Mantle Cloths—We placed sufficiently early to get the bottom price along with the new designs and colors. As usual we will show four leaders to retail at $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 and $2.00. Previous seasons' selling has demonstrated the fact that the above four prices suit the trade admirably.

NOTE
To Mail Order Buyers

We are issuing a lot of very convenient mail order forms which we think will meet the requirements of customers ordering goods by mail. If by chance we do not mail or enclose one in your parcel, a postal will bring one by mail.

P.S.—A right smart line for Fall are our new Bannockburn Tourist Coatings. Sample clips for the asking.

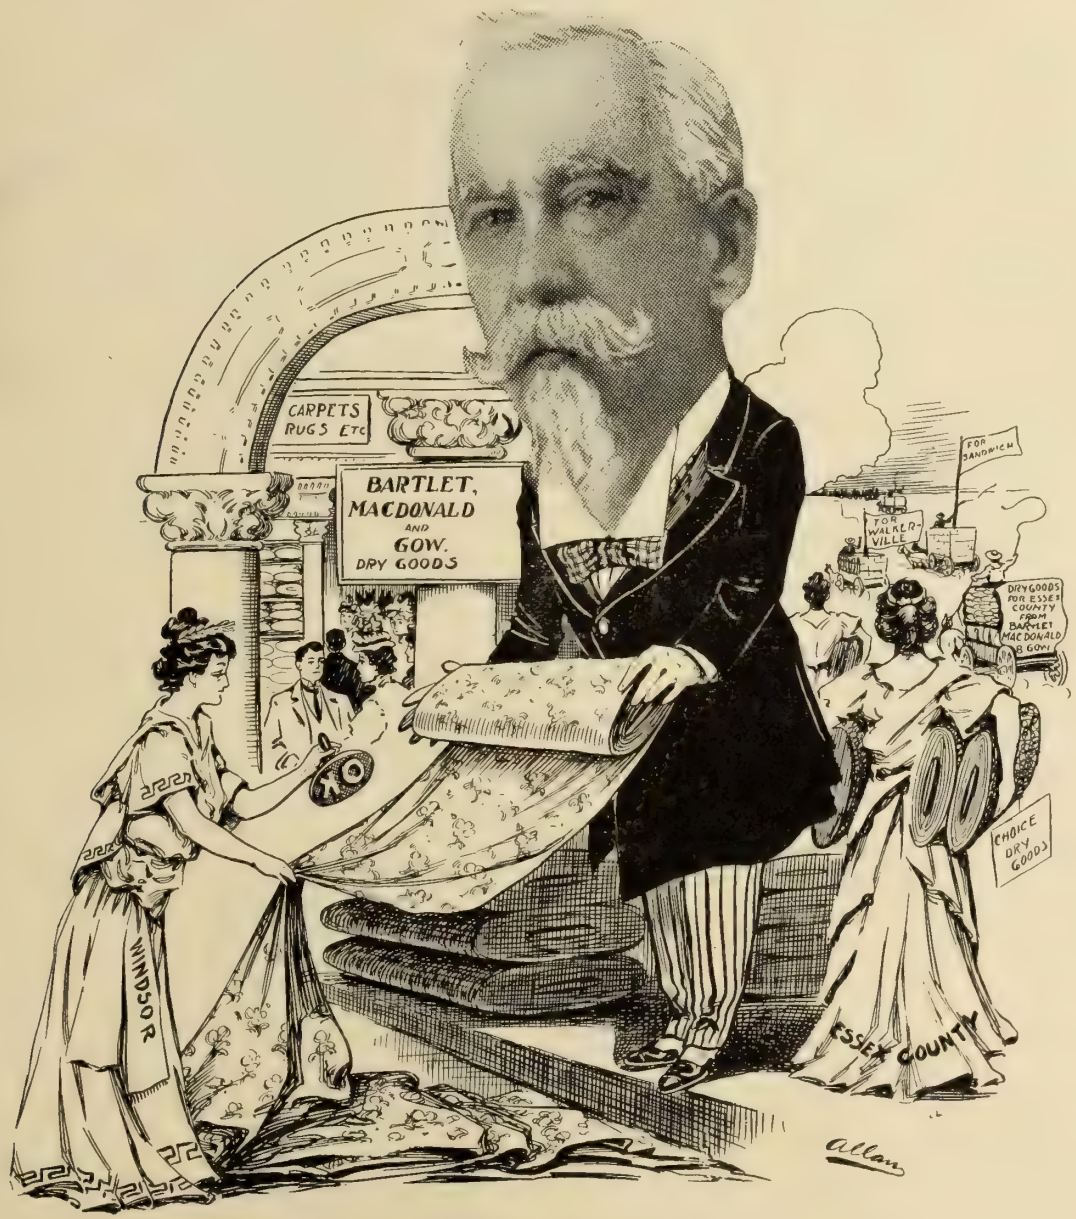
MEN AND METHODS

Detroit Attracts Big Trade Even in Furs, from Windsor — Two Stores Sell on Strictly Cash Basis Large Stocks of Dress Goods— Dearth of Descriptive Advertising.

WELL-EQUIPPED WINDSOR STORE.



Bartlet, Macdonald & Gow are the oldest established dry goods firm in Windsor. They have fine premises, 46 x 110 feet, three floors and basement, and the equipment throughout is modern. A noticeable feature is a number of large showcases, which rank among the best that I have seen. These are kept well trimmed and the principle that goods to be sold must be displayed is well exemplified. Fancy goods and notions are right at the entrance, and, consequently, the department is active. Full advantage is taken of the large windows.

Carpets and other housefurnishings occupy the first floor, and millinery the second. From this may be gathered the relative importance of these departments. Other lines carried are general dry goods, men's furnishings, ready-to-wear garments and furs. Merchants tailoring is another department, and it does a good business.

Millinery appears to be a fairly good line. Special openings are held here, as well as in the ready-to-wear section.

The store is equipped with an elevator which makes it easy to attract customers to the upper floors.

Bartlet, Macdonald & Gow do not follow the strictly cash system of selling, but they are careful to extend their credit to only such persons as are good. Accounts are rendered monthly, and customers look for them. On occasion when there has been a little delay in this respect, some people have telephoned to ask why their accounts had not been sent in. As one member of the firm remarked, they have about all the advantages of a cash business without its disadvantages.

In this store are employes who have been with it for thirty four and thirty five years. The only way in which the services of good men can be retained for such periods is by paying them good salaries and treating them well.

Bargain sales are not looked upon with any favor here and they are conducted only at clearing time. Of course, leaders are offered occasionally. It has been found that where cut price sales are held frequently they greatly disturb regular merchandising; people wait for them, and do not feel inclined to pay regular prices for anything. This firm used to have customers go to their store simply for the purpose of enquiring when the next sale would be held.

The mail order department is growing in importance, and goods are sent out for some distance round. Newspaper advertising is depended upon entirely to draw the business.

Under the head of "Prominent Men You Have Met," the Windsor Record recently illustrated George Bartlet, head of the firm, as distributing dry goods to a personification of Windsor, and also of Essex County, Walkerville, etc. We reproduce the illustration herewith. Following are some extracts from the short sketch which accompanied it: "Foremost among the city's business men stands George Bartlet. . . . He possesses many qualities of sterling merit and ranks high in the estimation of his fellow citizens. . . . He is ready to converse on almost any subject, dry goods especially. . . . Business claims his first attention. . . . Mr. Bartlet is naturally equipped to discharge the full duties of citizenship. He takes a keen interest in the city's affairs."

CASH AND ONE PRICE.

J. A. Diebel went to Windsor from Essex four years ago, and, very wisely, opened out on the strictly cash and one-price basis. He has done well, tangible evidence of which fact is to be seen in a thirty-foot addition to his premises which was found necessary a short time ago. A new front of up-to-date design is now being put in. It will be equipped with prisms, a lighting facility that should be adopted by every dry goods store. Mr. Diebel recently purchased the premises which he occupies. He carries general dry goods, small stocks of ready-to-wear and furs, but no millinery. Dress goods are his big line.

WINDSOR PEOPLE BUY FURS IN DETROIT.

Detroit takes a great deal of business away from Windsor merchants, and although this is offset, to a certain extent, by a good trade with people from across the line, in woolens, silks and linens, I am told that the balance is quite heavily in favor of the larger city. All things considered, this might reasonably be expected, but I was rather surprised to learn that Windsor people buy the greater quantity of their furs in Detroit. In all other border cities and towns—and some a considerable distance from the border—that I have visited, I have found the dry goods stores doing a big trade in furs of all kinds with people from the United States. In Toronto, Montreal, and other cities, large displays have been made since the middle of June for the purpose of attracting the business of tourists.

Windsor drygoodsmen could easily improve their advertising. There is a very decided dearth of the descriptive quality. In this connection I would refer them to the "Good Advertising" department of the July Review.

Reference has already been made to the small amount of business sent from Windsor and district to the Toronto mail order houses.

SPRING, 1907, MUCH AHEAD OF 1906.

J. W. Peddie, of Windsor, finds his business going ahead very satisfactorily. Trade was slow up till the middle of June, but it picked up with a rush, and the Spring season will show an increase of fully fifty per cent. over that of 1906.

Mr. Peddie carries general dry goods, millinery, and ready-to-wear, and operates on the cash and credit system.

SPECIALIZE ON DRESS GOODS AND CARPETS.

Appelbe & Co., of Windsor, carry general dry goods and housefurnishings. They do not handle millinery or ready-to-wear garments. Dress goods is the leading department, and, consequently, a big stock is carried. Carpets and rugs occupy the greater part of the first floor.

Stock boxes are used for hosiery and gloves. They are found very convenient and profitable.

Mr. Appelbe went from Brantford to Windsor nine years ago. One singular thing about his business is that he has not aided its growth with a line of newspaper advertising. However, he believes in the merit of this form of publicity, and gives as his reason for not employing it that his premises are too small for the extension of his lines—when he can enlarge his present departments and add others he will be ready to advertise. At present he uses only handbills, which are distributed from house to house. There are few merchants who would find it safe to follow Mr. Appelbe's example, even under similar circumstances.

No cut price sales are held, except those for clearing purposes.

Mr. Appelbe started in Windsor on the cash basis and has not departed from it.

COST OF SELLING GOODS AT RETAIL.

The cost of selling must be considered at some time, for it certainly has to be paid. What the cost is remains a mystery to many merchants who have to look after most of the details of their business themselves. The great merchants of the big cities have clerks who figure all these things out for them, according to systems devised by experts for keeping proper account of the business. The merchant who cannot take time to figure out what per cent. it costs him to sell goods had better accept at least 20 per cent. as the figure. If it is much more, it is too much for the keen competition of these days.

Then this percentage must be considered in marking the price on goods. A shoe that is billed at a dollar thus really costs the store when it is sold at least a dollar and twenty cents. If sold for a dollar and a quarter, it may prove a good leader, but it cannot be considered a profit-maker. The merchant who figures to make 25 per cent., or 33 1-3 per cent. profit, and marks goods on that basis, "guessing" that that will allow for all expenses and leave him a good profit, will have a lot of "guessing" to do to find out what has become of the profit he thought he was making.

OMISSIONS

No doubt you've made omissions in your Fall buying. Every merchant makes them---some more, some less.

How to Produce It

Brief Talks Given Monthly
By T. Johnson Stewart

THE WANAMAKER CONCEPTION OF A GREAT STORE'S DUTY TO ITS PUBLIC.

To gather conveniently under one roof all the world's multitudinous products, for personal wear and the furnishing of the home. To select them with expert care and wise discrimination—buying always the best, but buying with such knowledge and judgment that the merchandise may always be sold at the lowest possible price.

Keeping constantly in stock the staple merchandise in general demand, but assuming the greater duty of sending our buyers into strange places and over little-traveled roads, seeking for the new and different things not found in the usual channels of trade.

Always seeking to do a better thing than has been done. Working aggressively with manufacturers to have merchandise better made or manufacturing conditions improved. To place our orders conveniently, so that economies in the cost of production may be secured for our public. To develop constantly newer and better styles and yet have them produced at prices usually lower than equal qualities in commonplace designs.

Recognizing the fact that errors will creep in, to blight the best intentions, in a great institution that depends upon human heads and hands, many of which must be constantly newly trained; but always regarding each fault as monstrous until cured, so that continued error cannot exist.

Providing a store service that is polite, intelligent, prompt and efficient, to make shopping here as pleasant as it is satisfying. Recognizing the fact that good morals and good manners are of as much importance as good merchandising, that the customer's comfort and convenience deserve first thought and that nothing but perfect satisfaction ever seals a sale.

To do every minute the utmost that we know, as the experience of almost half a century has taught; sparing no pains or expense where service or facilities can be improved. To do the best that is known to-day, and still seek for the better to-morrow and do it.

That is the John Wanamaker idea of modern storekeeping.

If one were asked to name the greatest individual power in the world's dry goods industry, one would be compelled to name John Wanamaker of New York and Philadelphia. It is not my intention to eulogize the prowess of this prince of all merchants, but to emphasize those ideals which have served to make the name of Wanamaker a household word all over the continent. From time to time I have warned merchants against the folly of long introductions and the reproduction of this lengthy editorial may seem somewhat inconsistent. But, then, Wanamaker's ad man has something to say—something of vital importance to the buying public. Every now and again the Wanamaker ideals are set before the public in firm but modest language. The big store's methods are betrayed in a way the public likes. It is sound commercial sense to take every probable customer into one's confidence and John Wanamaker's ad man does that at the psychological moment. It is not necessary for us to comment on the methods of this big business institution in detail; let us concentrate our grey matter on the following paragraph for a few minutes:

"Providing a store service that is polite, intelligent, prompt and efficient, to make shopping here as pleasant as it is satisfying. Recognizing the fact that good morals and good manners are of as much importance as good merchandising, that the customer's comfort and convenience deserve first thought and that nothing but perfect satisfaction ever seals a sale."

This is no mere moralizing, but the soundest commercial sense I have read for many a day. It certainly does pay to be polite. The people want more than a merely efficient service, although no service can be called efficient in the best sense when ordinary courtesy is considered of no importance as a business asset. But the point to remember about the editorial is that "perfect satisfaction" and that alone, "seals a sale."

There is a bright future for more than a few dry goods merchants in this Canada of ours. There are a few unknown Wanamakers reading this article right now and they know positively that the editorial we have reproduced mirrors the only known road to commercial supremacy pretty exactly. The coming Wanamakers of this Dominion are just the men who are giving the buying public the best possible values for their money and tendering that service in an efficient and courteous manner.

This may not seem much like an article on Effective Advertising, but those of my readers who dig below the surface of things will readily recognize its value. You may spend considerable money in newspaper publicity, but unless your goods prove the truth of your ads you are playing a losing game. Never make rash promises in your ads. Mean every word you print and you won't take long to win the entire confidence of the people in your vicinity. Let your values talk louder than your advertising and fortune at least is assured you. People lose faith mighty quick in loud talk and tremendous reductions. It is human nature to place one's faith in the merchant who makes it quite plain that he is in business for dollars and cents—not glory. The woman with money to spend does not believe much in charitable institutions and your sale talks are discussed with the man who puts up the coin. You may have flimflammed his father but you can't flimflam that man and it's bad business policy to try.

I've been scanning quite a number of ads lately and this fact seems to have been lost sight of entirely. Many of them are aimed solely at women. While it is true that the ladies buy easily over three-fourths of the world's merchandise, it is erroneous to suppose that the man who pays the bills takes no interest in how his money goes. In most cases your ad is discussed by that man and it will pay most merchants to size him up as a pretty intelligent fellow. A rational story only appeals to him.

We reproduce two ads this issue both of which strongly appeal to me as pretty good salesmanship. The Dundas & Flavelles ad comes pretty near being first-class in every way. The introduction is now of the lengthy sort. The ad-writer in this case gives several strong reasons for holding "The July Clearing Sale"—reasons which will stand analysis. He recites a few facts and then points to the figures in the body of the ad, so that the sceptical may be convinced. The arrangement of this ad throughout is very excellent and betrays the fact that the matter was not thrown at the printer any old way.

The Robert Wright Co. ad is very neat and commendable. The descriptive items call for special study because they are excellent. After a woman has noted the price, nothing appeals so strongly to her as a good description of the article for sale.

There are a number of ads crowded out this month on account of limited space. However, they will come in for their share of attention in our next issue.

"Men's Suits.—High grade English worsteds and all wool Scotch tweeds. S. and D.B. latest three-button style, broad shoulders, long, medium width lapels, close-fitting collars, semi-form fitting back with creased side seams."—Southard, Lethbridge, Alta. Good descriptive advertising.

"Thursday will be 53-cent day in dress goods, and we have selected a lot of unusually good values."—Paquet's, Quebec.

"A business built on values—Goods equal to those seen in the large city stores sold right here in Simcoe at the H. S. Falls Co.'s store at prices that put city prices in the shade. We have made this statement before and are prepared to substantiate it."

"Don't worry about the style of your clothes. Of course it's unpleasant to have an old out-of-date style foisted on you, but if you know of the merits of ——— clothing, and know where to obtain it in this town, who is to blame if you get caught with an old style or a wrong style? The makers take all the worry about style off your shoulders."—J. F. Brownscombe & Co., Uxbridge.

"After Supper Sale, Saturday."—The Playfair, Preston Co., Midland.

"You can buy these goods on Monday at a mere fraction of what they would have cost you three weeks ago. There is not an article that is not usable and highly desirable at this present season. We've held on long enough; you can have them at these Monday bargain prices."—Hudson's Bay Stores, Vancouver.

"Overloaded! The Hutchinson Co., Alliston, find that on account of the backward season their inventory reveals a heavy overplus of stock, which must be sold in 10 days. . . . To all purchasers of $25 worth and over, upon exhibiting their tickets at the cashier's office, a refund will be made of the amount of their return fare to any point in the counties of Grey and Simcoe. . . . Five dollars cash prize will be paid to the man outside of Alliston who brings in and unloads at our store during these ten days the largest load of ladies. . . . We assure every purchaser absolute satisfaction. We guarantee every garment, every price, and every statement here made, and will take back, exchange, or refund the money on any purchase not satisfactory for any reason whatever. Everything marked in plain figures. No juggling with figures—one price to all."

"Children's smart little coats go on sale to-morrow at a price that means a very considerable saving to mother. They're in the short loose-fitting and reefer styles, the latter with military and navy emblems, brass buttons and red braiding; also some smart cravenette coats and nice tweed checks. . . . A most useful line of art sateens at a saving of one-half to the purchasers. They are of heavy quality fabrics in a good selection of ground colors, with flower patterns and figures in nice contrasty effects."—David Spencer, Limited, Vancouver.

"Midsummer green ticket sale."—J. H. Chapman & Co., London.

"Embroidered voile, just five patterns. The leading coloring in each is grey, blue, reseda and mauve, and there is a pretty tinsel stripe that enhances the beauty."

"Your appearance means much to you—or little. The way you dress is but another form of expressing your personality."—Macdonald Bros., men's wear, Sarnia.

"It's much earlier than usual for such an emphatic clearance of women's tailored suits, but we've had such a successful season's selling that we can afford to sacrifice prices now."—James Stark & Sons, Vancouver.

"After supper shopping. Our Saturday night inducements have become so popular, it will be necessary for you to come early."—The Ritchie Co., Belleville.

PROPER BOOKKEEPING OR JAIL

Because he failed through keeping no books, The Canadian Merchants Protective Association have entered proceedings against a man.

The law says:

"Any man who fails and who has not for five years before his failure kept proper books shall be liable to a fine of $800.00 and one year's imprisonment."

It is cheaper to keep proper books than to pay a fine of $800.00 and go to jail for a year, isn't it?

WINDOW DRESSING

THE ART OF DISPLAY

INTERIOR DECORATION

How to Show Fall Millinery

New Selling Policy Makes Heavier Demands Upon the Trimmers—Methods of the City Trimmers.

Even though the high noon of Summer is over the land, it is not too soon for the window trimmer to get busy with plans for the coming Fall. Perhaps you have had the benefit of a visit to some larger centre during the holiday time, perhaps even the privilege of discussing ways, means, and methods with one or more experienced city trimmers. Even if such an advantage has not fallen to your lot, a change of scene has no doubt served to brighten your mind, and you are back at your work, ready and willing to tackle and vanquish the window dressing problems that the Fall season is sure to present.

Millinery Window that Offers Many Useful Suggestions.

The showing of millinery will come first in many cases, as there is an increasing number of stores that hold their openings upon the same date, or just after that upon which the importing houses make their special exhibits. These stores make week-end displays of millinery novelties in the department. When this policy is wholly or partly pursued, there is plenty of work cut out for the trimmer, as he must plan a fetching window display each week. As millinery is a line that requires a fairly elaborate background to show it to advantage, this way of doing business gives him a good deal of advance planning.

The background is, after all, the foundation of the window display, particularly when it is dressed for a special event. There is a growing tendency to install permanent backgrounds. They have much to recommend them on the score of economy, both of time and expense. Mirrors, or hardwood paneling, are the chief permanent backgrounds used. Both have points for and against them. Mirrors are excellent for millinery, garment, and fancy displays, but are not desirable when piece goods are to be shown. Even for the showing of millinery, etc., the trimmer, in his endeavor to get new and interesting effects, often either wholly or partly covers his permanent backgrounds. Fringes and festoons of ribbon and flowers, etc., are used, and the mirrors are often wholly or partially veiled with tarlatan or muslin. Sometimes a fabric of this class is stretched over the face of the mirror, and trailing leaves, vines or grasses painted upon it, in monotone. The painting can be done directly upon the glass if desired. This treatment is somewhat of a novelty and gives good results. Another excellent idea is to wholly or partially cover the mirror with gilded or silvered poultry netting and intertwine trails of flowers or vines. A panel or scroll, both top and bottom, should be used with the netting.

Hardwood paneling is much favored when frequent window changes have to be made. By its use both time and material are saved. The wood paneling, as a general rule, gives a sombre effect that forms an excellent foil for most lines of goods. These paneled backgrounds are handsome and dignified, but their chief fault is that when they are frequently used they are apt to give a monotonous tone to the display. The public, after a time, become familiar with them, and are apt to go by the windows with only a passing glance. They catch sight of the same old background and conclude there is nothing new to see; therefore, interest is lost in the window display.

The monotone millinery window illustrated in this number was in mauve and violet shades. As mauve and violet are coming strongly to the front now in Paris and promise to become prominent in high class millinery this Fall, a detailed description of this window may be of value. The curtain was of mauve sateen, veiled with cream Madras muslin. The straight panel above the curtain, and the frame of the poster, were sawn from boards and covered plainly with felt, of a medium shade of helio. The foliage used was sprays of white geranium leaves, with shaded mauve and violet edges. Half way from the front of the window a step was built, and it and the rest of the floor were covered with pale mauve felt. All the millinery shown was in mauve and violet shades.

Millinery Window Dressed for G. E. Fraser Sons, Picton.

The display was varied in many ways, and though well balanced, had none of that exact repetition that gives sameness and tameness to many windows. Note the small stand, or table, in the right corner, the way in which the poster is placed, and the arrangement of the bust forms. In using this window as a guide, if a poster cannot be obtained, a large mirror might effectively take its place.

This window is well worth careful study as it presents an excellent example of the more artistic manner of making a millinery display. It is not crowded, for, though the window is a large one, only fourteen hats are shown. Its artistic, its educative, and also its selling power is heightened by the introduction of other accessories. Handsome ribbons, laces, gloves, parasols, etc., are used, for this was a Spring window. This using of other lines of goods is a practice resorted to freely by the trimmers in the big Montreal and Toronto stores.

A tan color scheme based upon that of the mauve window would be a good one. Tans and browns are much to the fore now, and all the new colors, even the new greys, tone in excellently with them.

The panel and frame for the poster might be of tan or leather-colored felt or plush, edged with a gilt picture molding, the curtains of soft yellow tan, or deep yellow.

veiled with cream Madras, and the foliage in green and Autumn tints. The floor covering should be pale tan or cream and a handsome gilt fancy chair or stand, or both, might be attractively used, as well as a figure.

The best trimmers introduce one or more figures into their millinery windows. This adds to the interest and makes the display both more authoritative and attractive. From the milliner's point of view it is also a benefit, for when a figure is utilized the hat can be shown in the proper position upon the head. The manner in which the hat is worn changes almost every season. The new Fall models are worn very far back, and showing much of the front hair, which is arranged in a loose and fluffy

Recessed Vestibule, by means of which Display Space may be Nearly Doubled manner. As much of the effectiveness of the new millinery depends upon the placing of the hat properly upon the head, and the proper dressing of the hair, the value of a figure in a millinery window is easily grasped.

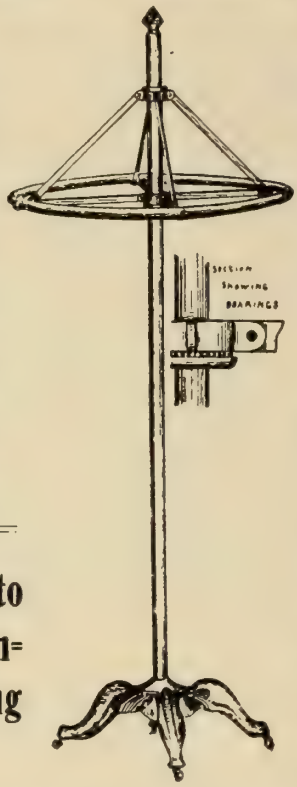
Drapes on Home-made Stands

How to Use Some of the Stands Illustrated in the July Review.

Store decorators who have spent, or will spend, a little time in putting together a few of the home-made stands illustrated in the July Review, will have for the minimum amount of expense the nucleus for a big variety of novel and original drapes. These stands and their possibilities deserve careful study, and the experienced decorator will, with their help, be able to design and execute, quite a variety of new drapes.



Just to put the man of less experience on the right track, The Review is giving a couple of ideas that have actually been worked out. These he can use as a guide and basis upon which to build his own. Both drapes shown are practical, and well within the reach of the average decorator's resources.

Drape 1 was worked out in soft, clinging silk and wool fabrics of the veiling class, and is best adapted for materials of that kind. Soft, light weight woolens would also easily adapt themselves to this drape. A handsome umbrella with a crook handle—the original was of pearl and gold—is tied securely, in a slanting position, to the upright of the stand. One portion of the goods is arranged through the crook, and another part of the material goes over the half-circle that forms the head of the stand. The rest is merely a matter of artistic draping.

Drape 2 is rather more complicated, though perhaps not so much so as it appears at first sight. A T stand furnishes the beginning of the group. The horizontal bar is hidden by an ornate umbrella in the sketch, but its place could be filled in many other ways. For instance, a handsome trimming, or lace, or a fancy ribbon, could be festooned over the stand, with the ends arranged over the lower part of the drape. The upper portion is a waist form with a handsome waist of net or lace upon it. A soft finished fancy novelty silk is draped over the waist to simulate one of the jumper or Japanese effects now so much worn. A hat or a fancy stand completes the group. Gloves and other accessories, such as belts, neckwear, shopping bags, hosiery, etc., can also be used. Should a waist stand not be obtainable, a corset form will make a good substitute. If you use a corset form you will have to cover the skirt part with crepe paper, etc. The sleeves must be well padded out with soft paper,

DRY GOODS REVIEW

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS

SHOW CARD WRITING

BY CRAFTSMAN. (Continued from July Number.)

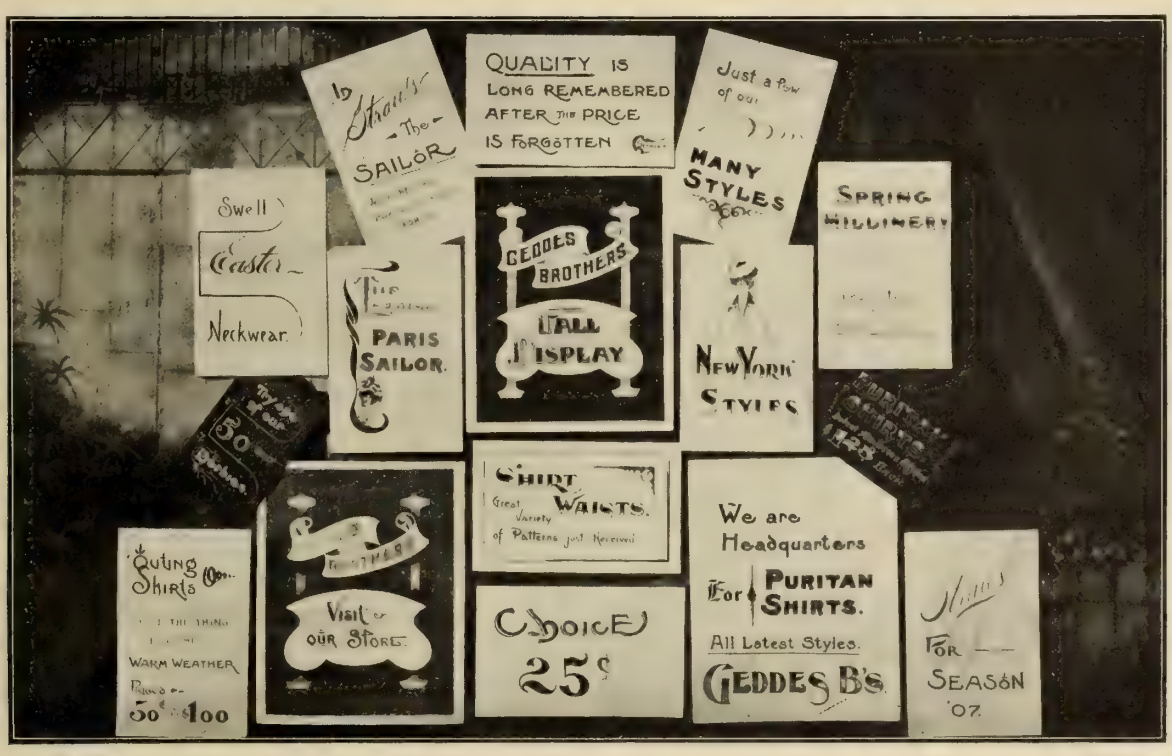
If you desire to duplicate scrolls you must, of course, copy the structural or main lines through tracing paper with a very soft pencil and transfer in reversed position by placing the side of your paper having the lead pencil marks downward on your card, then using a hard pencil and tracing over the soft lead design, which will show through the paper distinctly. The pressure of the hard pencil transfers the soft lead marks to your card. For instance, if you take this scroll, No. 25, and insert it you will see that the beauty of the design is not only not lessened, but, perhaps, intensified.

The student should practice making designs in this reversed position. In this manner they can readily be duplicated in this reversed position also by rubbing a soft pencil over the entire surface of that side on which you have used the hard pencil. Then trace over the original soft pencil marks by using a hard pencil. Transfer carbon paper can also be used to good advantage. When writing large scrolls the hand is generally entirely raised from the surface of the table.

Centre and Side Scrolls.

For show cards, scrolls like A to G in illustration are used with good effect under words to emphasize them or to make a paragraph. The side scrolls are used to great advantage to fill in a space, to place on one end of a word, or on both sides of it. In the latter case to make them exact they should be transferred as explained in a previous lesson.

Embossed Ornaments.



Gold ornaments like those on the corners of card No. 210 and in the centre of No. 217 illustrated in a previous issue are imported from Germany. The first are in squares forming sheets, having 100 to the sheet. The rings are packed in nests, beginning with those one-half inch in diameter and ranging in various sizes to five inches wide. The same may be bought in ovals.

To fasten embossed ornaments, the best method is to spread glue across a pane of glass, place the backs of the ornaments on the glass, then take a paper, cover them, and use considerable pressure of your hand while stroking and rubbing the top of the paper. With a pair of tweezers place the ornaments in position wanted, and with a narrow roller such as is used by paperhangers, roll over the ornaments, which will then be firmly attached to the card. The gold rope rings such as are used in the centre of No. 211 are made by a machine, which embosses it and sinks it into the body of the card, so that it is firmly embedded.

Flitter.

Flitter is a flaky tinsel which is sold by the pound or ounce at all paint or supply stores. It can be obtained in gold, silver, purple, green, fire gilt, and a variety of other colors. It is frequently used on signs intended for night display or holiday purposes. It is best applied by using thinly diluted glue, just like paint. Place a large sheet of paper under your card and spread a liberal quantity of flitter on its surface, being careful that every portion of the wet glue lines is completely covered with the flitter by gliding it along the entire surface of the card by raising and lowering one end. Then shake off any surplus flitter onto the paper beneath.

If you wish to display a line of gold flitter next to a line of green or other color of flitter, repeat the same process after you have applied one color. Then allow the card to dry thoroughly before handling it.

Show Cards Made by Chas. E. Weeks, with Geddes Bros., Strathroy.

Bronze.

Bronze can be bought in many colors. Pale gold and aluminum (instead of silver) are the most in use by show card writers, though the latter is seldom used. It is advisable to place it in a small bottle. This will keep it free from moisture and it is more cleanly and readily handled than if it is allowed to remain in the paper ounce packages in which it is enclosed when purchased.

Take a quantity and place it in a cup or glass, add enough mucilage to make a thick, stiff paste, stirring and grinding it thoroughly against the sides with a round stick. Add enough water to thin it to the consistency of a thin syrup.

Bronze liquid, which is varnish and turpentine, can be used to mix with bronze, and after it is applied to any surface the same will dry hard and be nicely bronzed. Another method is to cover any object with shellac diluted in alcohol. This dries rapidly. As soon as it becomes tacky apply the bronze powder with a dry bristle brush. Some use a piece of black velvet for the same pupose.

Mat Cutting.

A straight-edge, cutting knife, lead pencil and an oil-stone for keeping th blade keen and sharp, constitute the equipment of the mat cutter. Examine the Christmas card on Page 113, June Dry Goods Review. The light background and the oval on top are marked out on a sheet of Manila paper the same size as the entire card. The mat cutter then places it on a sheet of mat card, and with his knife, which has two curved, sharp edges, shaped somewhat like an ink eraser and encased in a strong handle, he cuts out the shape, holding his knife in a slanting position, which makes its edges beveled. This mat then serves as a pattern for the others to be cut, and is laid on the mat card, the pattern edges being quickly traced by running a pencil point along its surface. Expert cutters merely lay on a cut-out mat, following its contour with the knife.

Corner Scrolls.

Figs. 8 to 12 in July issue offer excellent examples of corner scrolls to be used on cards instead of plain edge-lines. Fig. 14 is a modest centre scroll design. Fig. 15 is of difficult construction, being different on both sides and requiring much practice. It is an appropriate side scroll for any light-faced, lettered panel, and can be effectively used as a centre, top or bottom scroll. Fig. 13 forms a neat, readily learned panel that can be utilized in many ways.

Beveling.

Card beveling is also a distinct business. The beveler clamps from twenty-five to fifty cards in a wooden screw vise. The cards are so arranged that one overlaps the others, according to the thickness of its edge. With special hand planes the entire pack is planed smooth, gold sizing is applied, and metal or gold leaf burnished on top of this. All four sides being thus treated, the cards are finished. You can bevel your cards with a knife, one at a time, and, if desired, can readily gild the edges with gold bronze.

HOPE AHEAD.

A committee of shareholders who waited upon the superintendent of a Californian mine in days gone by to ask why the said mine hadn't panned out anything but calls upon shareholders, were graciously received, invited to be seated, and the official explained:

"Gentlemen, you are all aware of the fact that we had scarcely begun work when the mouth of our mine was blocked by a landslide. That put us back a month."

They nodded their remembrance.

"Then we had just got in shape to take out 4,000 tons of ore, worth $2,000 per ton, when the mine caved in. You recall it?"

They did.

"Once more we bent ourselves to the burden of reaping $500 for every $10 invested when the mine was flooded by a subterranean river."

That was true also.

"Then we had just got the water out when we discovered that our mine was located on another man's claim. We had him shot to prevent trouble, and once more we were about to declare a dividend of 200 per cent. when the dead man's [illegible] put in an appearance. There were three of them. We chased one over the range, had another hung by the vigilance committee, and I am happy to inform you that I have four men out after the other, and am every hour expecting to hear that he has tumbled off a cliff. Gentlemen, there is hope ahead—golden hope. Please come up and drink with me, after which there will be another call of 10 per cent. from you!"

PREPARED.

Mrs. Greene met a friend, and in the course of conversation, remarked:

"My husband's birthday comes next week."

"Well," asked the other lady, "what gift are you choosing for him?"

Mrs. Greene smiled proudly as she replied:

"I've been taking a cigar out of his case every day for the last three months. I've got a hundred now, and I'll give them to him for a birthday present."

ONLY THEN.

A smartly dressed young man was chatting with a prominent financier of a most economical disposition, when the latter suddenly drew attention to the suit of clothes he was then wearing.

"I never pay fancy prices for made-to-order garments," he said. "Now, here's a suit for which I paid $12. Appearances are very deceptive. If I told you I purchased it for $20 or $25, you'd probably believe that to be the truth."

"I would if you told me by telephone," replied the young man.

Backward Spring Helped Deliveries—Stocks Now in Good Shape—Clear of Both Heavy and Lightweight Underwear.

Continued warm weather during June and July has done much to change the face of the underwear situation. The early Spring business opened up briskly, but was almost completely checked by the cold weather during April and May. It looked then as though the season was to be very poor. June days set the ball of trade arolling, and the counter demand has been a brisk one during the past two months. This retail business has resulted in the sending in of frequent sorting orders, which have made a big inroad into the stocks held by the jobbing houses.

Though much complaint has been heard of the backward season, it would seem, in the light of the present situation, that it has helped the jobbers and manufacturers. It has certainly prevented the register of many kicks about delayed deliveries. It has given them time to catch up with orders, and has enabled them to get stocks into fairly good shape. Notwithstanding all trouble, it will be found, when the half-yearly stock-taking operations are over, that the Spring underwear business has been fully up to, if not over, the average. One thing is certain: Scarcity and high prices, have had a distinctly educative value, for both the retailer and the consumer. They have—and more quickly than any other set of circumstances would have done—educated them to the advantage of buying the better grades. The buying of better grades is now the rule over the whole of the Dominion.

Prices are holding very firm, for both cotton and woolen underwear. The underlying scarcity is also a feature that causes trouble. The present cotton situation is giving cause for uneasiness regarding future prices, present crop reports being of an unfavorable nature. The fact that a shorter crop than that of last year is predicted, coupled with the inferior nature of much of the 1906 cotton, seems to assure the continuance of high prices.

The prices for cotton underwear now selling for the Spring of 1908 show already a small advance.

Those retailers who may have an overstock at the end of the selling season have no cause for worry. They will, in all probability, congratulate themselves on the fact, before the end of the Spring of 1908. At any rate, they will get full price for their goods.

Retailers report a growing demand for lighter weights, in all kinds of underwear. Sheer goods are in increasing favor, particularly with the better trade. This is a tendency that, in the present market situation, meets with the approval of the manufacturers and for obvious reasons. There are signs, however, that this tendency has a more lasting basis than the present high price of raw material. It is to better heating facilities the wearing of furs and long outdoor wraps, etc., that it may, with more truth be attributed. In connection with this increased demand for lightweight, high-class goods it is interesting to note that a company is now seeking a suitable location for the manufacture of lisle thread underwear in the Dominion.

Hosiery

Fancies Growing Stronger—White, Tan and Brown for 1908—Blue Hose Worn With Tan Shoes.

There will be little price-cutting in the hosiery department, as desirable stocks on hand are by no means heavy. Buyers' troubles will not end with the present season, as there is still no sign of the supply overtaking the demand. Buyers, both for the wholesale and retail trade, have placed big orders at a much earlier date than usual, simply to be sure of having the goods on hand when the selling season opens.

Reports from the Chemnity district show that the past year has been one of remarkable prosperity, and that prospects point to another flourishing season in that centre. Factories have worked to their fullest extent, without, in the majority of cases, being able to meet current orders. Profits have reached no extravagant figure, owing to the high price of raw materials, and the higher wage scale paid. The trade is now limited only by the capacity of the mills, and by the difficulty experienced in securing competent operatives. Prices have, under these conditions, risen, but as the increase has been less marked upon the better and finer grades, and also owing to the greater reduction in quality in the cheaper lines, the better goods have come into increased consumption. This has been very noticeable in the retail departments, where the 35-cent and 50-cent hose are the leading lines, in place of the 15-cent and 25-cent of a season or so ago.

High prices have, in this case, an educative tendency that ought to be of permanent benefit to the hosiery department, and one that the manager and buyer ought not to lose sight of.

The big Summer demand has been for white, though tans are, and promise to continue, heavy sellers. Colored hosiery, particularly with the better trade, have sold steadily. No one color has been the leader, but pale blue, Dresden blues, rose, helio, nile, yellow, grey, etc., have all sold remarkably well, in the higher priced silk and lisle goods. A tendency not to be ignored is the wearing of hose to match the gown, and with a black shoe. A buyer for a high-class department assures The Review that this fashion is becoming pronounced with his customers; in fact, the general trade tendency is all in favor of fancy lines. This may not be an unmixed blessing, as it makes buying and stock-keeping more difficult, but it undoubtedly leads to a large increase in counter sales.

Tan and brown shoes are regarded as a certainty for the early Spring and Summer in 1908. It was in February last year that the first free development in the wearing of tans and browns took place. As a consequence tan and brown hosiery will certainly be heavy sellers. There is no need, however, to stock a big variety of shades, golden brown, and just a good medium shade of tan is all that is necessary.

A fashion development that promises to have some effect upon the selling next season is announced from the American Summer resorts. This is the fashion of wearing navy or blue hose with tan or brown shoes. Tan or brown shoes with matching hose have been freely worn with a navy gown, but the hose as now worn matches the gown, not the shoe. Considering the growing favor of navy, and medium dark blues, for dress purposes, this development may have an important influence upon Spring lines of hosiery.

The demand for fancies seems to grow stronger, and hosiery novelties find a ready sale. Newer developments are largely in the embroidered line, and though laces are well worn, embroidered effects are decidedly in the lead. Sheer goods, and gauzes are in high favor.

Children's hose follows the fashions of their elders, and white, tans, and colors are splendid sellers. All-over lace sox have sold well this Summer in white and tan, in the city stores. Black is, of course, staple, and has to be stocked in quantity.

AFTER THE SHUTTERS ARE UP

Mr. Topnoody lighted his cigar the other evening after supper, just before starting down town, and Mrs. Topnoody looked at him and said :

"You smoke good cigars, don't you, Topnoody ?"

"I try to, my dear."

"I heard a lady say to-day her husband told her you smoked the seven-for-a-shilling kind."

"The scoundrel !" said Mr. Topnoody, indignantly.

"I told her I knew you had better taste than that."

"Of course I have, my dear, and I'm glad you defended me. I smoke only the best, and these cost 6d apiece, wholesale."

"How many do you smoke a day ?"

"I smoke only about half a dozen; but I give away enough to make it average as many as ten a day. There is nothing mean about me, my dear, in that sort of thing."

"Ten a day," said his wife, meditatively; "three hundred and sixty-five days in a year; 3,650 cigars a year, at 6d apiece, amounts to £91 5s. Topnoody, I want a £20 costume."

"What ? You shock me ! Why, I can't afford it. I never wear any £20 clothes."

"All the same, I'm going to have it, and if I have to select it I'll get one for £25, Topnoody."

"But, my dear——"

"Don't 'but' me, Topnoody. You may be a goat, but I'm no target."

"Good heavens, woman, you'll bankrupt me with your reckless extravagance !"

"You think I'm extravagant, do you ?"

"Yes, I do; you are extravagant in everything, from your jaw to your housekeeping."

"Not everything, Topnoody."

"Name one thing you're not extravagant in, and I'll give you a dozen costumes, if I have to mortgage the house to do it."

"Will you ? Well I'll tell you mighty quick. I'm not extravagant in my admiration of a man named Topnoody, and I——"

Topnoody did not remain to hear the conclusion.

Mrs. Newwed : "My dear, as you said, we must do everything possible to economize. I have been at work turning my old dresses, and I can make most of them do another year. It won't take me over six weeks, and then I'll re-shape and trim my old bonnets."

Mr. Newwed : "That's very sensible, I must say."

Mrs. Newwed : "I have also been trying to patch up my old shoes, and I believe they'll last six months longer, and I've turned that old carpet we bought second-hand, and given it a thorough washing, so that it will do very nicely, and I'm going to make some curtains for the upstairs windows, to avoid buying new ones."

Mr. Newwed : "Eminently sensible, my dear."

Mrs. Newwed : "And I've sent off the washerwoman and discharged the girl. I will do all the work myself."

Mr. Newwed : "You're an angel, my love."

Mrs. Newwed : "And I took that box of expensive cigars you bought and exchanged them for two boxes of cheaper ones."

Mr. Newwed : "Now, look here; economy is a good thing, but there is no need for you to become an unreasoning, fanatical monomaniac on the subject."

The Boy : "Please, sir, I 've come for the job of errand boy at this shop."

The Boss : "But I don't want an errand boy, I've got one already."

The lady walked into the shop with a light in her eye that filled the grocer with nervous anticipation.

"Been rubbin' my 'all linoleum with that stuff this last two hours," she sniffed, as she banged a pot on the counter, "and the 'arder I rub the worse it gets. It'll be a long while afore I buy anything on your recommendation again, I'm sure. Accordin' to you I was only to show the oilcloth a dab o' this floor polish and I could see my face in it."

The grocer waited patiently till the lady was out of breath.

"You have my sympathy, madam," he said courteously, " you'll remember buying some potted ham and tongue at the same time ?"

"Well ?"

"There it is, madam," and the man in the apron pointed to the half emptied pot the woman had laid on the counter.

"Then it's rough on my 'usband, that's all I can say," gasped the lady. "Poor George's spendin' the only day's 'oliday 'e gets in the year fishin', and, if this 'ere's the 'am and tongue, 'es either got to starve 'isself till 'e gets 'ome or eat floor polish sandwiches !"

A Supply Credit Business

By HOWARD R. WELLINGTON.

Having gone into a plan for conducting the fishing end of the business under discussion, it has been suggested that a few words along the line of the inside end of the business might not be out of place.

The accounts necessary for such a business would be: 1, merchandise, (which may be subdivided into two others —purchases and sales); 2, fixtures and equipment; 3, accounts receivable (with customers); 4, bills receivable; 5, cash and bank (which may be kept in the cash book); 6, real estate and schooners; 7, expenses; 8, wages or salaries; 9, bills payable; 10, accounts payable (with creditors); capital account.

As a practical illustration, suppose the business has been conducted successfully for one year, and it is desired to ascertain just what profit has been made, and also how the business stands at the expiration of this time.

Depreciation written off from profits on trips	$1,500
		7,300
Equipment, etc. (original valuation)	$3,500
Depreciation written off from general profits	500
		3,000
Accounts and bills payable		25,000

With these particulars we will proceed to open up the necessary accounts to ascertain the net profits for the period, and also the standing of the business.

The items of depreciation and gain on vessels in the above account were obtained from the accounts outlined in July Special. The net gain is then transferred to the proprietor's account, or partnership accounts, and a portion of the amount usually left at the credit of profit and loss account. It will be seen by looking carefully into the accounts outlined that the fishing end of the business is kept entirely separate from the trading in the store, except when ascertaining the net profit for the period.

If full information is desired in regard to the expense account, it may be subdivided into a number of auxiliary accounts, such as postage and stationery, heat and light, rent and taxes, etc.

The stock should be valued at actual cost, as per invoice, even though values may fluctuate, as it is the only fair method to have each year stand on its own merits.

In next issue we will outline a cash book suitable for such a business as is being discussed, and also show the final statement of the business and present worth.

WORK AND THINK.

Hammer, tongs, and anvils ringing,
'Waking echoes all day long,
In a deep-toned voice are singing
Thrifty Labor's iron song.
From a thousand flywheels bounding,
From a thousand humming looms,
Night and day the notes are sounding
Through the misty fact'ry rooms.
Listen ! workman to their playing—
There's advice in ev'ry clink;
Still they're singing—still they're saying—
Whilst you labor, learn to think !

Think what power lies within you,
For what triumphs ye are formed,
If, in aid of bone and sinew,
Hearts by emulation warmed,
Mighty thought ye woo and cherish.
What shall hold your spirits down ?
What shall make your high hopes perish ?
What shall ye mind Fortune's frown ?
Do ye wish for profit, pleasure ?
Thirst at Learning's fount to drink ?
Crave ye honor, fame, or treasure ?
Ye the germs have—work, and think !

Think ! but not alone of living,
Like the horse, from day to day;
Think ! but not alone of giving
Health for pelf, or soul for pay !
Think ! Oh, be machines no longer—
Engines made of flesh and blood !
Think ! 'twill make you fresher, stronger !
Link you to the great and good !
Thought exalts and lightens labor;
Thought forbids the soul to sink !
Self-respect and love for neighbor
Mark the men who work—and think !

Think !—and let the thought new-nerve you—
Think of men who've gone before,
Leaving lustrous names to serve you;
Yours the path they've plodded o'er !
Freedom fights and wins her charter
With the sword of thought—the pen!
Tyranny can find no quarter
In the ranks of thinking men.
Think ! for thought's a wand of power—
Power to make oppression shrink;
Grasp ye, then, the precious dower !
Poise it—wield it—work, and think !

Hold your heads up, toiling brothers;
'Mongst us be it ne'er forgot,
Labor, for ourselves and others,
Is for man a noble lot.
Nobler far, and holier, higher,
Than vain luxury can claim,
If but zeal and worth inspire,
And true greatness be our aim.
Power to compass this is given—
Power that forms the strongest link
'Twixt an upright man and Heaven,
His noblest power—the power to think !

IF HE WERE A MILLIONAIRE.

Pat and Tim were working side by side, and enlivening their labor with flashes of imagination.

"Well, now, if I had a million pounds left to me I'd know well how I'd be spending it," said Pat, resting his pick against a convenient wall and looking at it with great distaste.

"How would you be doing it?" inquired Tim.

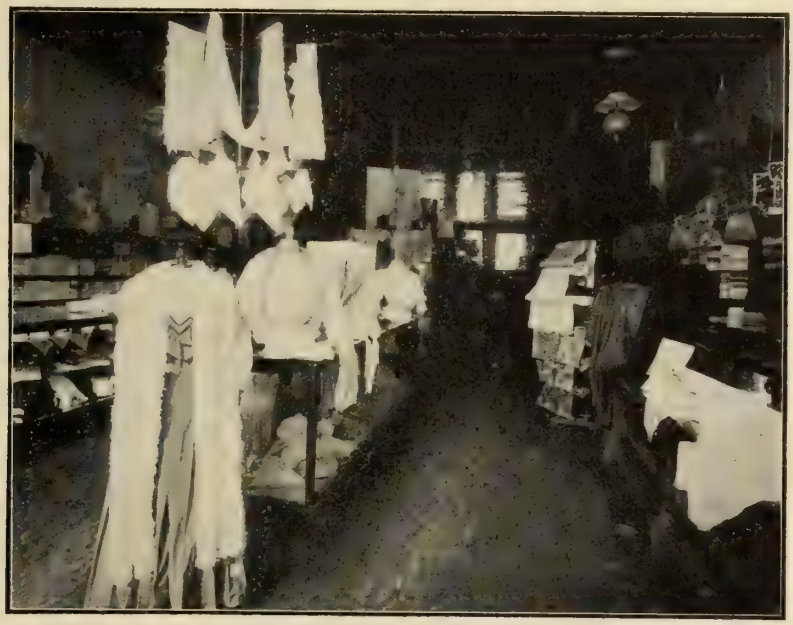
"I'd go to wan o' thim big hotels," said Pat, "and I'd tell the b'y, 'Have me called at six o'clock to-morrow morning?' Then I'd go to me room and pull down the blinds, and whin first they called me I'd not answer, and whin they called me louder I'd say, 'Go away wid yez! I'm not obliged to be working! I've got money'."

"Aw!" remarked Tim, as he once more began work.

"Well, what would you do if you wor a millionaire?" demanded Pat.

"Me?" said Tim. "I'd have a half-fut more len'th to this pick-handle, and save me poor back."

NOT SUCH A FOOL AFTER ALL.



A young man returned a few days ago from a trip to South Africa for his health, and in narrating his adventures to his father he told him he had bought a silver mine for $5,000.

"I knew they'd swindle you," exclaimed the old man, angrily. "So you were fool enough to buy a bogus mine?"

"Yes; but I didn't lost anything. I formed a company, and sold the stock to a London man for $7,000."

"You—you d-did?" gasped the old man, turning pale. "I'll bet I'm the one who bought it."

"I know you are," coolly observed the young man as he lit a cigar.

Retail Merchants in Convention

Annual Session of Ontario Division of Association—Sixty Per Cent. of Members Behind With Their Fees—Attendance Small but Enthusiastic.

The annual convention of the Ontario division of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, was held at Hamilton. The attendance was small, but some very interesting addresses were delivered, and the various discussions were spirited. The financial report was far from encouraging. The total receipts for the year amounted to $4,583, and there was a balance of $783, but the salary of neither the secretary nor the treasurer had been paid. Out of 5,233 members it was reported that only 2,068, less than 40 per cent., had paid their fees. The association has now in Ontario 142 branches.

The secretary then presented a lengthy list of resolutions for consideration.

"That whereas we have prepared by-laws licensing abd regulating pedlars and transient traders and put them into operation in a great many cities and towns throughout the province, and we have found that the act upon which they are based requires amending, that we authorize the legislative committee to prepare the necessary amendments, and that we endeavor to secure the passage of the same at the next session of the Provincial Legislature."

This resolution involved considerable discussion, the result of which was simply to demonstrate the unworkable and tangled nature of the present act. The present act had been amended along lines suggested by the association, and the opinion prevailed that what was now wanted was not more amendments, but a new act. Various delegates reported that their respective municipal solicitors had been befuddled by it. The law provides different treatment for pedlars and transient traders, and sometimes the distinction was not understood. The motion was carried.

"That whereas, there is a clause in the municipal art empowering city councils to put the early-closing bylaw into operation without the consent of the merchants we ask that this clause be repealed."

This resolution came from Ottawa and had resulted from one stage of that city's complicated struggle with the early-closing movement. Now peace reigned and President Ellis, who is from Ottawa, opposed it and it was finally withdrawn. It, however, furnished occasion for an interesting discussion of the early-closing movement. Chairman Ellis stated that the clerks in Ottawa had taken the matter up and circulated a petition on the basis of a six o'clock closing for everyone. The merchants got up a counter petition for seven o'clock. The clerks had won out with the council, it being near election time. Then the struggle turned upon the right of a merchant to withdraw his name from a petition he had signed, and the bylaw was quashed. In the meantime, however, even those opposed to early-closing had enjoyed the practice of it and they were willing to continue closing at six ordinarily and nine on Saturday. This had been confirmed by bylaw and was working out splendidly, the president stated. The question of whether or not a person who signed a petition had the right to later withdraw his name had been appealed and an authoritative decision was being sought in the courts.

Saturday Night Closing.

Adam Ballentine is deeply interested in securing an early Saturday night closing for Hamilton. Business was not, now, he said, in the shape it was a few years ago. Classifications were not so well marked. All grocers sold fruit, many sold fish and meat. It was impossible to define any class of business and an attempt to do so would make the law ineffective. He hoped for a law that would require all places of business, with the exception, perhaps, of druggists, to close at a reasonable hour, especially on Saturday night. It would be a great reform. He thought it would be well to have the whole question carefully considered by a committee.

No action was taken.

"Whereas, railway companies very frequently charge much greater weight on freight bills than the articles really weigh and that we desire this board to take the matter up and lay the same, through our Dominion Board, before the railway commissioners."

Several delegates reported experience corroborative of the stated fact of the resolution. It was carried.

The following resolutions were passed rapidly and practically without discussion:

New Tariff Fault.

That, whereas, under the new tariff regulations, a duty of 15 per cent. is charged on British packings and wrappings, and 20 per cent. on foreign; and, whereas, these wrappings and packages in most cases are almost valueless when they come here and they cost four or five times there what they are worth here; therefore, we ask this convention to instruct our Dominion Board to have some action taken in the matter.

That we request the Dominion Board to look into the registered mail laws and see that we get the same protection from the Dominion Government as we do from express companies in case of loss.

That, whereas, demurrage is charged to the coal dealers on all railway cars that are not emptied within 48 hours, therefore, we think that it is only right that railroads should be compelled to pay the same rate when they hold and detain cars laden with coal for dealers; and we desire that this board request the Dominion Board to call the attention to the Dominion Railway Commission to this matter.

That, whereas, a change is being made in the publication and sale of school books, by the Ontario Government, we, therefore, request them to have the retail price so fixed that price-cutters and departmental stores cannot use them for advertising purposes.

That, whereas, a bill was introduced in the Ontario Legislature by Mr. Gamey to amend the Assessment Act whereby all retail merchants in the Province of Ontario will be assessed on the value of the stock owned by them instead of on the business assessment as at present; and, whereas, it is proposed to exempt all stock that is not paid for and thereby go back to the old syetem, it will, therefore, in our opinion, be unfair to those who own their stock and benefit those whose stock is purchased on credit; and, whereas, the Provincial Board opposed this bill, it was laid over for further consideration.

Department for Business.

That, whereas, no provision has been made by the Dominion Government to keep a record of information to tabulate facts relative to the retail trade of the Dominion, and as the laboring and agricultural classes have well equipped departments and have large sums spent upon them each year, we consider it advisable that our association take such steps as to have provision made under the Department of Trade and Commerce so that the retail interests of Canada can be looked after as well as the above named classes.

Mr. Mather, of Sterling, was not clear as to the usefulness of the proposition and Mr. Trowern made it clear.

That, whereas, considerable trouble has been experienced by some retail merchants in employing assistance, we, therefore, request the Provincial Board to prepare and submit to the branches a form for employes to sign that would safeguard the interests of both employer and employes.

That, whereas, the Dominion Government propose introducing legislation to regulate the sale of patent and proprietary medicines; and, whereas, we believe that a well-considered measure would be of benefit to the general public and to the trade, we are also of the opinion that any attempt to place a special tax on any preparation to pay the expense of carrying out such legislation, would be the beginning of perhaps special taxation on other lines of the retail trade; and, we, therefore, ask the Provincial Board to use every effort to oppose this unfair proposal.

That, whereas, if the present Gold and Silver Marking Act should become law it will very injuriously affect the retail jewelry trade of Canada; and, whereas, through the efforts of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada an extension of its operation was secured for eight months from July 13, 1907, we consider it absolutely necessary that every retail jeweler in Canada should assist the association in preparing proper legislation and securing the same at the next session of the Dominion House.

Against Co-operative Trading.

The following resolution was made the occasion by Treasurer Moyer of an appeal for association support. He asserted that the proposed law would demoralize the retail trade and that it was simply a plan to furnish work for promoters. Such co-operative undertakings would flourish as long as people continued to pay their money in, just as the defunct York Loan had. The resolution was passed as follows:

That, whereas, a bill was introduced at Ottawa at the last session and will likely be brought forward again at the coming session by the Hon. Mr. Monk, asking the Government to endorse co-operative societies and to give them special privileges to the detriment of retail trade; and, whereas, this measure was successfully opposed by our Dominion Board, that this meeting endorse their action and give them every possible assistance if any further attempts are made to have its provisions made law.

"That the time has arrived for the Federal Government to enact and enforce a rigorous law to protect the public against impure and harmful foods and drugs, and to deal with misleading or untruthful designating names or statements of composition and to prohibit the manufacture or sale of any such articles and to prohibit the manufacture or sale of any compounds purporting to be and designed to lead the consumer to the belief that they are pure and wholesome representative articles of food or medicine and that the Government be petitioned to establish standards of quality for all spices, condiments, vinegars, baking powders, canned or preserved meats, vegetables or other foods and medicines sold under proprietary or trade names, and to otherwise enforce the intention of the Food and Drugs Act, and that this resolution be placed before the Federal Government and the whole question be dealt with by a committee of our association and the Inland Revenue Department."

The impression prevailed that the situation turned largely upon the question of standards.

Unfair Government Methods.

H. C. Beckett was present and spoke in regard to maple products, holding that the Government authorities were not acting fairly in the maeter. A pure sugar syrup, maple flavored, was preferred by many people to the maple syrup. His firm had got in a shipment of maple flavored, but the labels did not bear the word "compound" in conformity with the act. They had had the word printed on separate slips and pasted across the original labels and had submitted this labeling to the Department of Inland Revenue. The officials there had approved this label. Later, officials took samples of the syrup from customers of Gillard & Co., and because of the technical infringement of the law in the labeling taxed the retailers the cost of the analyses, about $9 each, notwithstanding the fact that the department had approved the label Gillard & Co. were asked to pay, but refused, and with a view to testing the matter, asked the department to sue for the amount. That the department did not do, but collected the fines from the retailer who paid rather than appear in court. Mr. Beckett thought it was not fair for the department to allow a big firm, that was prepared to fight, go, and collect from retailers sums for which they were not legally liable.

Mr. Beckett stated that last year the Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States had engaged an expert for pure food work and the information gathered was at the disposal of the Retail Merchants' Association for the asking.

The motion was carried unanimously.

To Keep the Home Trade.

The following resolution, intended primarily to combat mail-order business, occasioned considerable talk:

"That our branches should make united efforts to secure all the possible trade in their respective localities and see if some means can be adopted to secure much of the business now going to mail order and other houses."

Mr. Taylor, of Hanover, the mover of the resolution, explained that people in the country often wanted something they felt was not worth going to town for and sent to the mail order house. He thought that if all the merchants in a town combined in their advertising they could collectively retain a good deal of trade that has now got away from them.

Ald. Farrar, Hamilton, said the department store campaign was largely educative. Those houses made large reductions at certain seasons of the year which gave the impression through the country that they were always low in price. But their expenses were very heavy, and he was convinced that the retail merchant who took his discounts could beat the mail order houses by good values, kind treatment, and up-to-date goods.

Secretary Trowern said they were not opposed to the catalogue house as such, but they were opposed to fraud and misrepresentation, and when the law enabled the public to deal with fraud and misrepresentation as they were dealt with in England, the mail order unfair competition would be stopped. In England if a firm made false statements on display cards about the price or quality of goods shown in the windows, anyone could call a policemen, hand him his complaint card and have the merchant appear next morning in the police court there to prove his statements correct.

Mr. Moyer spoke very strongly in favor of educating the farmer along the lines of supporting local merchants. Years ago he had undertaken work of educating farmers in regard to butter. Out of his efforts had grown the present farmers' institutes. The institute meetings were open to merchants and addresses along the lines suggested would, he believed, be productive of excellent results.

Upon motion of Messrs. Trowern and Moyer, the following resolution was passed as a substitute:

That the local branches be instructed to make an educational crusade amongst the farming community, dealing with this important matter.

Partnership Registration.

L. O. Pearson, of St. Thomas, submitted a resolution from his local branch objecting to the compulsory registration of partnerships. It was occasioned because a man looking for an easy way of getting money had laid information against a number of St. Thomas firms, who, ignorant of the law, had not registered.

Ald. Farrar, of Hamilton, said merchants, of all people, should respect the law. If a man didn't know it and got into the police court, he should wake up.

The motion was withdrawn.

Fee Remains at $2.

The rest of the session before the election of officers was given over to a discussion of the report of the committee on finance. The committee recommended that the annual fee be raised from $2 to $5. Of that amount $2 was to be remitted to the head office for general expenses, and the balance was to pay for collection and go to make up the local funds. The impression prevailed that a $5 fee would kill the association and that the locals did not need as much as $3 a member. It was agreed, however, that the general fund needed $2 per member per year. It was finally decided to make the fee $2, that same to go to the central association and each branch to remain free to levy what sum seemed fit for local expenses. This also throws the onus of collecting the fees and organization work upon the local branches. It also enables any single merchant in a small place to become a member by remitting $2 to the central office

The Officers.

When it came to the election of officers, H. C. Ellis was unanimously elected president for another year. Adam Ballentine and B. W. Zieman were nominated but withdrew in favor of the young man from Ottawa. Mr. Ellis modestly wanted to retire and give other members a chance for preferment, but when the convention would not have it so he promised to do his best, which, in view of his first year's record, was more than satisfactory.

The other officers elected were: Vice-presidents B. W. Zieman, Adam Ballentine; treasurer, M. Moyer; secretary, A. M. Trowern; auditor, F. C. Higgins. Mr. Higgins was re-elected as second vice-president but positively declined.

Drummers' Snack on Annual Frolic.

A Jolly Gathering at Alton—A Concert, All-night Serenade, A Costume Procession and an Afternoon of Sports were the Fetaures—Snack Club Officers.

(From the Canadian Grocer.)

Laugh, and the world laughs with you:
Weep, and you weep alone.
For the dear old earth must borrow its mirth,
It has trouble enough of its own.

Now this is a true saying, and worthy of all acceptation, for in it lies the full, perfect and sufficient reason for the existence of the Drummers' Snack.

"To be great, one must have a history," says Monmouth sagaciously; "to have a history, one must have lived," he concludes a trifle obviously; and thus it is with the Drummers' Snack. They are great, for they have a history (not necessarily that it follows); they have a history because they have lived. Individually they have seen the world, and human nature has become to them as an open book. Collectively they are united, knit together in a bond of fellowship that shall endure with the sun. Of history they have no lack. The founding of their club was a performance unattended by civic authorities, destitute of hackneyed and stereotyped speeches, unnoticed by the world, lacking even the conventional corner-stone laid by a worshipful hand. But in the very modesty of its inception lies its present strength. Through its initial obscurity it has attained to the recognition that it enjoys to-day.

Seventeen years ago the Algie family, then in the general store and woolen mills business at Alton, Ont., made a practice of annually entertaining, at a two days outing held in the vicinity of the town, all the travelers who passed through Alton during the year. The boys had nothing to do but come. The Algie family did the rest. As the years went by, and more trabelers were added to the list. the function became too large and unwieldy for the Algie's to handle, generous and open-homed as they were. The outing had by this time become an event to which a large proportion of the traveling world eagerly looked forward, and its popularity was proved by the clamour that arose at the first hint of abandonment. A club was formed and officers appointed to take charge of the outing, and the Drummer's Snack was fairly launched upon its career. To Billy Colville fell the honor of being its first president, and should one seek a reason for the club's phenomenal growth and prestige since the election of its first chief officer, it is but necessary to glance at the stamp of men who yearly since that date have been selected to watch over and direct its affairs. After Billy Colville came Jas. Cooper, Col. E. E. W. Moore, Bob Keys, Charlie Smith, and Jack Charles, and this year Mike Mal— but of that hereafter.

A Trainload of Smiles.

The sixth annual outing went to Alton on July 26. It returned 36 hours later. There is the bare statement. Here are the details.

On Friday evening the C.P.R. took on a trainload of assorted smiles at Toronto, picked up small quantities of similar freight at wayside stations dotted along the track, and three hours later isgorged the lot onto the Alton platform.

The noise began at once. There was no waiting. Sol Walters' voice was heard raised in hysterical enquiry for a short cut to the cyclone cellar. He was suppressed, and persuaded under pressure to fall in line with the procession. The Alton citizen's band, presided over by Cap. Alberton and Dr. Algie, headed by a profusely flagged and be-ribboned carriage, wherein Harry Coffen and Reeve Willoughby sat in state, and followed by a bevy of little girls, costumed in white dresses slashed with broad red ribbons, broke into a burst of melody and swung up the road. What does it matter what tune they played? Every man in the procession sang a different version of it, whatever it was. The net result, if not musically perfect, was at least harmoniously discordant. All Alton was at its doors, every ear was attuned to intercept those dulcet strains; every eye was levelled at the procession. The latter, proudly conscious of an exalted position, redoubled its efforts to give them something worth listening to. In this manner came the Drummer's Snack to Alton.

The Concert.

Long before eight o'clock, the hour set for the big concert, the mammoth tent was stretching itself to accommodate the audience. The tent itself is important enough to deserve a passing mention. Just an ordinary tent with no conceit about it at all, made of canvas and built with an eye to solidity rather than beauty. Many tender memories are associated with it by the members of the Drummers' Snack. Here is the home of the club, herein have the concerts been held from the beginning; herein not infrequently have slumbered many dozen of the elect. Staunchly it has withstood the elements for many years, and more exacting test than this has successfully weathered the sonorous snores of Mr. Walters and Jack Charles.

For once the expected came to pass. A general idea appeared to have circulated among the audience that something out of the ordinary was going to happen. But was anybody gifted with imagination sufficient to foresee the net result? If so, they were unfortunate in cheating themselves of the delights of anticipation. This is the programme presented by the Drummers' Snack for the critical appreciation of an audience prepared to be satisfied with anything:

The Piece de Resistance.

Followed the chief event of the evening. This was the production by the Hamilton branch of the Snack, of a pathetically-humorous plantation sketch, called "The Darkey's Dream," written especially for the club by their old and well-tried friend John B. Nelligan, and produced in Canada for the first time.

The four principal parts were taken by Bay Hill, Court Thompson, Col. John Stoneman, and Hy. Eckstien, but though they were conspicuously prominent, they didn't make an ounce more noise than the following promising bunch of amateur mummers:—Charley Drummers' Snack—The vice-president in kilts.

Smith, Vernon Smith, George Smye, Neil Pufford, Peter Smith, Bob Smith, Jas. Smith, Jack Smye, John Hooper, Ed. Zimmerman. To attempt to make any distinction among these last ten would be an abortive task, similar to splitting hairs. Let them be classed, as they would themselves desire—equally—neither with flattery nor derogatory remarks; only this must be said, they worked hard, they never wearied, they did their best, and it was a good best.

The Artists.

Bay Hill, the Hamilton Dockstader, Court Thompson, a disciple of Munion, by the great horn spoon, Col. John Stoneman, a master of the histrionic art, and Hy. Eckstien, who like Napoleon, does things without talking, earned individually in the highest degree the thunders of applause that again and again swept like a wave over the audience. John Nelligan must have been a proud man as he watched and listened to the way his work was produced, and heard the manner in which the audience received it. Songs, cake-walks and dances were liberally interspersed throughout the performance, and it is a safe bet that most of the actors surprised themselves as much as they pleased the audience. The production of this play places us in a position flatly to contradict the rumour that the stage is going to the dogs.

Drummers' Snack—A bunch of baseball humorists.

Of the other artists who took part in the concert, special mention is almost impossible, everyone of them was vociferously encored, some more than once. The professional talent, represented by Miss Olive Belyea, Miss Bertha Crawford, Miss Hazel Bell, accompanist, Donald McGregor and Will J. White, gave their services for the evening freely and unconditionally. Will White, who was billed for only one song, gave nearly half-a-dozen. Charles Bodley was to have acted as accompanist, but upon his non-appearance, Miss Bell, who is herself a soprano of high note (top c, anyway), offered to officiate in his stead. The duet by Donald McGregor and Miss Belyea seemed somehow to catch the hearts of the audience, and a burst of clapping and cheering broke out as the last note died away. "God Save the King" was sung in unison by the whole audience standing before the gathering broke up, and the old canvas roof fairly crackled with the strains.

The Night's Work.

All the articles attaching to their persons that could be conveniently got rid of, such as wives, sweethearts, sisters, children, friends and other impediments, were now escorted by the members to the station and carefully returned to Orangeville, whence they re-appeared next day in time for the games, sports and other frivolities that characterized the passing of that Jewish sabbath.

But Friday night will not soon be forgotten in the annuals of the Snack Club. The man into whose mind entered even a thought of slumber was a traitor to the cause, and branded as such. The irrepressible Mr. Walters, gathering around him a choice band of dime novel desperadoes, and arming his little company with torches and instruments of music, descended upon Alton, as a young typhoon descends upon the luckless mariner. Barred doors and closed windows greeted them on every side. The inhabitants, having ascertained by annual and bitter experience approximately what they might expect by attempting to parley with the enemy, have become at last wise in their generation, and upon such occasions as this, retire silently and with what dignity they can command at ten o'clock sharp. Sol, his faithful little band at his heels, took a brief review of the situation and commenced operations with a comprehensive serenade of the entire town. No quarter was given, though in some cases as much as fifty cents was offered to anyone who would remove the midnight Lotharios. The architecture of Alton was thoroughly analyzed, overhauled and replaced as nearly as possible in the same position. One or two of the band becoming hilariously hysterical were promptly resuscitated by Mr. Walters, who displayed a truly Napoleonic fortitude in the face of many discomfitures and rebuffs. About four a.m. the party attacked Bill Algie's house and announced their intention of remaining there for the night. Mr. Algie politely showed them into the kitchen, where about a score of their less energetic comrades-in-arms were already slumbering in peace.

The Snack in Session.

At 10 o'clock on Saturday a mass meeting of the club was held in the tent. Considering that it was the morning after the night before the attendance was very creditable. President John W. Charles occupied the chair, on his right and left hand, respectively, being F. C. Hunt, the Toronto secretary, and Robert Algie, of Alton, the home secretary.

M. P. Malone, the Hamilton secretary, read the minutes of the last meeting of the Snack, held several weeks ago in Hamilton to make arrangements for the present outing, They were confirmed. The president then informed the meeting that under ordinary circumstances the next item would be the treasurer's report, but the present circumstances being far from ordinary, owing to the absence of the treasurer, Bill Irwin, and his presence by proxy in the shape of a mass of incomprehensible figures, he found himself somewhat at a loss for the correct method of procedure. Having spent the whole morning trying to decipher them, he was now prepared to take the figures for granted coincident upon the accession of the meeting. The meeting was graciously pleased to access.

Followed a pause, which Mike Malone filled in a very timely manner by a short recitative descriptive of the way in which the expression "Sure Mike" had first been brought to his notice. It was a good story, but Mr. Malone made a mistake in trying to throw it at the meeting from the floor of the house. The house wouldn't stand for it and Mike had to take the platform.

Drummers' Snack—Part of the costume parade.

Robert Algie, who during the introduction of this extraneous matter had preserved a gravity, but ill according with his customary smile, now rose, and, with some hesitation informed the meeting of a partial victory over the mathematical mess of Bill Irwin, whose character and probable future, he declared himself willing, but unable to describe.

"As far as I can learn," said Mr. Algie, "the financial status of the club is on a very satisfactory basis. There is a handsome balance on the right side, our concert receipts last night having been considerable." Toronto secretary, F. C. Hunt, confirmed this estimate with a statement of the exact amount taken at the concert, giving the president an opportunity to rise and remind the members that the spirit of the Snack was to have a good time not to amass large profits financially.

A Vote of Thanks.

"While I'm talking," said President Charles, "I want to ask everyone here to pay tribute to Donald McGregor and Will White, and all the Hamilton men and lady artists, and to Charlie Leslie. We owe a big debt of gratitude also to that illustrious Dockstader, Bay Hill, and his enthusiastic helpers. His performance was unique in character and daring in enterprise." A vote of thanks to all these members, coupled with the name of John B. Nelligan, was proposed, seconded and unanimously adopted, while the canvas shook to the tune of "They are jolly good fellows."

Donald McGregor, Will White, Bay Hill, Bill Algie, John Nelligan and Col. Stoneman all replied to this evidence of appreciation according to their several temperaments. Some replied wittily, some modestly, some seriously and some humorously, but all enthusiastically and all characteristically. Will White with an air of great sacrifice, said he'd sooner miss a dog-fight than a Snack; that you couldn't bribe him to stay away, and that he'd be there next year as usual, ready to help in any way he could.

Bay Hill, who doesn't relish speechmaking, said that his feelings coincided in a remarkable manner with those of Mr. White, and if it pleased the chair he would like to let it go at that. It didn't please the chair, so Bay added that the feature of the whole Snack which had appealed to him most was the harmonious and frictionless manner in which Hamilton and Toronto had worked together for a common interest, that it had been a great pleasure for him personally to do what he had done, and that he attributed the unique success of this entertainment to the members all having a definite object to work towards. Here he quoted some remarks of Bill Algie, who was promptly called upon to confirm or deny them. Mr. Algie started to speak of himself in a deprecatory manner, but was called to order with great sternness by the chair. Being driven to land on this tack, Mr. Algie put out on another one and referred with the deepest sympathy and respect to the memory of their old comrade and brother, Samuel E. Ryan, who was a prominent member of the Drummers' Snack Club and a favorite with everybody. Mr. Algie displayed to the members a handsome memorial, bound in black morocco and engrossed in gold lettering, "Condolence of the Drummers' Snack Club," whose preparation had been in the hands of Bob Algie. The memorial read as follows:

MRS. RYAN.

The members of the Drummers' Snack Club desire to place a tiny forget-me-not on the grave of your late husband and to express to you their united sympathy in your bereavement.

Our comrade and brother, Samuel E. Ryan, was a loved and loving husband, an affectionate father, a good citizen, and an honest man.

No nobler or grander epitaph can be inscribed on the greatest monument.

A life well lived ends well at any time. Your husband lived, he loved, he was loved. This fills the vase of joy. The longest life contains no more.

His old comrades in our social club will sadly miss his presence, which was always cordially welcomed, either as an officer, tried and trusted, or as a social companion, on the road, in the holiday camp, or at the festive board.

The gentle, loving hand of time will partly heal the wounds made by the grim sergeant, and we realize that "words are but empty barren sounds" which are utterly inadequate to express sympathy when death calls a dear one.

In the windowless Palace of rest all must in time sleep, and we who are daily traveling towards the end of life's journey extend our best wishes to you and yours.

Signed on behalf of the Club.

JNO. W. CHARLES,
President.

ROBERT ALGIE,
Secretary.

A vote of thanks to those responsible for this memorial was proposed and carried. Mr. Algie's concluding remarks were characteristic of the man's great heart and generosity. "I thank you all for coming to see us once again in the old place," he said, "and you all know that as long as there is a square foot of ground in my house, or a crust of bread in the larder, no one of you will ever have to go hungry. (Cheers). In concluding, I must confess that this morning I stole a ham from the cyclone cellar to feed my 30 or 40 guests with. Having no defence I throw myself unreservedly upon the mercy of the court." Discharged.

Drummers' Snack—Sol Walters and the Comfort Soap Race second prize winner.

A Few Remarks.

Jno. Nelligan, who was next called upon, spoke feelingly of the spirit of universal kindness, which was the key-note of the Snack. "The air of Alton is full of kindness," he said. "I'll try and write you something even better than "The Darkey's Dream' next year, and I think I can do it, because the object for which I write will be an inspiration in themselves."

Col. Stoneman, M. P. Malone and Hy. Eckstein each said a few words, and Court Thompson was called out. Court proceeded in a dignified manner to the rostrum where he assumed the old Dr. Munion attitude. His listeners knew that one of the great truths of Dr. Munion was imminent, but there was no time for escape. "I've heard some of you people talking of shake-downs in Dr. Algie's house," he drawled, "Well," he continued with stern impressiveness, "I stayed out all night, and Dr. Munion says there is no punishment too great for those who neglect the afflicted."

Drummers' Snack—The Baby Show—The winner is in the go-cart.

The president called on the members for any criticisms or suggestions. A few were offered—tentatively—and accepted—gracefully. A photograph was then taken of the meeting in session. The election of officers was next taken up, previous to which President Charles, in the course of a short address, spoke highly of the help rendered him by the members of the executive. "If I'd had an executive made to order," he said, "it couldn't have been improved upon."

The New President.

Col. Stoneman proposed M. P. Malone for the new president. Bob Keys seconded it and there being no dissenting voice, Mike was duly boosted to the platform. In his address of thanks, or welcome, or whatever it was, he remarked candidly:

"It is no cinch to be president of the Snack Club. It means hard work and lots of it. But I think that to be president of such a bunch as I see below me is well worth a little trouble. I know you all. If I didn't I wouldn't take the office. But you'll all turn out and work for the Snack of 1908 as unselfishly, as generously, and as enthusiastically as you did for the Snack of 1907. Another thing, I'm following a hard man—a popular man, a man who made last year the most enthusiastic president we ever had. I refer to Jack Charles, and I don't expect to beat him. But with your help we'll give the Snack of 1908 as little cause as possible to blush with shame by comparison with that of this year. Gentlemen, I thank you for the honor you have done me."

On the proposal of Bill Colville, an enthusiastic vote of thanks was tendered J. W. Charles for having made the Snack of 1907 the greatest in the history of the club.

For Next Year's Snack.

The following officers were then elected:

Vice-president (an office created for the first time after some discussion)—F. C. Hunt, Toronto.

Hamilton secretary—Bay Hill.

Toronto secretary—Robert Asher.

Home secretary (elected by acclamation)—Bob Algie. Mr. Algie also assumes the duties of treasurer. He does the work anyway and might as well get the title.

Auditors—Peter Smith, Hamilton, and Will Meen, Toronto.

Hamilton executive—George Smye, Hy, Eckstein, Bob Smith, Court Thompson, Col. John Stoneman, Jas. Hooper and Chas. Smith.

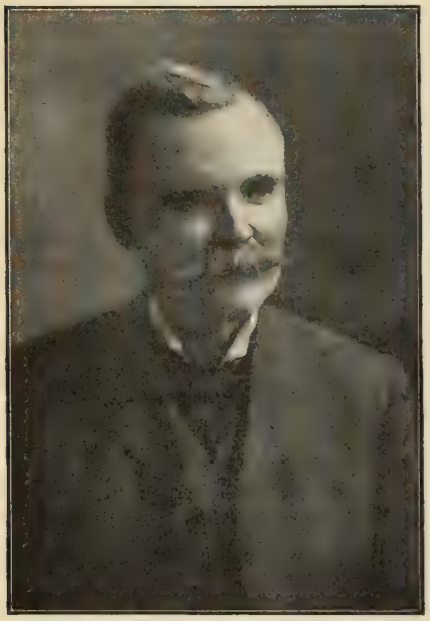
Toronto executive—J. Wildfong, W. Meen, Sol. Walters, D. McGregor, W. J. White, N. Oakley, Jno. W. Charles, G. Campbell, T. Gloster, F. C. Hunt, Robt. Keys.

The following were created honorary members—Jno. B. Nelligan, Ben Arthur, Chas. Leslie, B. McIntosh, of the Central Business College, Toronto; Alex. Earle, of Creemore, and Donald McGregor.

Amos Mason and Ross MacKenzie were made assistants to the secretary. Before the meeting closed, Bob Asher was presented with Bill Colville's prize for having sold the most buttons. Bob sold 32, and said it was pie. Snack buttons cost $1 each and entitle the owner to full membership in the club.

As the final wind-up to the meeting, Wtlliam Algie recited a poem by Robt. W. Service, author of "Songs of a Sour Dough." The poem, which was called "The Cremation of Sam M'Ghee," was of a humorous persuasion, and made a great hit.

The Procession.



Lunch was served to all who had appetites, by the ladies of the Presbyterian Church, in the Science Hall. One paid 25 cents and ate all one could. The fare was extraprdinarily good value for the money, but this may have been on account of the ladies relying on the well-known generosity of all travelers to come forward at a slightly advanced price over the one asked. Their expectations, if they entertained any, were gratified many-fold. The boys dived into their pockets and wouldn't take any change.

Drummers' Snack—Members and friends in Wm. Algie's grounds.

After lunch, came an event from which the writer, for one, has barely recovered. From the hill-top floated the strains of sad music, and down the street there swung a procession, so marvellous in composition, so unique in character, that one regrets the paucity of the English language as a medium of description. Most of the spectators are now happily reported to be convalescent, but many of them suffered severely. A glance at the accompanying photograph will give the unprivileged outsider a faint, vague, and shadowy idea of the reality. Observe the illustrous Mr. Sol Walters, consider that he was by no means the most picturesque of that outrageous company, and in time you may train your mind to comprehend in a dim way why Galbraith, the photographer, is taking a forced holiday from business. To his credit be it said that he flinched not from the call of duty, but with clenched teeth and ashy countenance exposed his plate and staggered back to the cyclone cellar.

When the kilted processionists reached the sport's field, a baseball game was immediately arranged between a picked team from Toronto and Hamilton. It lasted most of the afternoon, and considering the strict impartiality with which Col. Stoneman and Bay Hill handed out their decisions, was remarkably devoid of friction. Jack Charles, by lashing out a magnificent home-run in the last inning, secured the fruits of victory for the Toronto IX. The score was 13 to 11. Each member got a box of Old Abe cigars and Jack Charles, as captain, a tiny silver cup on a mahogany stand. The winners declared that the referees had conducted the game in an able manner.

The teams were as follows:—

Toronto :—Jack Charles, captain, Bob Asher, F. C. Hunt, Tommy Gloster, Jack Wildfong, Bill Meen, Pud Oakley, A. R. Fraser.

Hamilton :—Bob Smith, captain, Geo. Smye, Hy. Eckstien, Billy Miles, Fat Gufford, Court Thompson, Bill Wark, Slim Arthurs, Ed. Nally.

Meanwhile the games and sports were in full progress. The Sport's Committee consisted of Wm. Colville, chairman; Col. Stoneman, referee ; R. Asher and P. Smith, entry clerks. The committee were as follows :—William Irwin, Court Thompson, William Meen, E. F. Clarke, Bob Keys, Guy Long and Sol Walters.

The Sports.

All the sports and competitions were pulled off in fine style, and reflect great credit on the management. The following list of the various events with their winners, wherever it was possible to ascertain who were the winners, fairly represents the large scale upon which the whole programme was conducted. Competitors in most of the events were almost too numerous to admit of perfect handling. Sol Walters, smitten with the idea that he would like to help the committee, being one of them himself, succeeded in making himself recognized to the extent of being on nine separate occasions forcibly removed from the grounds. But nothing could daunt that indomitable spirit, and Sol was never far away from the centre of action. When last seen he was making for Orangeville, in his wake an infuriated mob of fellow-competitors, who with arms raised to heaven were calling the very firmaments to witness that through the strategical ingenuity (only they didn't put it like that) of the man they were pursuing, they had been wrongfully defrauded of their just rights.

It appears that Sol had stolen a march on them in one of the races, by rushing out of the crowd into the course when the judges were looking at other people's sisters and finishing a yard or two ahead of the legitimate winner. So let us leave him, with best wishes for his success if he was captured, and condolences for his pursuers if he escaped.

Envoie.

So let us take our leave of the Drummers' Snack. With a royal send-off that came straight from the hearts of the people of Alton, with a last cheer sent ringing back along the rails from the men and women in the vanishing train, a memorable outing was at an end, and another frolic added to the credit of the Snack.

And if, as Stevenson asserted, it is the duty of all men to be happy, surely this organization is fulfilling that duty in the highest degree. A club of men formed in the interests of clean mirth, of honorable enjoyment and of mutual service to one another, cannot well fail of success, and if the future of the Drummers' Snack Club is to be measured even proportionately by its past and present work, in after years a great body of men is destined to arise, whose motto, "Laugh and grow fat," will echo through the trackless wastes of the Siberian desert, and tickle the risibilities of the humble Esquimaux in the bleak solitude of his frozen home.

Short Snacks.

The president wore kilts. He's Scotch anyway.

As usual the star feature of the games was Bill Colville's Comfort Soap race.

Fred Hunt, the vice-president, came in third in more races than anyone.

* * *

Jack Charles cannot be beaten as a chairman. He knows how to keep things moving.

Many of the boys were inquiring for Walter Armstrong, editor of The Canadian Grocer, who was away on his vacation.

What would a Snack be without Sol. He looked immense in kilts and used a broom for a sporan.

The Snack resembled one huge, happy family picnic. The verdict returned was "The best ever!" There will be no appeal.

Will White, former member of the executive, now living in Vermillion, Alberta, was wired the regrets of the club at his absence.

* * *

Jack Wildfong, of Gordon Mackay, a director of the Commercial Travelers' Association, was on hand early. It was Jack's first visit, but he says he'll never miss a snack again.

The bonfire and fireworks display which were held after the concert made a fit ending to a glorious night. As a home secretary, Bob Algie has them all skinned. He forgets nothing.

* * *

Some members of the defeated baseball team were unkind enough to say that the Colonel's knowledge of the game antedated the new rules. And yet his decisions were perfectly satisfactory to the winners. Incomprehensible!

* * *

A telegram was received by Bob Algie from George Nicholson, familiarly known as Big Nick. Nick was in Vancouver, B.C., and wrote "Sorry not with you. Success is my wishes to all."

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. White, of Melagama Tea, were interested spectators of the games. Bill Meen, who travels for Melagama, was very much to the fore in the races. He won several firsts.

* * *

Mike Malone, the new president, has his work cut out for him for next year's snack. This one was so good. But everyone knows Mike, and when the time comes he'll deliver the goods.

Nowhere is there anybody just like Bert Menzies. During the Friday night serenade he kept the town alive and sleepless by pounding the kettle drum. He made up in energy what he lacked in artistic feeling.

The Blue Ribbon Tea hockey-broom match, under the able direction of George Campbell was an unqualified success. Many brooms were broken, but no skulls. The single ladies won fittingly by a single goal.

Col. E. E. W. Moore, whose kindly presence was so greatly missed at the snack, telegraphed to Jack Charles:

Drummers' Snack—Bay Hill, the Hamilton Dockstader.

"Sorry, cannot be with you. Best wishes for record snack." That his wish came true is now ancient history.

* * *

Bay Hill, the Hamilton Dockstader, was largely responsible for the success of the concert. Bay was made up as an old nigger, and acted, as well as looked, the part. With Bay Hill and Bob Asher as the Hamilton and Toronto secretaries, the success of the next snack is already assured. They are untireable.

Drummers' Snack—The members in session.

Bill Colville, as a games starter and general sports director, holds the belt. He is energy personified.

John B. Nelligan surpassed himself in "The Darkey's Dream." But he says he can write something better for next year's snack.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.

A theatrical manager was holding forth on the value of publicity the other day and pointed his moral with this :

"When the teacher was absent from the school room, Billy, the mischievous boy of the class, wrote on the blackboard :

" 'Billy Jones can hug the girls better than any boy in the school.'

" Upon her return the teacher called him up to her desk.

" 'William, did you write that ?'' she asked, pointing to the blackboard.

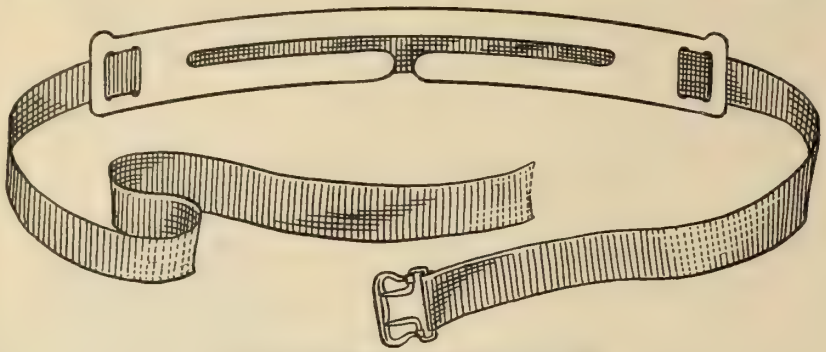
" 'Yes, ma'am,' said Billy.

" 'Well, you may stay after school,' said she, ' as punishment.'

" The other pupils waited for Billy to come out, and then they began guying him.

" 'Got a licking, didn't you ? '

" 'Nope,' said Billy.



" 'Got jawed ? '

" 'Nope.'

" 'What did she do ?' they asked.

" 'Shan't tell,' said Billy. ' but it pays to advertise.' "

Laces for Fall

Represented Very Largely—Filet Effects Prominent—Gold and Tinsel the High Novelty.

Laces will be used very largely this coming Fall. Late importations evidence the confidence the trade has in them. Retailers are expressing a keen interest in the many new lines shown, and it is clearly evident that the filet effects will be strongly represented at retail. This square mesh idea is in evidence in many varieties of lace, and it needs a judge of lace value to accurately state prices on account of the intricacy of the pattern in many cases. Cluny laces are often used to form complete waists and are employed in the Japanese sleeve effects as well.

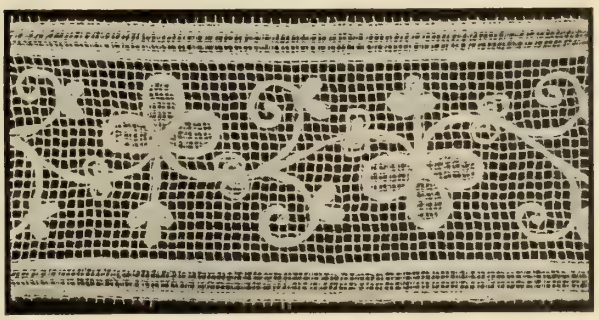
Coat Collar, Filet Antique Effect.

Vals. are still good property and Calais Vals. show every evidence of being strong favorites for Spring, 1908. The filet styles continue strong. Prices continue very firm, and deliveries are still unsatisfactory, except in one or two instances where houses have had orders placed for long periods. Festoons are in evidence everywhere and seem even better than galoons.

Black laces are now considered staple and a fair trade is expected this Fall.

The leading novelty for the Fall is easily lace, completely made out of gold. Gold allovers and nets will be used by the exclusive trade for trimming evening dresses. Often there is a combination of gold with silver and again all silver is used. These metal effects have already been taken up by high class stores, although prices are very high.

Embroideries are booked up to February, 1908, in many cases, and prices continue high on account of the high cost of raw material and stitch rates.



Soutache effects and pull braids continue exceptionally good. They will be much used in the new tailor-made gowns.

Embroideries

Big Business Predicted in Novelty Lines—Broderie Anglais Good in the Cheaper Lines—Filet Introductions and Antique Patterns.

During the latter months of the selling season embroideries seemed to be losing ground. Since the import selling season opened, however, and the new patterns were shown, they have regained much of their lost prestige. A month or so ago 25 per cent. could be obtained. Now, however, prices are firmer, and the present terms are 10 per cent. net.

The novelty in the new import lines is the free introduction of filet, guipure and Irish into the patterns. These are produced upon a soft batiste or muslin ground, and are combined with fine blind work. Antique patterns are the latest novelty. The Greek key, etc., and mediaeval patterns predominate in the latest lines shown. Filet effects are also very prominent.

Lace Filet Antique Effect.

There promises to be a big demand for bands and medallions in all widths, and in many shapes and sizes. Allover embroideries are very handsome, and are selling well.

In the cheaper lines broderie Anglais is in the lead.

Veilings

Summer Selling Satisfactory—Fair Fall Business Expected—Success of Tuxedos Depends Greatly Upon the Size of the Fall Hat.

A very fair trade has been done at the veiling counter during the Spring and Summer months. Chiffon veils for auto wear have been big sellers. There has also been a nice business done in individual veils, and tuxedos. Colored veils are the big sellers, and there seems no sign of a change in this respect. The fact is, the colored veil is more becoming than black or white.

Chiffon auto veils are selling freely at present. Though there are several good shapes, the long scarf veil is the one most worn. The handkerchief veil, and the circular veil, are two other good selling shapes. The veil is worn bunched together at the back, or brought forward and the ends tied under the chin, and covering the hat, hair and neck at the back. Attractive lines of tuxedos and nets are moving nicely, but much of their future depends upon the trend of millinery styles. Should the very large hats now indicated rule the season, their vogue will lessen the sale of tuxedos and other veilings. Filet mesh is the latest novelty in this line. Chenile dots hold their own and velvet dots are also selling. Lace veils, and net veils with a narrow lace border, promise—particularly the latter—to take fairly well. Brown, blue, green and black are the chief colors shown.

Ribbons

Heavy Advance Sales of Ribbons—A Fair Proportion of Fancies Sold—Feeling for Satin and Bright Makes.

Prospects are for a big ribbon season; indeed, "the greatest yet," is by no means an infrequent prediction. The advance sale has been very large. The feeling is for wide ribbons and, for the better trade, wide sash widths are great sellers. These ribbons are to use for the immense bows and crown draperies that promise to be so fashionable.

The feeling for ribbon trimmings is very strong in the millinery world, and there is every indication of its continuance. Both the wholesale and the retail houses are making big preparations to meet this demand.

There is a feeling for satins, and bright and satin-finished ribbons are those required. Glaces, satin duchese, satin lumineaux and other bright makes will be found in big range.

A fair proportion of fancies is being taken, particularly in chines and stripes. Cameleon effects are included in the list of novelties. There is a very wide demand for velvet ribbons.

The latest novelty shades heralded by Paris are purple and peacock, and those, at least at the beginning of the season, will be in strong prominence. Brown, in all shades from golden, through leather shades, down to honey and champagne is very fashionable. Apricot and other yellows are used as trimming shades. Navy and two or three shades of royal old blue, and the nattier shades are very prominent. Green will also be a leading color, particularly in the dark rich tones that combine with brown. Black will also be very strong.

Neckwear

Fall Orders Pouring in—Lace, Silk and Chiffon Styles Selling—Big Frilling Season Anticipated.

Already the prediction made in The Review a month ago, that the sale of neckwear this Fall would be a record-breaker, is on a fair way towards fulfilment. Orders are pouring in, and soon factories will be working up to the limit of their capacity. Neckwear has established a firm hold, not only upon the favor of the retailer, but also upon that of his customers; in fact, few women enter a store, where there is a well-kept neckwear department, who do not make a point of looking over the counter display. The only time when this does not apply is in the heated season, when as light a neck-dressing as possible is all that comfort will permit.

For the above reason, and also because the stock has been well sold out prior to inventory, the merchant is well cleared, in this department. Therefore, he is placing large orders, to enable him to obtain, and to keep up, the necessary assortment, when the first few cool days of early Autumn start brisk selling in this department. Orders placed so far are for fancy chiffon, silk and lace collars, stock and jabot effects. Jabots are in special demand and promise to increase in favor as the season progresses. The straight band and bow effect illustrated shows a novelty departure in chiffon and lace.

There is a healthy outlook in a moderate way, for lace effects. Lace stocks and tab collars are becoming steady sellers. They are wanted by the older portion of the community, and by those who have little taste for the more fanciful styles. Moreover, the prices of these goods are very moderate, when style and value are considered, and the merchant can attractively price them, and still reap a handsome profit. There is a constant filling in going on, in the departments that do a good business, in these goods, as by this method there is always something fresh on show. This pays, as novelty is the health of life to this section of the store.

Plastrons and yokes promise to be decidedly good. They come in beautiful effects, and in many combinations —in Venise, guipure, Irish, filet and embroidered net laces. Whichever of the other laces are used, filet is invariably introduced. Some of the newer effects are so arranged that there apparently, is no join between the yoke portion and the neck. This gives the fashionable long shoulder now in vogue.

Lace coat collars, and sets of collars and cuffs, are expected to do well in the Fall. The illustration shows the shape of the collar specially made to fit the new coats. Children's lace collars, though a minor, are a good selling line that it will pay merchants to stock.

Advance orders for frillings are very large. The variety of styles shown is extensive. Chiffon frillings are the sellers, but net, lace, and combination effects give variety to the line. White cream, ciel, pale rose, salmon, helio and other pastel shades, as well as tinsel and Dresden effects, are among the novelties. The new frillings are much neater and daintier in effect.

Turn-down stiff collars, worn with a fancy jabot or bow, are still the leading features in Paris and New York neckwear styles for the coming Fall. Tailored stocks, of heavy mercerized mattings, and canvas cloths, are also a strong feature. Both styles were strong in these fashion centres last Spring. Though shown in Canada, neither style has met with much consideration from the buying public. Indeed, the majority of merchants who bought these goods for Spring selling still have them on hand. The question is now, will they meet with a better reception, when again shown, for the Fall? Time alone can decide, but retailers are advised to go slow in ordering out stiff turn-down collars, and washing stocks; that is, until a demand is surely and safely established. There need be no fear about obtaining either stiff collars or tailored neckwear, should the tide of fashion in Canada set in their direction.

Jabot Collar of Lace and Chiffon.
Shown by Ladies' Wear.

Kid and Silk Gloves

Big Summer Selling—Kid Gloves, Gauntlets and Long Ringwood Gloves for Fall.

The fabric glove season is almost over, but during the last month or six weeks its sale has assumed large proportions. Desirable lines are scarce, both in long and in short gloves. Where bargains are offered, they are either the broken ends of lines or not up to the fashion standard. The favorite fabric glove this Summer has been the elbow length white suede lisle. Tans and black have also been good sellers in this glove. Silk gloves, while heavy sellers, have been disappointing in the wear, and after one experience with silk gloves, customers have almost invariably given preference to lisles. Gloves with lace arms, have sold, when plain lisles could not be purchased, and these in turn, have been better liked than the all lace glove. There has been no enquiry for the net gloves, so popular last Summer, and this style of glove seems to have completely dropped out of favor.

Elbow length silk gloves, in white, and in evening shades, will be good sellers this Fall, but some difficulty, it is predicted, will be experienced in procuring them. This threatened scarcity will, it is thought, help to quicken the sale next Spring. In spite of all the long sleeve talk, buyers are confidently preparing for another big long glove season in the Spring and Summer of 1908. Heavy orders have already been placed, not by American firms alone, but European buyers are also ordering out long gloves in big quantities for the Spring of 1908.

There is much more confidence now in the long glove vogue than existed a month or so ago. No doubt there will be more short lengths selling than a year ago, but the heavy business promises to be done, for a time yet, in the longer lengths.

The fact that tailored suits with the long sleeve will be the height of style, it is pointed out, will not interfere seriously with the vogue of the long glove. It is the length of the blouse, or waist sleeve, that will determine the length of the glove worn. Though manufacturers selling to the exclusive trade are featuring long sleeves, those who do a popular trade—and they are in the majority—are still putting in short sleeves. What is more definite still, the retailer is buying them. This is the sleeve situation at present and, therefore, the long sleeved suit will interfere little with the sale of long gloves. Dressey suits and gowns almost invariably show the shorter sleeve. At the Grand Prix the vast majority of the gowns worn had short sleeves. Beschoff-David is the costumier who is pushing the long sleeve into prominence, and it is said that he alone is favoring it.

There is little uncertainty in the minds of buyers, as to the vogue of long kid gloves, for the Fall. In the big city stores they have prepared for free selling. White leads for evening wear, but, for the city trade, at any rate, colors also have been purchased. Black, browns and tans are expected to be good for street wear.

Gauntlets sold very well indeed up to the advent of warm weather, and they promise to be a feature in the coming Fall. Many of these gauntlets are of home manufacture, and the leather fringes, on some lines, give them quite a Canadian touch. Tans and browns are the chief sellers in gauntlets.

Another line that promises well for Fall is the long ringwood gloves. Just a few were shown towards the end of last season. This year they are out early, and promise to have a big success. They sell best in white.

Manufacturers have found it well nigh impossible to fill the orders that have poured in upon them from all quarters during the past year. Not only has machinery been insufficient, but where frames have been put in it has been impossible to obtain operatives to run them. The output of the factories is sold many months ahead, many purchasers having contracted for their needs during the Winter months, and orders are now being placed for the Spring and Summer of 1908. There seems to be, at present, no reason to expect any change from conditions. This sold-up condition is due to the big demand for long gloves, and instead of there being any cessation, there is, according to the reports from Chemnitz, if anything, an increase.

Linens

Excellent Outlook for Fancy Linens—Dress Linens Finish the Summer in High Favor.

Canada is becoming of increasing importance as a market in the eyes of the British linen manufacturers. Nor is this wonderful when the rapid way in which the principal cities are building up is considered. In Toronto, Winnipeg and Montreal, and many of the smaller centres, houses are going up by the street. There is, in short, hardly a town, particularly in the west, and in Ontario, where extensive building operations are not going on. New houses mean new furnishings, new household linens, etc, so there is no wonder that the trade grows. Another factor that not only makes for free selling, but for a big demand for better grade goods, is the growing wealth of the Dominion. Just how large an item Canada's linen importations are growing to be, can be best grasped by a study of the following comparative table taken from the trade returns of the United Kingdom. Linen exports to Canada :

For the five months ending May—

	Yards	Value
1905	4,536,400	£97,260
1906	5,172,500	111,792
1907	5,974,300	138,488

In spite of the large importations stocks are small. Heavy advance orders have been placed but deliveries promise to be slow, and as the season advances complaint is inevitable. This slowness is due to scarcity of yarns. The dock laborers' strike in Ireland is also interfering with shipments.

There is an excellent outlook for art and fancy linens. Orders placed are large, and there is promise of a big business. Cluny effects represent the novelty, but Irish embroidered goods, Mexican, and Japanese drawnwork, etc., are all in high favor. There is an increasing demand for high class embroidered household linens for bedspreads, bolster covers, pillow covers, sheets, shams, etc.

Dress linens, in spite of advances, have a firm hold on fashionable favor. White dress linens may be said to be staple. Colored linens have also done well. Though the cold late Spring checked early sales, stocks of both white and colored dress linens in the hands of the merchants are low. Tailored suits of white and colored linen have been exceedingly well worn. White has been the big seller for this purpose, but colors, particularly blue, pink, helio and Nile, have been well worn, and are finishing the season in high favor. The Summer development has been, particularly on the other side, in favor of ecru and brown shades in dress linens. These shades have been taken up by the custom tailors and by the makers of high class ready-made garments. Only the difficulty of obtaining the linen has put a limit to its use. This difficulty will only make the demand larger another Spring.

A Good Glove Story

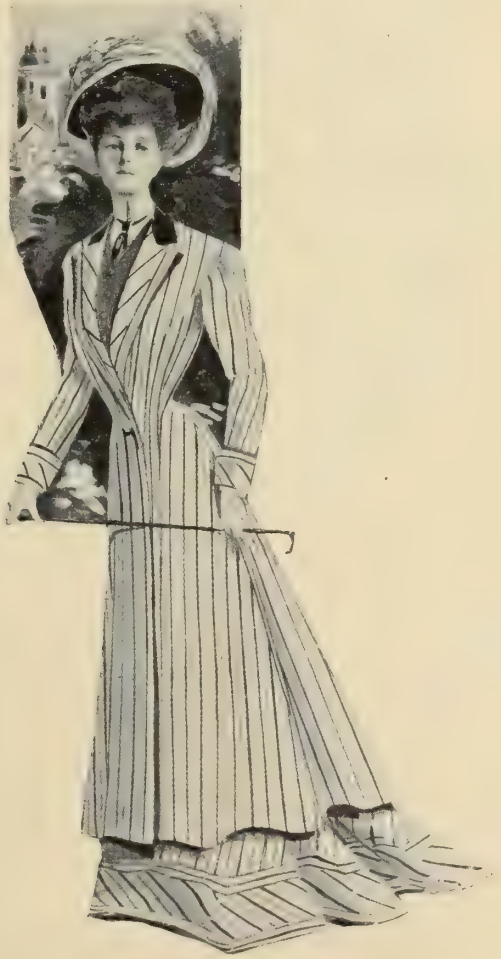
Sheer Light-weight Worsteds

Monotone Effects and Plain Weaves For Next Spring.



Advance orders for the Fall are now placed and the trade is beginning to take an interest in the early movement of fabrics for the Spring of 1908. Foreign buyers for the importing houses are over in Europe completing purchases for that season. From information coming from them and from other sources, it looks as though business would be largely done next Spring on monotones and piece-dyed cloths. Worsted materials have been the novelty fabrics for the coming Fall and the indications are that they will come prominently forward in the Spring season.

The fashionable woman still clings to sheer light-weight fabrics, and Paris dressmakers are making free use of voiles, both in plain and in fancy weaves. The new fancies are formed in the weave by the addition of a heavier thread, and come in stripes and fine checks. The majority are piece-dyed, but two-tone effects are also shown. The plain color is most favored.

The trade is now taking kindly to poplins and prun-ellas, and these weaves are expected to be good sellers next Spring. Serge is another tried material that is coming back into popular use. It has been for some time popular wieh the high class trade, and in creams has sold well to the general trade during the present Summer. Serges, both in the rough weaves and in coating and French weaves are high in buyers' favor and promise to be free sellers next Spring. Panamas promise to be strong sellers in popular-priced lines, and also to the cutting-up trade. This is because a better value for the money can be given in them than in most weaves. Here also the tendency is to buy the plain, piece-dyed fabric. Fancy effects in panamas consist of faint line stripes and check effects on a plain ground.

In fancies, besides these stripe and check patterns in panama, quiet stripes and two-tone effects in a single color are showing. The patterns favored are very neat and quiet.

In the color line the most striking feature is the return of brighter colors. Cardinal, though not usually a Spring color, promises to come forward as a leading color both in dress fabrics and in millinery. The blue section in an extensive range of staple and fancy shades, promises to predominate. The leading novelty, though not the leading shade, is peacock. Tans and leathers are again strong, and should sell in Canada, but their place will depend, in a great measure, upon the color movement in the early weeks of the present Fall. Black fabrics are making a steady gain and grey is still, in some shades, a selling color.

Broadcloths for Fall

Heavy Business .done on Plain Cloths—Printed Broadcloths, and Dark Rich Suiting Effects the Popular Fancies.

Owing to the show sale of dress goods during the spring months, there promises to be more buying done from open stocks this fall. Jobbing houses are, therefore, making special efforts to have stocks in good shape, before the advent of buyers at the time of millinery openings.

There is an unusual diversity of materials this fall. Both plain and fancy materials are indicated, and both smooth-finished and rough-surfaced cloths are selling. In preparing for fall, smooth-faced cloths are the most important fabrics, and there is every reason to believe that a heavy selling record will be made by them.

The most interesting development is the introduction of slightly rougher materials for street wear. These are piece-dyed fabrics of the cheviot class, and fabrics showing herr ng-bone and chevron weaves. Other good selling lines are serges, both in the rougher cloths and in the smooth-finished coating serges.

In the popular-priced lines panamas, cashmeres, satin and prunella cloths are being taken.

Though the big volume of the business promises to be done in plain cloths, no collection will be complete without a good representation of fancies. These consist of printed effects, in fancy broadcloths, small checks, line plaids and quiet stripes. Other fancies selling are of the suiting class, and come in dark mixtures, in plaids and stripes, and in rich dark combinations.

There is every reason to believe that rich dark browns will be one of the best selling colors. Tans will sell well for dressy costumes. Blues are a coming color, not only in navy and lighter blues, but in various novelty shades. Green certainly is advancing in favor, both in myrtle and olive shades. Plum and violet shades represent the latest Paris color development, but this is too recent to affect the trade here this season. Dark greys will be seen for street wear.

Tartans and fancy plaids are in large demand for misses' and childrens' wear.

Order Wash Goods Early

No Change in the Cotton Situation—Mills Will Be Early Sold Up On Desirable Lines.

Early ordering is advisable, as there is no change in the cotton goods situation. Desirable lines are limited, and the sold-out condition so often faced during the Spring of the present year will again rule, perhaps in a more aggravated form. Cotton fabrics of all kinds are scarce. The demand is wide, and the mills are hampered by the difficulty experienced in securing yarns. This is restricting the output, and it is only the man who gets into the market early, who will have the choice of unbroken assortments.

In white goods, sheer white fabrics will again predominate, and there is no doubt that lawns, linens, and muslins will be leading sellers. Sheer fancies, lawns, Swisses, nainsooks, etc., in stripes, spots and checks will be very strong. Stripes are in the lead as the fashion tendency is in their favor.

In medium weights, mercerized fabrics are promising to be the big sellers, as there is nothing to take their place at a popular price. Reps and soft-finished piques are attracting a fair amount of attention. They are shown in a big variety of check and stripe patterns. There is no particular novelty but corded stripes and over-checks, as well as swivel spots, and jaquard patterns are showingf

During the latter part of the season ginghams have come into prominence, and as they are finishing the season in strong favor are looked upon as likely to make a greater gain another year. Block checks and broken checks have sold well this Summer, but in 1908 stripes are expected to be the better sellers. All the medium shades of blue promise to take a high place next season, with pink a close second. City buyers think highly of ginghams for 1908, in plain cloths, as well as in striped and check patterns.

In printed goods, since the beginning of the selling season, there has been an increasing interest manifested in spot and ring patterns. In the American cities, both in the east and west, coin spots have been extremely good sellers, both in wash materials, and in wash silks. In popular combinations they have for some time now been practically out of the market. Any fashion, that is so strongly marked as this one has been, is sure to extend to this market another season. Spots and rings promise to be good here next Spring.

Dress linens, since the warm weather started, have more than held their own. White is staple, and there is an increasing demand for colors. Blues promise best, particularly in medium shades; pink sells well and there is an increasing call for pale green. The natural shades, ecru and brown, promise to be strong sellers next year.

Silks Active

Heavy Selling of Silks for Fall—Bright-finished Taffetas and Satins and Plaid and Striped Fancies big Sellers.

Higher prices and increased selling do not often go together, but this is the situation in the silk department. Though silks are high-priced, they are freely employed, and not only is the counter sale a large one, but there is a steady call for silk fabrics from the makers of ready-to-wear lines. Silks are used largely for linings, trimmings and for millinery purposes. The advent of the jumper suit has helped the sale of silks, and another great factor this summer in New York has been the vogue of the tailored suit of rough Oriental weave. The separate skirt of black taffeta has once more made its appearance in the trade.

There is an extensive demand for silk fabrics for the high-class trade, in such materials as marquisettes, silk voiles, sheer gauzes, chiffon cloths, silk nets, etc., also for high-class fancy silks—warp-prints, soft satins and brocades. Though these goods can only be sold by certain stores, and do not touch the popular trade, their sale helps to keep the price up in other lines.

Brilliantly finished lightweight chiffon taffetas are the leading sellers, and soft satin finishes are hardly less popular. There is, however, some feeling for cord weaves, and soft failles and bengalines are shown.

Buyers have every confidence in plaid fancies, and have backed this confidence with large orders. Tartans and French plaids have been ordered out, also stripes and checks in neat designs and in standard colorings.

W. R. Brock & Co. Extending Fine Building Erected and Opened at Calgary—New Sample Room at Hamilton.

The W. R. Brock Co., of Toronto, Montreal and Calgary, have opened their new business block on Eighth Ave., Calgary, and this firm is now transacting its western business in one of the most complete buildings in Western Canada.

Floor Space 26,000 Feet.

The building is four storeys in height, and has an area on each floor of 130x50 feet, equal to a total floor space of 26,000 feet. The ground floor ceiling is 16 feet 6 inches from the floor, the effect of such a lofty ceiling giving a most imposing ground floor premises. In fact, every floor is beautifully airy, the upper floors being 15 and 13 foot ceilings respectively. The interior framework is all of steel and the building is practically fireproof.

Hardwood entrance doors with massive brass escutcheon and heavy figured plate glass are used.

Staple Goods Floor.

Half a dozen steps brings one in to the main or staple goods floor with the commodious offices on the left hand side. The fittings and finishing work in both the public and business office and the manager's private room are in picked fir and ash, all window casing in hardwood.

Stepping across from the offices to the south end of the ground floor, one finds every facility for handling freight, both incoming and outgoing.

Two Electric Elevators.

Here is a powerful and spacious freight elevator, by means of which the least amount of manual labor is called into play in handling heavy shipments of freight. Here, at the back entrance of the building, right at hand to the freight elevator are the railway tracks, so that one might almost say it is only a matter of a minute or so for a huge case to be taken from the freight car on to the elevator, and another minute one of the staff can be spreading its contents on the show counters on the top floor.

From this ground floor also, only at the north end near the offices, is the electric passenger elevator.

Almost Fireproof.

The floors of the different storeys are supported by steel girders, weighing about a ton and a half each, which in turn rest on heavy steel columns, which are covered with cement. The heavy plaster capitals give a handsome and massive appearance to the whole structure.

The upper floors are a replica of the ground floor and the way fixtures are being planned out show that every regard is being paid to rapid handling.

Entering Room.

On the basement floor is the entering room. Here all the shipping and packing of outgoing freight takes place. The basement also contains the heavy staples.

The second floor is being used for dress goods, tweeds and ladies' ready-to-wear goods.

Automatic Sprinklers.

The top floor is intended for small wares, hosiery, gloves and gent's furnishings, and is so constructed as to allow another storey to be added to the building with least possible inconvenience. A complete system of automatic sprinklers is being installed throughout the warehouse.

A staff of twenty assistants will be maintained from the start and four travelers will be constantly on the road covering the territory between Swift Current and the coast and north and south as far as ever they can go between the 49th parallel and the north pole.

Quarter of a Million Stock.

A stock of dry goods ranging between $200,000 and a quarter of a million dollars will be carrier so it will be seen how completely this firm has pinned its faith to Calgary.

The building is constructed of Calgary cut stone on ground floor and the upper floors of red pressed brick with Calgary cut stone trimmings.

Representatives—L. S. Murdoch, Northern Alberta; A. K. Mihell, Southern Alberta; W. A. Montgomery, Western British Columbia (office, 518 Hasting St., Vancouver, B.C.); Lloyd Jackson, Eastern British Columbia and Crow's Nest Pass.

The firm are carrying, in Calgary, a stock equal in assortment to either of their Toronto or Montreal houses.

The W. R. Brock Co. (Limited), have opened a sample room in the city of Hamilton, in a central locality, convenient to the business part of the city, being in the Bank of Hamilton Building, corner of King and James Sts., opposite the Gore.

They carry a full range of samples, representing the whole of the stock in the Toronto warehouse, it being their intention, not only to give the Hamilton merchants an opportunity of purchasing from them, but also for the convenience of merchants in the small towns and villages in that neighborhood.

Although this sample room has only been opened for a month, they have found that their business in Hamilton and surrounding district has been largely increased already. J. M. Stothers is in the sample room every day, and R. B. McBurney, A. H. Robertson, W. N. Barrett and W. E. Stothers, their Toronto representatives, are in Hamilton frequently doing business with their customers.

Merchants within a radius of from 20 to 25 miles from Hamilton will find this sample room a convenient place for sorting up their stocks, as this firm's facilities for doing the business are such that goods can be shipped the same day that an order is taken if necessary.

K. Harrima, of The Japan Trading Co., Montreal, has returned from an extensive buying trip in Japan. Mr. Harrima has placed a few advantageous contracts for porcelain ware, etc.

THE BRITISH MARKETS

The News from Bradford Manchester, Belfast Nottingham, London and Scotland.

An increasing interest is being manifested in Canadian development by the motherland. Special efforts are being made, by both the manufacturing and the wholesale interests, to get in touch with the Canadian market. Figures showing how enormous this development has been, since the beginning of the present century, have recently been given, by many of the leading financial papers. They are: "Canada's revenue, in 1906, was nearly two and a half times that of ten years previously, and the Dominion had a good balance of income left over, after paying all expenses. We imported from Canada, in 1901, goods to the value of nearly £20,000,000, and in 1906 these figures had increased by £5,000,000. We exported to Canada upwards of £9,000,000 of goods in 1901, and this had increased to nearly £14,000,000 in 1906. In 1905, we sent to Canada apparel to the value of £281,000; also 45,000,000 yards of cottons; haberdashery and millinery worth £202,000; twenty million yards of jute goods; 11,000,000 yards of linens; two and a quarter million yards of floor cloths; silks valued at £206,000, and twenty-three million yards of woolens and worsteds. In all, these articles of textile manufacture there has been a steady increase, in volume and value, in the past few years."

London.

The Spring season here has been a disappointing one, and up to date little improvement has taken place in the weather. This condition is affecting the sale of the Autumn goods, and there is not that disposition to anticipate that prevailed a month ago. Though one can sympathize with the caution displayed, should the Autumn be a normal one, disappointment is sure to result.

London is a great distributing centre for silk fabrics, Advices received here state, upon the very highest authority, that both the new European and Oriental crop of raw silk is above the average. Buyers must not hastily conclude, from this fact, that prices are going to tumble. There are other governing factors in the situation than the price of raw material. Demand is a much stronger one than the price of raw silk in the present condition of the world's trade. Buyers who have held back from placing orders are already aware they have made a mistake. Schappe, which involves the price of cheap silk, is rising briskly, and the cheaper silks promise to go higher for the remainder of the year. All kinds of silk fabrics promise to maintain their price, for the present, though a tendency to easier prices may develop in the better grades when the coming season is well advanced.

The results of the June fur sales was in every way satisfactory. The furs offered were, with the exception of musquash, as is usual at this time of the year—of an inferior grade. Prices realized developed a very firm tendency, and the demand for good furs showed no sign of falling off. American buyers were present in good numbers, and the demand from all quarters was brisk. The difference between values last March, and those of June were slight.

Bradford.

July wool sales were looked forward to with more than the usual interest in Bradford. This was due to the slight weakness developing in the values of the coarser colonial crossbreds. This weakness resulted from 40's tops dropping, ½d. to 1d., coupled with the absence of new business, and a visible supply exceeding 50,000 bales. At the Coleman street sales there was a large offering of crossbreds, particularly of medium and lower grades. These, on the first day of the sale, showed a decline of about 5 per cent., some specially shabby lots selling still lower. Better grades of crossbreds, on the latter days of the sale, developed a hardening tendency. The home trade were good purchasers, and American and continental buyers purchased largely of the finer grades, which ruled fully up to the values of the last series of sales. Merino wools were in great demand, and competition was keen, particularly from the American buyers. Values were fully maintained.

Manchester.

Due to bad weather, orders from the home trade are decidedly slow, and there is very little change in the export situation. Colored woven goods, sateens and printed cloths are moving fairly well, and are firmly held. Yarns are wanted for continental buyers, but sales are not large, as spinners hold out for extreme values. Users of cotton yarns are in a decidedly bad position, and there is a movement afoot to shut down mills for a period, to weaken the attitude of the spinners. Gossip is loud as to spinners' profits earned in the past year, and the published company reports show that there is reasonable grounds for supposing there is much truth in the talk.

The firm of Tootal, Broadhurst, Lee & Co. have sold their spinning mill, at Blacklane, to a Bolton syndicate. The mill contains 7,000 mules, and 12,000 ring spindles. The purchase price is said to be 16s. per spindle.

Nottingham.

There is little or nothing doing for the home trade, but this does not mean that factories are not busy. There are quite a lot of orders yet to be got through. A few of these are for late delivery, but the greater number are shipping orders. Fine valenciennes, torchons, all-over nets, point d'esprit and veilings are all in good demand, and tulles, plain nets, etc., are fairly busy for late delivery.

Belfast.

It is feared the continued wet weather will affect both the quality and the quantity of the Irish flax crop. The crop reports from Russia are good, but the reverse is coming from Belgium and Holland.

There has been a further hardening of yarn values, and the spinners' position is one of added strength.

Manufacturers are busy, but the rise in yarns has further reduced the already narrow margin of profit. The home market is sending in some nice sized orders, and a noticeable improvement is being experienced in the demand from the United States, Cuba, Canada and the other colonies.

Scotland.

Scotch linen manufacturers are about to issue a revised price list. American orders are still coming forward, but it is difficult to get prices that give a fair margin over yarn quotations. The tweed factories in the south are kept fairly busy, in spite of higher prices, as there is a fair demand for the better class of Scotch tweeds.

DEVELOPMENT OF TOURIST TRADE.

Estimating that one hundred thousand tourists visited Canada last year—and this is a conservative estimate, as more than half that number went to the Muskoka district alone—it is evident that our country offers great possibilities for development in this direction.

It can safely be assumed that each visitor spent at least $50, while some spent ten times that amount. Consider what this means, not only to the railways and boat transportation companies, but to the drygoodsmen from whom they bought furs, woolens, silks and linens; to the hardewaremen who supplied the rifles, fishing tackle, sporting goods, cutlery, etc.; to the grocers who supplied the hotels and boarding houses with foodstuffs; to the booksellers, who supplied the magazines and other reading matter, and to other classes in the community, every one of which benefited by the exchange of money and increase in trade.

The example of tourist associations in Vancouver, Victoria, St. John and other places, and the western boards of trade, which have encouraged tourist travel, can to advantage be followed in many sections of Canada.

Merchants throughout the country should take energetic steps to support the railways in developing the tourist business. A great number of towns have attractions which they could make known to the public. If they have not received a share of this transient trade in the past the retail merchants ought to get together and devise some means of drawing it. The benefit to be derived from it is both direct and indirect. In the first place tourists are liberal in their purchases and they pay spot cash. They come, too, at a time when ordinary business is dull, so that trade from an outside source is all the more desirable. Indirectly merchants reap a harvest from the fact that this large amount of money is left in the country. Somebody is getting it, and every merchant will benefit eventually.

Much credit is due to the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific and the Intercolonial for their success in interesting people of the United States in the beauty spots of Canada. They have brought much money into the country and aided materially in its development. Organization among merchants in seconding these endeavors should be undertaken.

LOSS THROUGH OVER-MEASUREMENT.

Under present day conditions, which require that the retailer sell on close margins, and carry a greater amount of stock than ever before, it is imperative that no leaks be tolerated. Among those most commonly found is that due to overmeasurement. It exists even in some of the largest stores in Canada.

We have discussed this matter with many merchants and most of them acknowledge that their annual loss through the liberality of salespeople must be considerable. Some appear reluctant to adopt the only means by which a sure remedy can be applied—the inspection and checking of goods before they are sent out. In a few cases every piece of material sold is re-measured at a parcel desk, and in others this is not the regular practice but it is understood that an examination of parcels is likely to be made at any time. Both plans are effective.

No one supposes that salespeople are actuated by any dishonest motives when they give overmeasure. In the majority of cases they are serving customers with whom they are personally acquainted, and do not wish to be considered stingy. They have the wrong point of view altogether, and a good deal may be done by impressing upon them the loss that slight overmeasurement on every yard of goods would mean to a store in a year.

When a customer pays for a yard of material she should receive a yard and no more, and merchants must see that this is the case.

TWENTY PER CENT OFF.

In one of the smaller cities of Ontario a dry goods firm has been holding sales twice a year, at which everything in the store, except cotton threads and grey cottons, is offered at twenty per cent. off. Usually they have been continued for four days, but the last one, conducted a short time ago, ran for eleven days. The best merchants in the city refrained for a long while from competing in this price-cutting, but finally considered themselves forced to do something. They held one sale, but then very wisely decided to drop a policy so disorganizing to regular business. For a year they held to this course, but last January one of them said to The Review: "As usual it has made business hard for the rest of us. While they are daily locking their doors to keep the crowd out, we have been doing very little trade. One member of this firm is in favor of dropping this kind of business, but the other holds out for it. "We have not tried to oppose them, but I fear we will not stand aside another season." Of course a firm may conduct its business in any way it pleases, but we sincerely trust that this one may soon see the merits of the steady methods of merchandising. We have several times lately expressed our opinions very strongly on the subject of "dry goods wars," etc.

REVISION OF FREIGHT RATES.

The Railway Commission performed good service in ordering a revision of freight tariffs in Eastern Canada, with the purpose of obviating discrimination in favor of traffic from the United States, and putting into effect the principle of uniform rates for equal distances. For instance, the rate from Deteoit and Port Huron is made the maximum that may be charged from adjacent points. At present the first-class rate from Windsor to Montreal is seventy cents per hundred pounds in the Winter and sixty cents in the Summer, while the new rate will be fifty-eight cents the year round. A number of changes are ordered on about the same basis.

Freight tariffs have been designed to exact all that the traffic will bear. This purpose is served by complicated gradations, commodity rates, etc., and the Railway Commission has sought to remedy the unfair conditions that have been brought to its attention. Plenty of work along similar lines will, no doubt, be found for this useful body from time to time. It will shortly investigate express rates, and we expect to see some grievances of merchants throughout the country dealt with effectively. Among other things, the alleged discriminations in favor of catalogue houses should be looked into.

HOW DO YOUR PRICES COMPARE?

The Review's comparison of catalogue house prices with those of a number of local merchants has been read with keen interest throughout the country. It has shown conclusively that the small retailer may successfully compete with the big city concerns which cater for business from one end of Canada to the other, and which, by their extensive advertising, have succeeded in convincing many thousands of consumers that by ordering through mail order they can secure merchandise of better quality at cheaper prices than at their home stores. We want every drygoodsman to satisfy himself as to his position in regard to catalogue figures. That should be the first step. Those who find the comparison favorable—as numbers surely will—can then go ahead and give such facts and figures in their local papers as will prove the best possible advertising for their stores.

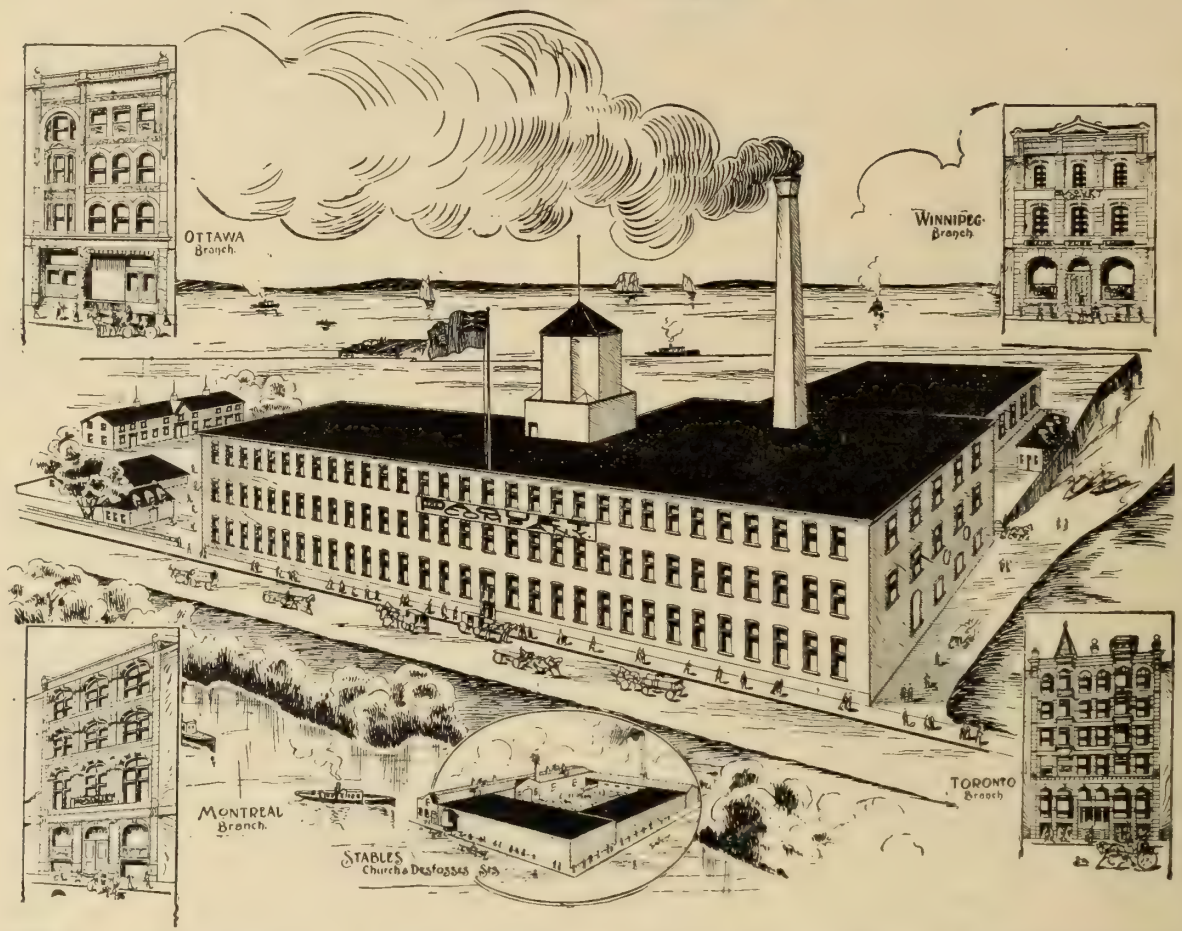
The Review would like to receive communications from all of its readers with respect to this matter.

WHO PAYS FOR YOUR ADVERTISING?

Who pays the cost of advertising? At first sight this question looks easy. One is apt to say offhand that the advertiser pays it. But upon closer investigation it becomes apparent that an advertiser, who advertises properly, gets back all the money he spends in advertising, and a good deal more—else what would be the use of his advertising?

The purchaser doesn't pay it, because he gets the goods as cheaply from an advertising firm as he could from a non-advertising firm. In many cases he buys cheaper. Then who pays the cost of advertising?

The non-advertiser does! By the lack of enterprise in bringing his goods before the attention of the public he loses customers, who buy from advertising people. The profits which are lost by non-advertisers find their way into the coffers of those who do advertise.



As an example: If $20 spent in advertising brings you in $30 additional profit, your advertising is paid for and you are ten dollars in pocket.

THE REVIEW'S QUESTION DEPARTMENT.

In its July issue The Review gave a good deal of interesting information in answer to communications from readers, and we would like to make this department a strong feature each month. We invite questions on any subject connected with the dry goods trade. Their discussion is bound to prove of value to retailers generally.

THE PAQUET COMPANY LIMITED.

WHOLESALE DIVISION

The Largest Fur Factory in the Dominion

THE well known house of J. Arthur Paquet, which will hereafter be known as the The Paquet Company, Limited, Wholesale Division, was established in the year 1892 by the late Honorable J. Arthur Paquet. Senator.

The Fur Factory, which is by far the largest establishment of its kind in Canada, and one of the largest in the world, is the only fur factory in AMERICA where every process, such as dressing, tipping, dyeing and finishing of furs, from the raw skins to the finished garment, is conducted under the one roof.

Year by year, this branch of the business has expanded, until to-day there are no less than eighteen travellers employed, covering the entire country from Newfoundland to the Yukon.

In 1895 was laid the foundation of the immense Hat importing business, which has grown to be a very important branch. Here is the source of supply of the renowned "Carter" and "Wilkinson" Hats, which are now famous from coast to coast. These are the most widely advertised Hats in Canada. More than 190 painted signboards are used along the lines of the great Canadian railways, from Halifax to Vancouver; and thousands upon thousands of attractive booklets, showing the principal styles, have been mailed direct to the customers of Hat dealers in every part of Canada. A series of newspaper advertisements is now running in a strong chain of papers which practically covers the entire country. Dealers are given every possible aid in advertising and selling: such as Ready-made Ads., Free Newspaper Cuts, etc. The remarkable increase in the sales of "Carter" and "Wilkinson" Hats is the best possible proof of the soundness of this policy.

Shortly after the Hat Department was an accomplished fact, the Glove Factory was established. Here are manufactured the famous "J:A.P." Gloves and Mitts, which are now handled by the majority of Dry Goods and General Stores throughout the country. Over 2,000 different styles are made, from the finest of ladies' kid gloves to the strongest of workingmen's mitts.

The total floor space occupied by the Wholesale Division is 97,402 square feet, not including the branches at Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and St. John, N.B.

Over 400 people are employed in all departments of the wholesale division in the City of Quebec, exclusive of the branch offices, in each of which a separate staff of clerks is employed.

The Winnipeg branch occupies a handsome building of its own, and carries a complete stock of Furs, Hats and Caps, Gloves and Mitts, to meet the demands of the rapidly increasing Western trade. The Montreal branch also occupies an immense building, which is used as a distributing point for that district. In Ottawa, Toronto and St. John, N.B., commodious suites of offices are maintained, and the new branch office at Vancouver, B.C., was formally opened last week.

We take this opportunity to thank the Retail Merchants of Canada for their hearty support and co-operation in the past, and to solicit a continuance of the same.

THE CANADIAN FUR TRADE

Advance orders have been practically completed, and the sum total is fairly satisfactory. Favorable weather during June and July, and improved crop prospects, induced retailers to order with more confidence. Early orders were not, in some cases, of exceptional size, but several Montreal firms speak of decided improvement during the quiet Summer period. Factories are very busy and initial western shipments are going forward rapidly. Labor in fur manufacturing centres demands even a higher price than last year, and this has tended to boost the price of manufactured furs.

Manufacturers will make keen efforts to do a record sorting business and travelers in some cases will be on the road during September.

Muskrats continue to excite a great deal of attention, and where manufacturers have not covered excessive prices have to be paid. Forty cents is not unusual for skins which brought twenty-four cents a year ago. Notwithstanding the high price, muskrats continue a popular lining for ladies' fur-lined coats. Minks are doing surprisingly well, and houses which cater to the better class of trade find this fur easily in the lead. Coons continue high in price and sales are correspondingly good. Another fur which has taken a recent jump is Russian squirrel. Alaska sable is a debatable problem this year and manufacturers are endeavoring to keep up sales. It is clearly evident that the lower price has lessened the demand, particularly for the cheaper goods. The Persian lamb jacket occupies its staple position, and demand runs upon braided and military effects. It was felt in some quarters that the fur-lined goods had curtailed sales, but this has not been the case. Electric seal jackets are proving real good property. Ladies' Astrachan jackets and men's staple fur coats have done the usual amount of business.

The Tourist Trade.

Montreal, Quebec, Toronto and many border Canadian cities and towns are reaping a big harvest this year from the usual influx of American visitors. It is becoming more the practice of tourists to secure their supply of high class furs in the Canadian market. In the larger Canadian centres this trade is catered to, but some of the border towns neglect their opportunities; in fact, some towns visited by The Review, near the border, do not have representative fur departments in dry goods stores and Canadians have been known to buy furs in the United States. There is no valid excuse for this condition.

NOTES OF THE FUR TRADE.

The premises now occupied by Fraser, McMillan & Co. are required by the owners, next door, R. C. Struthers & Co.

WESTERN CANADA.

A fire which started in a cafe at Edmonton spread to the Parisian Millinery Co.'s store and R. Bruce English & Co.'s general store, and both were completely gutted.

The product of the Winter's trapping, in the country between Edmonton and the Rocky Mountains, is beginning to come into that city. Traders and trappers report that the supply of furs is smaller than usual, because of the very severe Winter. Lynx have been plentiful, but muskrats were scarce, as many lakes were dry.

MARITIME PROVINCES.

Sixty cases of new machinery have arrived at Yarmouth for the Cosmos Cotton Company, and a new mill is being erected between the present two buildings.

D. Grossman, of New Westminster, is making arrangements to go into the wholesale clothing business, and, at the same time, greatly extend his present retail business.

The drying house and storehouse of the St. Croix Cotton Mill, were badly damaged by fire. Luckily the main building escaped and there has been no suspension of operations.

The Canadian Millinery Review

The outlook is excellent for the coming millinery season. The importing houses have made big preparations, and are carrying heavy stocks. Prices rule high on all materials, and there is much trouble with deliveries.

The spring season, on the whole, was up to the average, and if only the coming Fall fulfills its promise, this will be the largest and most profitable millinery year the Dominion has ever experienced. If the weather had not played tricks, the Spring season would have been a record-breaker. As it was, the majority of the retailers cleaned up their stocks. The big department stores were less fortunate, and have still a big stock of straws and millinery trimmings on hand. The cold weather in April and May killed off repeats, and some of the importing houses have also suffered.

Advance Fall buying has been very heavy. Shipping has already commenced and the retail trade is asking for early shipments. This is partly because transportation is so poor and uncertain. Even in the larger cities, in the Northwest, it is no unusual thing for goods to be over a month in arriving at their destination, and in the more remote districts, this is prolonged indefinitely. Lost shipments are of frequent occurrence. Besides the aggravation and trouble, scarcity of materials has to be reckoned with. In many of the novelty lines, the loss is irreparable, as it is impossible to obtain repeats. To insure goods coming to hand when wanted, and to prevent loss of this kind, many retailers are having goods forwarded by express, and are paying express rates. Transit is slow enough in some parts of Ontario, but not so bad as in the west.

The other reason why retailers are desiring early shipments is because they now hold their openings at a much earlier date. Many stores carrying high-class millinery hold openings simultaneously with, or just after, the wholesale openings in Toronto and Montreal. This is because the mid-season trade is becoming of so much importance. Customers who patronize the high-class stores are always in want of something in the millinery line.

Montreal Openings

Large Shapes will be Prominent—Goura Mounts, Ribbons and Roses in Evidence.

Montreal and Toronto millinery firms were very busy the first of the month making final preparations for the Fall openings, taking place the first week in September. Foreign buyers have returned, bringing with them the Parisian and London fashion news, and in some cases initial shipments of pattern hats. There is a decided feeling of optimism regarding the Fall season, as styles show a radical departure and the country is prosperous enough to buy freely of the expensive trimmings shown. All the jobbers and specialty houses are making elaborate preparations, and expect a large influx of buyers.

Debenhams Showing.

Through the courtesy of J. H. Palmer, millinery buyer Debenhams (Canada), Limited, Montreal, a brief and authoratative account of millinery novelties is given. According to Mr. Palmer, Paris has a decided novelty which has been taken up in this market extensively in the form of block felt shapes. For the opening of the season this hat material will be very strong, and has a decided influence in bringing out elaborate trimmings. Of course couche velvet and taffeta silk hats are in evidence. Brims show a decided tendency to turnup in front, and this change is becoming to the majority of women. Mushroom effects are still prominent, although fronts are shorter and the back is longer. Higher crowns are shown on all models, and will be noticed extensively. The Gainsborough effect is the natural outcome of the showing of larger shapes; in fact, the large shapes easily predominate and this is the main change of the season.

Trimmings Prominent.

While shapes, broadly speaking, are not expensive, the wealth of trimming used makes up for any such deficiency Soft, drooping effects indicate the general tendency, and this is usually accomplished by the liberal employment of ostrich, goura mounts, and Marabout and ospreys. These all have a bushy effect, which goes well with the large shapes. Ribbons are extensively used, particularly with wing mounts, and very wide effects are employed. Taffetas are as prominent as ever. Mr. Palmer laid stress upon their large purchases of velvet ribbons, as these will be splendid property for trimming felt hats. Among flowers, velvet and silk roses in all the new tints occupy first position. Foliage to match often accompanies this form of ornament.

Fancy ball hat pins in Dresden effects and wedgewood tops are a decided innovation, and the fancier they are the better will be their sale. Large wings, long buckles and sheared quills are also worthy of buyers' attention.

Greenish Blue a Color Novelty.

The coming Fall will be a splendid season for black hats and black and white effects. White felts also appear well. However, as a color novelty, the new greenish blues appear to have the most favorable chance of success. Another shade spoken of by Debenham's buyer is khaki brown, which will be used largely as a trimming. Old rose and wine shades are also slated for a call. It is worth noting that tulles are being brought out in all shades, and embroidered bandeaux with tinsel and silk mixtures are shown.

Debenhams have made the interesting announcement that their workroom opens on August 12, and that early buyers will be accommodated by the middle of the month. This firm is in an excellent position to extend their millinery connection.

DISTINCTIVE LINES.

Canada's prosperity and evident willingness to use the highest class of goods has been taken advantage of by Revillon Bros., Limited, Montreal. In all general dry goods departments their lines exemplify exclusiveness and artistic taste. Their reputation for the best class of goods is well maintained in the lines specially adopted to the millinery trade.

NEW YORK LETTER

Hints from Paris, via New York, Regarding Fall Fashions.

The fashions, particularly in millinery, for Fall and Winter, 1907-8, are not to be, from present indications, radically different from what is being now worn. Take for example the matter of shape and general characteristics. The smartest hats worn in and around New York this season have been the extremely large mushroom, and bell shapes, and now we hear and see by what Paris sends us, that the large, that is, extremely large, hat is the only consideration abroad. Whatever else may or may not develop there, we can at least bank on the large hat, or, as we on this side of the Atlantic say, the picture hat. Then, another very important matter seems to be settled, and that is the question of the supremacy of the braid, or pressed hat. Once again the die is cast in favor of the pressed shape, as practically no braid hats are worn. This does not necessarily mean that machine-made hats are most in favor, for many of the handsomest hats of the season are hand-covered creations of velvet or satin, so, after all, it is largely a question of producing the effect of a pressed shape.

Satin hats have been conspicuous in the first showings. Somehow this material seems most in harmony with the Empire period, and you are to understand that from that picturesque period creators of fashion are still looking for, and finding, inspiration. At the risk of switching from Winter back into Summer styles, which are now spoken of in the past tense, I cannot refrain from alluding to the long-handled parasols which so cleverly suggest the old-time Empire wand or cane, and yet are practical as well as merely ornamental accessories. They lend the proper touch to the artistically gowned Summer girl. The handles are usually of a wood matching the color of the parasol, which again reminds one of another of the season's fads, and that is the fad of using colored parasols, ties, belts, and shoes and stockings, all, of course, matching exactly with light or white dress. The fad is a very pleasing one to the eye, but hardly to the purse, as colored shoes and hosiery to correspond, are not very economical, since the original cost is usually greater than plain black or tan, and many more pairs are necessary. Verily the shoe dealer has cause this season for rejoicing. Pink or blue shoes and stockings are considered extremely smart for evening wear, with dress either to match or of white. Red shoes, with corresponding hosiery are worn during the day with white frocks, not in town, of course, but at the smart resorts.

The fad for colored footwear will continue throughout the coming season, it is very certain, and the shoe departments are making very attractive displays. Another peculiarity in footwear is the fashion of wearing white hose with black pumps. This freak of fancy is probably the outcome of the craze for white serge or flannel suits, set off with collar and cuffs of black velvet. It is a season of unity of line and harmony of color, and therefore a season of remarkably lovely clothes.

* * *

It was a matter of considerable difficulty to select which hats to photograph, for at the first of the season one sees so many hats that are freaks, or efforts, that mean absolutely nothing. Yet the new, even the ultra features, must be shown. The models selected show all the salient features, size, general outline, etc., drooping tendency predominating, and the trimming arrangements, which have a decided tendency toward height, and, I might add, breadth. The majority of the hats are trimmed almost uniformly from the centre, rather than at the side. The trimming may be arranged in the centre of the front, in the centre of the back, or, as is the case in the beautiful model with its many ostrich tips, directly in the centre of the crown. When the trimming is arranged, at the side, as is shown in one instance, the trimming selected is usually a large, round feather cockade or pom pom. In my last letter I alluded to the shrub, tree or branch effects, as they are variously called, in plumage. Nothing lies close to the hat itself; all trimming seems to stand away from it, just as the hats themselves flare away from the heads, barely covering them, since they rest back on the crown of the head and rarely over the brow. Brims still continue to develop, and the tendency to roll back the front brim still prevails. Crowns continue to be fashioned on most generous lines, and brim facings are so numerous as to be quite the order of the day. The hat whose brim is not faced is quite the exception and not the rule. This is a fashion exceedingly becoming to the majority of faces, so that its success is practically assured. Whether the facing is put in plain or in pleated effects is a matter for individual decision. Wide ribbons are used for this purpose, the ribbon being laid on plain along the edge, and drawn into pleats at the headsize. Satin seems to have the preference for facings, although taffeta and velvet are used. Two-tone effects, particularly in velvet, are considered very smart. Edges are very carefully finished, some without embellishment of any kind, and others being trimmed with fancy pipings, folds of applique effects.

One of the new Fall Shapes. Velvet and Paradise.

The French felt shape, which is among the season's fancies, is made more becoming and much handsomer in effect by a facing of darker velvet. Green, brown and grey, are the colors most in evidence in felts, the green of the vivid Empire period, the soft smoke or blue grey, and the Copenhagen blues being understood. A delicate shade of pale grey is poetically dubbed claire de lime, and in chiffons this particular shade is having a distinct success.

There is nothing but promises of greater profit. The widest, richest and most beautiful ribbons are used with a lack of stint almost appalling. Apparently no matter how many feathers are used for the design, there is always room above or below the brim for a generous quantity of ribbon.

* * *

If shapes are, so to speak, unrestrained, colors are subdued and conservative, quiet greys, golden browns, dull blues, garnets and greens, all suggestive of old tapestry, are the shades to be expected in the lead. The same may be said of color combinations. Nothing daring, or Large Cloche Shape. Ostrich, Felt and Velvet.

Yucker & Josephy.

in any way unconventional, has appeared upon the horizen to date.

* * *

As is always the case when ribbons are lavishly used, ornaments are in demand. This is welcome news, as for several seasons past the ornament houses have done considerable complaining. The rather careless, or at least apparently careless, arrangement of ribbons, makes the use of fancy pins almost a necessity. Manufacturers have realized the demand for these ornaments and the result is that the offerings in this line are really a delight to lovers of the beautiful. All sorts of metals and imitation jewels are brought into play, as well as handsome cut jets, steel or beautiful mosaic effects. Pins with heads of clear and brilliant glass are thrust through knots of velvet. The effect is extremely smart when the hat is of a much darker color than the pins. Elongated buckles will be found to have the preference over all other shapes, since they follow the wide lines of brim and bow.

Gowns are made, for the most part, in one piece, and the handsomest follow the Empire lines. For street wear, however, this is not the case. We still find the sacque coat, or pony coat, as it was originally termed, a popular model, closely seconded by the smart cutaway. The newest fad in the way of a wrap, is the cape, which has been reinstated, not the tight-fitting shoulder cape, but the gracefully cut, circular cape, or the more classic tunic effects. The evening coats and wraps designed for wearing over elaborate gowns, are unusually lovely. Many are of satin, trimmed round the edges with galoons of silver, gilt or Persian embroidery.

* * *

For the tailor-made there are innumerable cloth mixtures, stripes still being to the fore. The higher grade suits are being made up in plain materials, since fancy suitings have been taken up by the manufacturers of cheaper goods. The glad tidings that short skirts will continue in favor for street wear must not be allowed to go by unrecorded, or the fact that women are no longer expected to freeze their forearms by following the fashion and wearing elbow sleeves, although, for all but the street suit, they are still supreme.

Paris Fashions

By A. E. DACAM, for "Dry Goods Review."

Large Cloche Hats growing in Favor—Wing, Feather and Large Flower Trimmings—New Shapes on the Cloche Order—Japanese Embroideries—New Ideas in Coat Models.

The last race meetings and reunions of the season have left no doubt as to the almost universal popularity of the large cloche hats. The word large, in many instances, barely gives one an idea of the size—they are enormous. Worn far back on the head and trimmed with long feathers, immense wings of the seagull variety about twice the usual size and mounted on material that permits of their being bent into any shape required and remaining so, or large blooms such as convolvuli, arum lilies, roses, white Easter lilies, magnolia, nenuphar and all kinds of water lilies—these with plenty of foliage are loosely arranged in front of the hat, a few falling onto the crown and a spray carried round each side, gradually diminishing towards the back. No other trimming is employed, but a narrow cache peign carried all the way round and covered with tulle to match the color of the hair (quite irrespective of the hat) is used as a means of fastening the headdress to the loosely arranged coiffure. Medium sized ostrich feathers are used as tips and arranged in this same way. They are also often ruthlessly manipulated into plumes de fantaisie. In the case of the grenadier plumes, some of the down is twisted round the quills, so that, instead of falling from each side it stands out from all round. This, of course, is very delicate work as each piece of down has to be stitched apart, but in spite of their price being considerable they are much sought after. In the case of the large wings two only are used on a hat carried to each side from the centre of the front, but so pleated that the uninitiated would think there were several. When smaller wings are employed different colors are often used. Black and white are much seen on both black and white hats, while mauve on violet, alternated with the white, is very smart. Another new shape of a hat is a leghorn with the brim shorn in front and on one side, then the huge spray of flowers will be laid from the front across the wide brimmed side to the back. The front and narrow side are slightly raised by means of the cache peign or bandeau. A new form with high crown and narrow brim slightly cloche has just made its appearance and will certainly be proposed for Autumn wear. These, so far, are being trimmed in the same way as the cloche, with large bunches of flowers or plumes. A little later bunches of grapes will be employed in gold, silver and pale blue, as well as in the natural tints. The country hat (apart from the lingerie and embroidered models, which are much seen) is a panama with the brim waved or slightly cloche, and trimmed with a long scarf of toile or tussor, ornamented with a printed border design and fringed with grelots of white passementerie, with sometimes other colors introduced. This fringe will be a leading feature of the Autumn and Winter trimmings, not only for millinery, but on coats, cloaks, day and evening gowns it is already beginning to be extensively used. Another trimming that will be much employed is of bands of oriental embroidery, colored silks on a paler silk ground. Much of this is being imported from Japan and China, but very good imitations from eastern designs are being made at home. The oriental department in large drapery stores is beginning to play an important part and includes kimonas and matinees of all descriptions, trimmings, furniture, drapery, a wide range of porcelain and at least one maison de nouveaute has introduced packets of China tea.

Empire Green Chantung. Bias of darker green. Japanese Embroideried

Owing to the exceptionally cold Summer, more new models of coats and cloaks have been seen than is usual at this time of the year and they plainly indicate what the leading Fall styles will be. The long redingote is now being carried out in all the fashionable Summer materials, including tussor, embroidered linen and light cloths. Chantung, particularly the "gros grain" variety, is steadily replacing taffetas for day wear. It is even being used in rich oriental shades, such as the deep violet, sky blue, deep rose and warm yellows. The satin chiffon or mousseline is only used for evening wear. Short sac taffetas or chantung paletots, called "caracos" are much seen over lingerie and tussor gowns. These are very light, being unlined and carried out in delicate shades of pink, mauve, coral and green. This garment is so slight that it does little more than replace the crepe-de-chine scarf "pour changer." Some very smart cut-away jackets, open over a low waistcoat, carried out in dark shades of cloth, are being worn with a toile, tussor or serge skirt. A good model of this style is a white serge skirt, pleated at sides and back, simply ornamented with five rows of stitching around the hem. A low, double-breasted waistcoat of white silk, with a spotted design embroidered in green and mauve and nacre buttons shows a lingerie waist and tulle jabot. Over this is an open jacket, cut to the figure, of violet cloth, a deep-roll taffetas color and two large buttons in the same shade. This is cut sharply away at the waist in front and prolonged to half length at the back. With this was worn a large violet straw hat, trimmed with grey feathers. Another instance is a white serge skirt, over which is worn a long black and white check redingote. The short Japanese sleeves form shoulder capes, from under which are brought half-length gigot. This also was accompanied by a violet hat, trimmed white and shaded violet wings. Another striking redingote is in torquoise blue, terminating in points round the bottom. This is double-breasted and ornamented round the waist by five rows of white and blue galon straps. The roll collar and cuffs are of black satin, with a narrow edging of white, with black spots.

Sketch No. 1 represents a short semi-sac paletot, carried out in empire green chantung and almost covered with Japanese embroideries, in shades of silk toning with the green. The edging is a biais of the same material in a darker shade. No. II. is a loose-fronted jacket in mouse grey tussor, with invisible fastening, revers and buttons of black satin. Just showing is a white pique vest with sating heading. The embroidered bands are carried out in oriental design and color. No. III. is of tose-colored toile, pointed in front and richly ornamented with a heavy white lace. The liseres is of a deeper shade of rose-colored silk, while buttons and loops are carried out in the same shade of silk braiding. No. IV. is a handsome model in tussor of a pale green shade, having a deep border of cloth, in a deeper tone, which is richly ornamented with gold and silver galon. The loose Japanese sleeves are finished with a lace frill.

An amusing novelty of the moment is a bathing costume made of silk, through which the water is guaranteed not to penetrate, long stockings and a chic capote to match. In this way the bather can go into the water, wetting only her arms, neck and face. For the rest, bathing costumes are carried out in serge, the popular tussor and toile. All the better class models are made with a skirt which reaches to the knee, quite covering the pantaloons. Stockings are in silk of the same shade, as is also the cap, which invariably takes the form of the little Breton capote.

The New Millinery Shapes

Ultra Hat Very Large—Modifications in Order—Styles Picturesque and Becoming Shapes.

The ultra hat is large—more than large, it is immense—but apart from size this Fall the whole trend of fashion is towards a most becoming picturesqueness. There is, however, much scope for judicious modification before Paris and New York ideas, will become suitable for the Canadian trade. Milliners made good use of this quality in the Spring season that is passing, and, no doubt, will arrive at the same satisfactory results this Fall. The extreme hats will grace the openings, both retail and wholesale, and when they have served their purpose of attracting attention, will give place to more wearable styles. Milliners will obtain ideas from them, and while retaining their becoming features, will modify the extreme outline and style. The leading shape at present is the cloche or bell, an evolution of the mushroom so much worn this Summer. The hats shown even with modifications promise to be large and the majority have the drooping brim. Many have the long back and the short front, or have sides broad and are shorter in the back and front. There is a good deal of irregularity in the brim, and many are on the shepherdess order. Soft, fine felts that can be manipulated into varied shapes, particularly those with the balloon crown will be big sellers. For the early trade many sailor shapes are shown, but these will be all on the trimmed order. Many hats are shown with medium high crowns, and these are expected to take, as they will form a support for the trimmings employed. Besides the felts shown, the velvet covered shapes, and velvet hat will come later on in the season.

As last year, the early season promises to be largely a color season; later the black hat promises to come into strong vogue. Among early season models the taffeta hat promises to be excellent. Bands of taffeta are used as a brim finish.

Feathers.

Particularly in the early part of the season an extensive and elaborate use will be made of wings. Paris milliners are using wings to a great extent for the trimming of smart street hats. The fashion is for large wings—the larger effects are the most used. These large, broad wings are used in pairs. Coque plumes are in high favor, both in the natural metallic shadings and in fancy colors. They come in plumes, pompoms, breast and in sweep effects. These effects promise to be great sellers, as in the more medium-priced hats they take the place of the expensive ostrich plumes.

Ostrich has increased in price, and is still advancing. Notwithstanding high prices, it will be greatly used. For dressy occasions there is nothing to take its place. Colored plumes are the sellers at present, but there are strong indications of a return to black feathers. Milliners always rejoice when black ostrich is the vogue, as it is always a strong and profitable seller.

Ribbons, Silks and Velvets.

Ribbons are going to be extravagantly used. The vogue is for the wider widths. Models on this side all show a remarkable partiality for ribbon trims. Velvet, taffeta, messaline and satin ribbons are all used. Black ribbon velvet in very wide widths promises well. There is again confidence in fancies, stripes, shots and Dresdens all being featured. Though handsome, there is little novelty seen here.

Taffeta hats promise to sell in the early days of the season, and taffeta will be freely used for the big bow trimmings.

This is to be a great velvet season. The velvet hat will be a big factor, and velvet will be one of the most used trimmings. Plain velvets will be used, and some exquisite qualities are shown for covering and trimming purposes.

A feature this year will be the absence of back trimmings—the trimming being almost entirely confined to the front. Folds of silk are often used around the crown, but many hats do not have even this. Bindings and facings will play a big part, and many facings will be of a contrasting color to the hat. Stitched taffeta bindings are a new feature. Big puff crowns of velvet, or silk will be freely used. Hat trimmings will be massed on the crown in front, in most cases completely hiding it.

Flowers.

At the present moment Paris is using quantities of flowers upon dressy hats. The blooms used are very large. Morning glories, large violets, wisteria, iris, Easter lilies, and big roses are used. White flowers and white foliage is also used.

Ornaments,

The leading line in ornaments is fancy pins. These come chiefly in ball and in flat effects. The variety of kinds is too numerous to describe, but the soutache pin is something new. Large jet pins promise to be much used.

Colors.

The color of the moment in Paris is deep violet or purple. This color has rather unexpectedly come to the front in that city, and many of the new models will be in that color. It will be good in Canada, particularly with the ultra trade. All the blue shades, both navy and in the more fanciful colors, marine and peacock shades are ultra in this class of colors. There is little doubt about the prominence of browns and the leather shades. Clear greens are in high favor, and the Burgundy shades will be good.

Montreal

The Largest and Oldest Manufacturers of Raincoats in the Dominion.

Owing to the absence of Spring repeats, manufacturers are in good shape for Fall orders, and are ready to make full deliveries of the advance orders placed for Fall. Though the cold Spring was bad for the garment department, from the point of view of the Spring selling, it certainly helped to clear up the balance of Winter stock. This was done, too, without much price-cutting. The garments were not only cleared out, but the cold weather enabled them to be well worn. Therefore, not only the retailer, but his customers, are in the position of wanting goods. Then there is a complete style change promised, in the most important lines, and this always makes business good.

Waists

Big Selling Season Anticipated—A Varied Line Bought—Novelty Lace Embroideries for the 1908 Waist.

Advance orders for the Fall season have been placed upon a large scale, so large in fact, that some buyers are getting a little scared at their size. There is little cause for such uneasiness as the Fall season promises to be a splendid one, the blouse or separate waist, is still an indispensable garment, and must be worn to complete the toilette, with either the two-piece suit, the kimona suit, or the separate skirt. Therefore its sale must in the natural trend of business be a large one. The line carried also promises to be varied, and silk, lingerie and woolen waists, as well as fancy waists of lace and net, will all be sellers.

In the silk, and wool waists, the plain and semi-tailored styles are shown, and in silk waists deep interest is taken in the more dressy, lace-trimmed models.

There is little novelty in the tailored styles. They are shown in combination of wide and narrow tucks, have long sleeves and button down the front. They come in plain taffeta and messaline, and also in fancy stripe, tartan and check silks. In more dressy lines, taffeta chiffon, messalines, satin duchesse, etc., are used. These are lace trimmed and have the yoke effects of lace, or tucked net. The sleeve style is the three-quarter length. Ciel, rose pink and other evening shades predominate. The Japanese silk waist, in new models, is one of the best sellers. On some of the later models pleatings and jabots are seen as trimming ideas, and the Japanese sleeve is a feature. The latter often takes a bretelle and belt form.

Lace waists in filet, cluny and figured nets have also sold exceedingly well. White is the popular seller, but butter and ecru promise a later prominence.

Lingerie models for January and early Spring selling promise to be unusually attractive, and many novel effects are assured. The high novelty will be the use and manipulation of the new lace embroideries. These will be extensively used in bands and medallions. Through the courtesy of a manufacturing firm, The Review is enabled to give an advance showing of these handsome embroideries. Though they are high style, and very artistic, they are not unduly high priced, and the waists trimmed with them will be available at prices that are not out of reach of the medium trade.

Varied Styles in Fall Coats

Shorter Lengths Included in Novelty Lines—Varied Styles —Semi-fitted and Fitted Coats Shown.

Much of the early business has been done in neat tweed effects, in greys and fancies. These will sell in the early days of the season, but already there are strong indications pointing to black as the standard seller, and that black coats of kersey and broadcloth will dominate the season.

All authorities are practically agreed upon this point, but upon the style question there is a diversity of opinion. As the tendency is for variety in all dry goods lines, it is possible the man who has confidence in the more closely-fitting styles is justified in his particular outlook, as well as the man who advocates the looser styles, and in their special fields both models will sell.

The merchant who carries a small stock and finds it difficult to make any but the simpler alterations, will buy and push the looser-fitting lines, while the larger city departments will take the tailored coats, in the more fitted models. They will have no trouble in handling them, as they employ experts who are competent to fit and to make the necessary alterations.

The loose back coat, as now seen, promises, when translated into black, to be somewhat modified. An easy-fitting coat will result, but one that is smaller under the arms, and that tends to outline the figure. This shape gives a more fitted effect—all the more so, because the shoulders are made broad by braid trimmings, and with extended shoulder effects. Many garments show trimmings of braid and soutache, so applied as to give the Japanese sleeve effect. This shape is new and promises well for the popular trade, as there will be little alteration trouble attending its sale.

City stores sold a good number of fitted and semi-fitted coats last Fall, and every coat line shown for 1907-08 I believe, contains several samples of these garments. The styles are strictly tailor-made and are very smart. They are also newer than the loose-backed styles. They have the further advantage of being more easily fitted, and of needing few alterations.

Fitted coats will be stocked by stores that can make the necessary alterations. This, however, will confine their sale to the larger departments.

Lengths will be varied. The loose models are shown in the long lengths, but the more fitted coat models are seen in the three-quarter lengths. Cutaway effects are strong in this style and length. The imitation fur coats are invariably made up into hip length models.

Plain cloths, kerseys and broadcloths, promise to lead. In the better end of the trade there is a general request for lined coats. The sale of these higher priced garments are greatly influenced by the attractiveness of their silk linings. There is a persistent demand for fur-lined coats in long loose models. Wide-wale piece-dyed fabrics are beginning to be used for the shells of fur lined garments.

Whitewear

Travelers Now on the Road with Samples for January Sales—Advances will Have to be Paid.

Whitewear travelers are starting out on the road with the samples for January sales. Though the early Summer selling was interfered with by the unseasonable weather, stocks have been well reduced, and there is nothing to militate against a successful campaign. The manufacturing houses have every confidence in the outlook, and have made preparations for big business. As higher prices are presaged in cottons, and trimmings and laces particularly are advancing, merchants must not be surprised if they are called upon to pay more for their new goods.

As usual, it is the low lines that show the advance most clearly, and the trade will not get as good an article to sell at the fixed prices as last year. Some low-priced lines have been dropped altogether, as it no longer pays the manufacturer to make them. He expects to be busy with the better paying garments, and is cutting out the less profitable ones. There is no sign of any change in the cotton market, and mills making soft-finished cottons, nainsooks, etc., so much used in fashioning undergarments, are heavily sold ahead. Therefore, there is no reason for the retailer delaying the placing of his order, but every reason why he should do so early. Slow deliveries will again rule from the mills, and this will mean that the manufacturer will also be behind.

In the lower lines, embroideries will be the most used trimming, but lace will hold its place in the better grades. In gowns, the slip-over is the best seller. Combinations are increasing in favor. Long chemises promise to sell.

There has been an increased call for flannelette garments, and manufacturers are finding that they have underestimated their requirements. This demand is due, in a measure, to the cold winter experienced last year, and also to increased settlements in the Northwest, and at other points.

Novelties in Children's Wear

Children's and Misses' Garment Department Growing in Importance—Big Showing of Bear Skin and Imitation Fur Coats.

One of the later developments in garmentdom is the separate department for misses' and children's goods. Only a few years ago a small assortment was carried along with women's garments, in the large departmental stores. This has developed, until the misses' and children's section has become only second in importance to that devoted to their elders. Small centres are following this lead, and are finding these lines profitable ones to stock.

Bear skins have for some seasons been the leading sellers for small children's wear. This year they are more important than ever, and in the guise of imitation furs are selling for misses' wear as well. The leading fur imitations are caracul, snowflake, Persian lamb. White, grey and brown are the colors most in demand. Grey krimmer is shown, but the more fancy cloths lead. Tams and muffs, for the larger girls, and bonnets, leggings and muffs for the smaller, are shown, to match the coats.

Broadcloths and kerseys are also sellers, but are not so well considered as the fur fabrics.

There is little change in the cut of either misses' or children's coats. The only novelty is the free use of braid trimmings, and the military cords and frogs as fastenings.

Little girls' dresses are pretty much in the same styles as in other years. Sailor and Peter Thompson dresses are in high favor, with navy, royal, white and red as the leading colors. One-piece dresses are freely shown, and in the usual styles. Jumper dresses, with yokes of tucked silk, are selling for older girls.

Misses suit and skirt styles follow closely those shown in the women's department.

Corsets

More High Bust Models Selling—Increasing Demand for High Grade Corsets.

Advance orders for Fall have been the heaviest on record with the home manufacturers, and factories will be taxed to their full capacity in order to make deliveries. Though cotton prices, the prices of other materials, and the cost of labor, are all on the up-grade, there has been no general advance in corset prices. Apparently just the same value as ever is being given in standard lines.

There is a growing sale for the long hip and high bust corset, and though many women still cling to the older models, this style of corset is coming down from the ultra lines into more general use. At first it was regarded as a stout-figure model, but now it is asked for by women of all types of figure. This means that the long, slender figure is the one in vogue, and that this is the proper model to produce it. The bust, too, must be shaped, as well as the hips and this the high bust does, in a measure.

Fashionable dressmakers strongly approve the use of the brassiere, to help out the deficiencies of the corset. Many of them now send out a brassiere with every gown they make. The city trade has taken to brassieres, and the larger stores all show and sell them.

Most departments are finding a growing sale for the more expensive models. This, to a great extent, is in the hands of the selling staff. It is not in the power of any staff, however willing to push higher priced, and more profitable goods if the buyer does not stock a full assortment of the proper sizes and numbers. Buyer and selling force should work in harmony. Those behind the counter, who meet customers, hear their comments and know their wants, should have a voice in selecting stock.

LONDON.

One result of the catastrophe here on the afternoon of July 15 was the complete wiping out of a newly established retail clothing house and the death of both members of the firm. Messrs. Hamilton and Long had only been in business together for about a year. For a long time prior to starting for themselves both had been employed by R. J. Young & Co., Mr. Hamilton as cutter and Mr. Long as salesman. They appeared to be building up quite a nice trade when the collapse came. W. T. Hamilton was an old and esteemed citizen; had served a number of years on the board of education, and at the time of his death was a member of the public library board. Joseph Long was an enterprising young business man, and gave promise of a splendid career. A sad incident in connection with his death is the fact that he was engaged to be married in the Fall.

Travelers report that the advance in the price of spool thread has caused a decided increase in the demand, people now buying from country stores by the dozen instead of single spool.

Wholesalers are kept quite busy filling sorting orders. There have been recent advances in floor oilcloths and linoleums.

When he gets into his new store on Richmond St., opposite the City Hall, which is now being fitted up for him, W. F. Boughner, the Dundas St. men's furnisher, intends engaging in the manufacture of clothing.

Shown by Hart Mfg. Co., Montreal.

Fraser, McMillan & Co., wholesale furs and hats, have purchased the adjoining premises on Richmond St., now occupied by McMahen, Granger & Co., wholesale dry goods. The premises now occupied by Fraser, McMillan & Co., are required by the owners, R. C. Struthers & Co., next door. A new warehouse will be bought or built by McMahen, Granger & Co.

London travelers complain of an annoying delay at Clinton, caused by the Grand Trunk holding the L. H. & B. train fifty-five minutes, until the arrival of the train from Toronto every morning. They can see no reason why they should be put to such inconvenience which is a very serious one to them. Such delays certainly destroy any geographical advantage the London business men may have over their eastern competitors.

The question of dry goods travelers' holidays is a live one just now. The old and experienced men, of course, are not troubled over the matter; they have been through the mill and know enough to take their two weeks off when they feel like it. Not so the young, ambitious fellows, however. They are, as a rule, particularly anxious to make a big showing, and fear that should they be off the road for a week or two the other fellows will be getting an undue advantage over them. Hence, they hate to stay in even for a day. The wholesale grocers have set a good example in this respect in fixing a set time for all travelers' holidays, and the dry goods men might well take pattern from them. With all travelers off the road at one time the more or less oppressed retailer might be able to take a little rest himself.

The indications are that more London travelers will have their samples in Toronto during Exhibition this year than ever before. Toronto men have found London a good place for business during the Western Fair, and Londoners who have spent exhibition weeks in the Queen City have, as a rule, been no less satisfied with results; so that the probabilities are that Toronto and London will hereafter be more popular than ever as gathering places for commercial men during the late days of August and the early days of September.

ST. JOHN, N.B.

The transfer of the Gibson Cotton Mills to the Canadian Colored Cottons Company, of Montreal, took place on July 1. The purchase price is understood to have been in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. The mills were erected and equipped 23 years ago by Alexander Gibson at a cost of nearly $800,000.

St. John has now the only independent mills in Canada—the Cornwall & York. The Canadian Colored Cotton Co. now control six mills and the Dominion Textile Co., fourteen. The St. John mills alone, of the twenty odd plants in Canada, are strictly independent, and are entirely owned by local shareholders.

Manchester, Robertson, Allison have purchased the Flood Building on King St. This building, which stands between the two M.R.A. stores, has long been desired by the firm, but until last month they were unable to purchase it. No definite plans as to its use have yet been made by its new owners and possession will not be given until May, 1909. This firm will soon be numbered among the greatest houses of the Dominion. New lines are constantly being added to the stock, which, in the various stores, now consists of all branches of dry goods, carpets and house furnishings, millinery, men's clothing, furniture and numerous lines of fancy crockery and art goods. The property recently purchased on Prince William St., which adjoins the main building in the rear, is now being cleared off in readiness for the erection of a big wholesale warehouse to relieve the congestion in this department.

A rather serious fire occurred in the St. Croix Cotton Mill at Milltown on July 12. The damage amounted to about $10,000 and was covered by insurance. The loss was confined mainly to stock and the interior of the dye house.

A number of boxes and barrels supposed to contain junk, consigned to one "Jacobson," were examined by customs officers here a couple of weeks ago and found to contain footwear of American make. The goods were billed from St. Stephen and, it is thought, were being smuggled in. The matter is being investigated.

Beverly R. Macauley, of the firm of Macauley Bros. & Co., is in England on a buying trip for his firm. Owing to the recent disastrous fire which this house suffered, their purchases on the other side will be unusually heavy.

Scovil Bros. (Oak Hall) have inaugurated a campaign of up-to-date advertising. A Ford runabout auto was purchased and a top affixed bearing this legend, "Oak Hall's Advertising Auto." The machine has been sent all over the country, and has distributed advertising matter in the rural districts. The scheme has proved of great value to the firm, as evidenced in the increase in their out-of-town trade. A gigantic mark-down sale was conducted by this firm from the 18th of July to the 27th, and was reported to have been the most successful in their history.

Donald McKenzie, formerly a well-known dry goods man here, being a member of the firm of McKenzie Bros., who conducted a store on King St. before the big fire of '77, was a visitor to the city last month. He is now living in New York, having left St. John shortly after the fire.

A disastrous fire occurred at Hartland, Carleton county, on the morning of July 15, when a number of the leading business houses were wiped out. The loss is estimated at $100,000, with insurance less than $20,000. Among the properties destroyed was the large general store of Keith & Plummer, which was one of the largest business houses in the county. Their loss is about $50,000, with insurance of only $8,100. In all, fourteen firms were put out of business. The majority of them have started rebuilding. The fire is thought to have been of incendiary origin, and an investigation is being made.

In common with other cities throughout Canada, and, in fact, all over the world, St. John is now feeling the stringency in the money market and the banks have raised the discount rate from 6 to 7 per cent., and in some cases to 8 per cent.

The C.P.R. steamships have again announced their intention of making St. John their Winter port in the coming season. The first steamer will sail from here November 15. Halifax will be a port of call for embarking and disembarking the mails.

Frederick W. Daniel, B. E. Huestis, A. E. Raymond, Frederick E. Kee and Norman E. Moore, of St. John, are seeking incorporation as the "F. W. Daniel Company, Limited."

STAPLES AND RAW MATERIALS

Spring Lines of Ginghams Out — Other News of the Staple Trade.

Throughout the past month no particular feature has been noticeable in the staple trade. Certain lines have been more or less active, but there has not been that feeling which characterizes the trade when there is something to excite special interest.

The clearing of Summer goods and Fall shipments in different lines have occupied the attention of jobbers to a certain extent.

Canadian mills just now argue that prices of domestic goods are cheaper in comparison than the markets in England or across the line. At present domestic mills are quoting fair prices considering the conditions of the market, and are doing their very best in the way of deliveries. Further, they have not taken advantage of the extraordinary situation.

Prints for Spring.

Considerable interest is manifested in the trade over the outlook for prints for Spring, 1908. Manufacturers are working hard bringing out some fine lines. Prices will be issued about the middle of the month. As yet it is difficult to state what the price situation will be, but there is sure to be no lowering of prices.

Fall Trade.

In wholesale circles wrapperettes have sold rather better than last year, in spite of the fact that prices advanced from 8 cents to 9½ cents at the beginning of the year on the most popular line. Deliveries to the wholesale trade have been much better than was expected, and much more satisfactory than on most of cotton goods. Downettes have met with a ready sale on account of the price being 8 cents, although the 8-cent line of last year, which is now 9½ cents, has proved just as popular. Empire twill, on account of the decided improvement in patterns over former seasons, has, to a very large extent, prevented importations of American cloths of same weight and construction.

In regard to flannelettes, retailers who disregarded the advice of the wholesale trade to place early are in a very awkward position. The mills have withdrawn most of wider width lines, so that comparatively few of the wholesalers are in a position, at present, to accept anything but small orders, as they cannot replenish their stocks. The shortage in Saxony flannelettes, particularly in whites, continues, and no very great quantity is expected, before Spring, 1908, business sets in.

High prices continue to rule, and many of those best able to judge state that Spring business will be booked at even higher figures than those now quoted.

Cottonade deliveries continue rather slow, while tickings and denims are fair.

1908 Ginghams.

Manufacturers have issued their new line of gingham samples and started showing to the wholesale trade about the middle of July.

Many wholesalers have placed orders for Canadian ginghams, which show, perhaps, less advance than any of the other Canadian cotton goods. The feeling of the trade is that first orders will be the only ones to go through on ginghams, and the retailer who wishes to procure a choice selection will be obliged to buy early.

Fall price list on ginghams will be issued early next month. The reason why Canadian manufacturers started showing samples so early was on account of foreign competition.

Whites and gray deliveries for Fall were slow. Prices continue high and steady, with no prospects of lowering for some time to come.

Energy

The serious and long-continued depression in the weather and in trade will have the effect of making many outfitters cast about for a remedy, says Men's Wear. There are probably few tradesmen who do not feel the need of making a special effort to counteract the damage done by the wet season. What are the best means of regaining lost ground—or raising lowered returns? The question will be answered, of course, in countless different ways according to each man's individuality and circumstances. But all will agree on the need of renewed energy. Energy, however, is not a quality easily commanded at will. Though it is often the one step between mediocrity and genius, the one bridge from failure to success, the step is not taken, the bridge is uncrossed To tell some people to be energetic is equal to advising them to be rich, powerful, lucky, or stout. They would like to be more vigorous, but, even in the face of declining trade, seem unable to shake off natural indolence. Their windows might be dressed just a little better, the stock might be just a little better assorted, the customers might be a wee bit better served. But a cursed sceptical apathy dulls their spirits and clogs the business wheels.

It is fortunate for some of us, however, that energy can be acquired. "He alone has energy that cannot be deprived of it," is a false proverb. On the contrary, an energetic man can become indolent, or an indolent man can become energetic. The best plan for the too nonchalant person is to try and overcome his listlessness by steady, deliberate method. Observation of busy men tends to show that most of them have some strong incentive to action. The strongest incentives are nature, necessity, health and habit. If one is not energetic by nature it is useless to bewail the disadvantage. The better way is to try to acquire by patience and practice what niggard nature has denied. Perhaps the best way to do this is to always keep clearly in mind the necessity of sustained effort, the need of preserving the health as carefully as possible, and the advantage of good business habits. If the fact that necessity is the great spur to action is constantly remembered it will bear good fruit. The thought will make work easy, and even welcome. The more thoroughly the need of doing a given action is realized, the more quickly even a lethargic man will do it.

It will, therefore, greatly help the naturally indolent to cultivate a strong sense of the need for action. This should be strengthened by as many reasons as can be gathered together or conjured up. Let the mind dwell on the advantages of industry. Whip the brain with fears of the penalties of laziness. Dread the scorn of the hard worker. Preach to yourself daily and hourly. Stifle any whispering temptation to shirk. Scout any plausible pretext to neglect duty. Have bright, clear aims and encourage a feeling of loyalty to them. Get enthusiasm and feed it well. Regard work as a blessing, or as a pastime in which to take pride and delight. Think of it as a providential preventive of monotony and madness. Realize the uncertainty of the future, the dangers of delay, and cultivate an anxiety to provide for old age. Foster a healthy spirit of discontent. Grow some ambition and develop a friendly but keen rivalry against your competitor.

Health is usually essential to energy. It is not so much beyond our control as is sometimes imagined. To become or to remain energetic it is necessary to strictly safeguard one's health. Instead of being the merely moral or mental virtue usually supposed, energy often depends on the healthy activity of the vital organs. To maintain this activity should be the constant care of every person especially if not blessed with a naturally vigorous constitution. A flow of energy is the almost invariable result of the heart, stomach, skin, lungs, liver, and kidneys working harmoniously. Whatever impedes the free action of these organs stops energy. Doctors tell us that cleanliness by frequent bathing, moderation in diet, and adequate fresh air and exercise are the main requisites to a healthy body. Indolence is sometimes wrongly attributed to a sluggish liver. Unwonted lethargy can more often be traced to over-feeding or unsuitable diet. A sluggish liver, however, should never be permitted to depress or control the energies of the mind. Rather let the brain dictate a course which shall doctor the liver. Any natural weakness must be counteracted by extra care. Energy is largely imitative, being often stimulated by its appearance in others. It is generative. Energy breeds energy. Indolence is a disease frequently cured by work. The chief bar to action is the start When a start is made the half-dreaded task or duty often becomes a pleasure.

Habit is a great help to energy, because it creates a sort of conscience which pricks us when we break the habit. It acts as an automatic monitor. This is one strong reason for forming good, active habits and discarding slothful ones. A rule may be but an artificial aid. It may be broken occasionally. But it is better than no aid at all, even if sometimes departed from. It is wise, therefore, to consider the natural result of present habits and how those habits may be improved. Good habits help to prevent waste of energy. To conserve is often as important as to create. Energy, like other stock, needs to be well kept and well displayed.

A SPLENDID HABERDASHERY.

Will J. Whelan's splendid store at Quebec, which is illustrated in this issue, was built in March, 1906. The front, window sides and backgrounds are of rich mahoghany. Bent plate glass is used at the entrance, with only one-inch upright in front. The curtains are of silk, pleated. In the window on the right is a line of fine all-silk underwear. The base of this window is green. The other contains neckwear, in green, with large spots. The base is a dark cardinal silk plush. Mr. Whelan caters to the best trade.

Shirts and Collars

Show Some Stiff Bosoms for Fall—Pay More Attention To Large Sizes.

When the Fall selling season opens up The Review would like to see stiff bosom shirts included in the display of every retailer. Surely there is no one who does not recognize that a great deal more business would result from the establishment of a sharp distinction between the shirts for Spring and Summer and those for Fall and Winter.

Carrying an ample stock for all kinds of trade is another way of getting and keeping a good shirt trade. Yet this carrying of big stocks has been a retail bugbear for a long time. Perhaps the fault with the dealer lies in the direction of catering too much to young men's trade which means only a full stock of the most-called-for sizes. But when it comes to fostering the trade of large men and inviting their patronage with a goodly choice of patterns, staple and nobby, most dealers shy at the size of the stock such an assortment menas. And yet most such dealers avow their belief in the commercial truism that "if you want to get the business you have got to have the stock when people call for it." If more men's stores and departments had a nice assortment of styles in sizes from 16½ to 18 they would do more business in shirts, and it is the big end of the retailing of furnishings for men. And why not make a specialty of stouts in shirts? If the dealer is located in a town that is large enough to make the fat men's trade on shirts worth while, why not get it? It is on the large sizes that most of the custom trade is dependent, and wholly because big men cannot get what they need in ready-to-wears, excepting, perhaps, in whites and a few staples at some few stores in the very large cities. It would pay for at least one dealer in a town to become famed as headquarters for big men's shirts in nobby patterns up to size 18, or say 17.

Next Spring's Colors and Patterns.

New York advices say: Beige is the best new shade for next year. It is a buff, and whenever such brownish or tan tints come in green comes to the front as a complementary color. Consequently, beige and green are favorites in the buying. In patterns the leaning is toward broad effects in stripes and cluster stripes, and figures. Plaids and checks have dropped to staples in cheap grades.

Neckwear

Colors Most Popular in Spring Will Lead Again for Fall —Not Many Bright Colors.

There is nothing startlingly new in neckwear for Fall, but the lines are very attractive, nevertheless. Brown, in the lighter shades, has made an appearance, but The Review does not anticipate any kind of a run on it. The colors most popular in the Spring are likely to be the best sellers.

According to neckwear manufacturers, brighter colors should have been here long ago, and now their arrival,

COLOSSUS

THE BIGGEST SHIRT MADE

Josh Billings once said, "Konsider the postage stamp my son. Its usefulness konsists in its ability to stick to a thing till it gets there." We have made "COLOSSUS" Shirts and Overalls our special study and stuck to it. This explains our phenomenal success. Sales of "Colossus" garments were enormous last season. For next year we expect all records broken.

A good many people were disappointed in not getting their repeats last season. Our original orders for these dependable garments being so much larger than any previous season that we were able to accept but few repeat orders. For this season place your orders early, all you think you can sell; repeats will be hard to get.

Samples are now in the hands of all wholesalers, and they are better than ever before.

in anything like force, must be deferred to next Spring, at any rate. Of course a few lines with more than ordinary life in them are seen among the Fall goods, but the more sombre shades still hold the market. They will continue to do so as long as waistcoats have the long opening, and, in consequence, a large cravat is necessary.

Goods with self figure will be much more acceptable than those of plain material.

The three-inch four-in-hand is again strong.

For some time neckwear values have been away below former standards, and the merchant who has exerted himself to sell higher priced lines than before is the one who has made most money and, besides, has been able to satisfy his customers. Very probably he did not imagine how easy it could be done until he tried. There are others who go on at the old pace and are afraid to depart from it. Goods to retail at 50 cents are the best that they carry, while competitors, with little better opportunity than they, have raised their standard until they are now handling lines as high as $1.50.

Ready-to-Wear Clothing

Somebody in Every Town is Going to Make Money Out of This Department.

The ready-to-wear clothing industry in Canada has shown great progress during the past five years, and the development in the next five years will be even greater. No other branch of the men's wear trade offers such a large field, and the manufacturers who make the best garments, and the retailers who handle them, are bound to profit very materially. In the United States the great bulk of clothing is ready-to-wear. It looks just as well as the product of most of our merchant tailors, and there is a very considerable difference in price. Scientific methods in designing are the whole thing. When they attain a higher standard here nearly all of us will buy ready-to-wear clothing, and be able to have two suits for very little more than we now pay for one.

Somebody in every town is going to make money out of this department, but he has got to start in right away and carry only such goods as he will not be ashamed to show to dressy customers.

Fall orders, as we have previously stated, are heavy, and factories are very busy.

Hats

On account of the straw hat season not opening up until late, cut prices were not inaugurated as early as usual, although they should have been held off for some time longer. Stocks in no instances were heavy, and clearing sales might well have been deferred until after August 1 at least. This would have meant full profits on quite a lot more goods, for the weather continued fine and fairly warm. Some of the most prominent of New York retailers got together and discussed this point, with the result that they all signed an agreement not to reduce prices until after a certain date. This move should have a splendid effect on the retail trade generally. The idea should be taken up in Canada.

There is no change in the styles for Fall. The black stiff hat of the shapes popular last Spring will hold the demand.

SHALL COURTESY BE RESTRICTED?

Doubtless the average merchant would regret the slightest suggestion of placing limitations upon the degree of urbanity to be accorded patrons as a straining after a subject of debate. Unquestionably, too, he would not be disposed to bestow much thought upon the proposal that visitors to the shop be treated with scant courtesy if their purchasing propensities are not of the most desirable sort.

Yet the fact remains that the question is one which is claiming the attention of haberdashers and others not alone in this country, but also abroad. Recent issues of English trade journals have contained numerous references to the part politeness should play in business. And be it said, the comments have been varied, and quite emphatic on one side as on the other. Some have contended that commercial transactions do not call for more than ordinary civility; that a man gets what he pays for; that the merchant is in no way indebted to him for his patronage. It has been argued, also, that too frequently this quality of politeness is overdone, and the clerk or the proprietor who puts himself in the light of one who must affect an extremely affable manner in order to hold his custom thereby detracts from his shop's reputation as a place where value-giving alone is relied upon to hold trade.

Now appears a prominent haberdasher with a plea for a change of tactics on the part of his fellow merchants. Says he:

"You may discuss this matter eternally from the standpoint of propriety, and different men will still be of different minds. What I maintain is based upon practical operations. I have seen many a man enter a shop and buy one collar. The salesman's face would beam. He would draw forth a mirror and aid the purchaser in adjusting his cravat. In fact, in every way the merchant has impressed me as appreciating highly that man's custom when he knew absolutely that his visitor bought only when he felt it unavoidable, and then in the smallest possible quantity.

"Now in England such a man would mighty soon be made cognizant of the fact that no great value was placed upon his custom. If he repeated the offence several times the merchant would make his opinion so apparent the man would go elsewhere the next time.

"I believe that such an attitude toward the chronically small buyer should be encouraged. I believe we could create a new conception of business, one that would make men hesitate to play the 'cheap' act with us when they are extremely free with their shekels in the cigar store and elsewhere. Mind you, I do not advocate a coarse, rough treatment of anyone, yet I believe that by his manner the merchant and his salesmen may indicate their sentiments towards those who make a continual practice of buying the smallest amount of merchandise possible to carry them through the day or week."

With all due deference to this view, we incline to the belief that whatever be the policy pursued abroad, the Canadian people, to speak bluntly, would not stand for it. They are remarkably independent. They realize how keen competition is, especially in the large cities. They are given to resenting distinctions of dollars or class. What they must have is careful, considerate handling. If this is not to be found in one shop they will hie themselves to another. And in the long run, the establishment of such a practice would, we think, merely tend to emphasize the democracy of the department stores, which to-day are cutting deeply into the trade of even the most exclusive shops and where all men are on equal footing.

THE SWORD NECKWEAR CO.

An Ontario charter has been granted The Sword Neckwear Company, Limited, Toronto, with a capital of $40,000, divided into $100 shares. The incorporators were: Alex. Macdonell, A. C. McMaster and A. The Carpet Trade

Retail Business Exceptionally Brisk During July—Some Suggestions for August.

Retail activity continues, notwithstanding the fact that this is the season when most people take their vacations. Many merchants state that business is exceptionally good, and, in some cases, extra hands, employed for the Spring rush, have been retained.

In the large carpet and rug departments, particularly in Montreal and Toronto, the Spring business was fully double that of last year.

Retailers have been pushing the sale of rugs and mattings suitable for Summer.

Timely Suggestions for August.

Summer months are proverbially the quiet period in the carpet department. However, this period can be much improved if the right procedure is followed. The concensus of opinion among the leading buyers of Montreal and Toronto is that before the arrival of carpets selected for Fall, discounts, which are generally started in June, should continue throughout August, if old stock is not satisfactorily cleared out. Discount sales, ranging from ten per cent. up, according to the desirability of the lines offered, have been found helpful, and good business policy. Some stores, however, prefer to quote net prices during these months. Merchants who continue discounts throughout August find at the time of the arrival of Fall selections that the department is in every way ready to receive and display new goods to advantage, and old stock, which otherwise would have lain over till the next sale, has been converted into ready money.

Most travelers have now returned, and good orders have been booked throughout the country, Brussels, Wiltons and Axminsters have sold well, in soft tones of green and fawn. Wood shades have also met with marked favor. Taking all in all, both domestic and British manufacturers are well pleased with results obtained, and will, from now on, prepare lines for Spring, 1908.

Carpet Situation in England.

The carpet situation in England just now is good. Manufacturers are busy bringing out new lines for next season. There are no changes in the price column, but an advance is prophesied some time during September. Spinners are exceptionally busy on both domestic and foreign requirements. Conditions with the spinners are no worse than they have been within the last half year. Deliveries have been slow, and, as far as can be seen, there are no prospects of better for some time to come.

A number of wholesale carpet buyers are now in England placing for Spring, 1908.

Greens and fawns, also wood shades, will again be favorites for next year's trade.

Rugs.

Rugs continue in popular favor, and year by year they are coming to the fore as a valuable, as well as convenient, floor covering.

There has been quite a demand for domestic manufactured lines. Ingrains and unions seem to be improving in variety and quality of design, and to be advancing considerably in popular favor. Brussels, tapestry and ingrain squares are to the fore, as are also the different varieties of pile carpets. Quite a feeling has been evinced for Wilton and Smyrna rugs. While the sale of oriental rugs has been good, with the better class trade, these lines continue very scarce, and as a result prices are high.

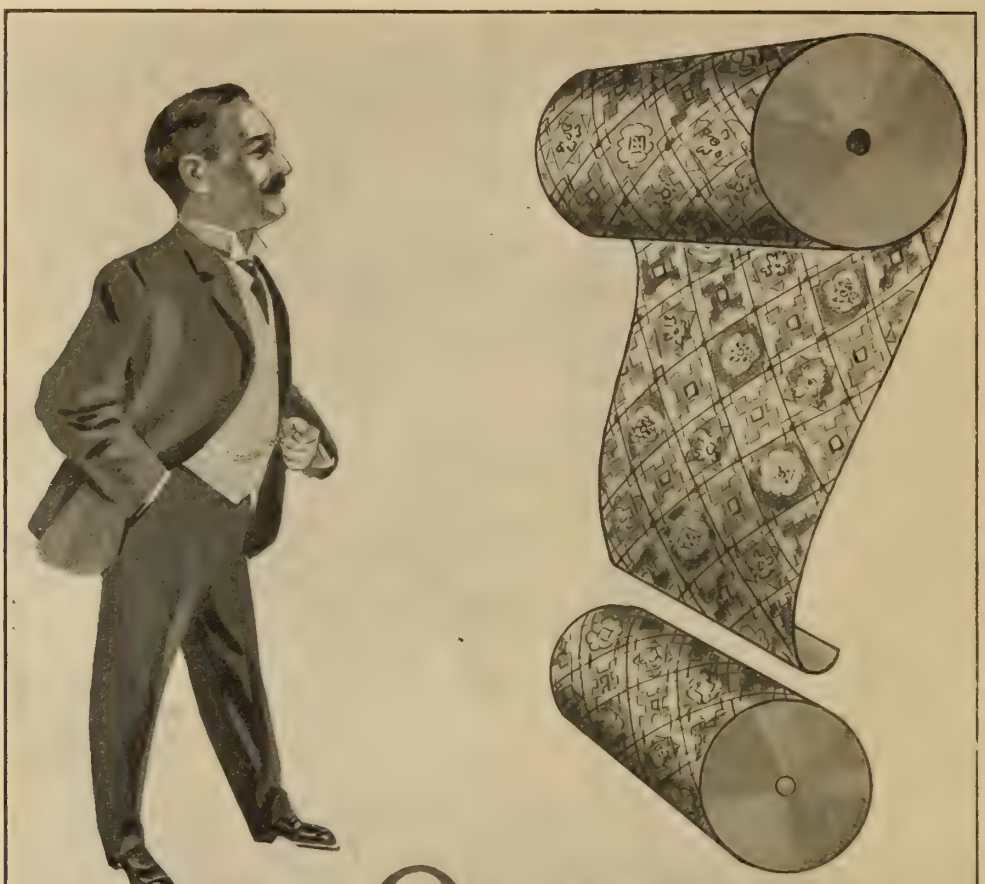
China and Jap. Mattings.

Matting continue in good demand throughout the country. Retail stores are still displaying these lines to advantage. Chinese mattings, in many quarters, are not viewed with the same favor as are the Jap. lines.

Among other Summer lines fibre carpets and rugs are enjoying very good sale, in Montreal and Toronto retail houses. These are being pushed for use in Summer cottages, in many instances, and results are quite satisfactory.

Representatives of many of the large retail establishments in Montreal are now in Europe, having left at different times during June and July.

Oilcloths and Linoleums



An Advance of Five Per Cent. on Domestic Lines—Some Suggestions.

Oilcloths and linoleums have a wide field, which no other floor covering will satisfy. Their usefulness is now being fully recognized more than ever. In the Summer, particularly, when the sale of carpets is practically at a standstill, they can be featured with great profit to the department. They are so attractive and fresh in appearance, and yet so seasonable in price that it is easy to make a sale to a customer who is renovating the house at all.

The call for this class of goods can be made steady by a little pushing. There is no time of the year when oilcloths should not be good stock. The uses for them are of wide range. In stores, advantage should be taken of the quiet season to make any necessary changes. Suggestions on the matter of putting down linoleum would meet with many responses. In houses, too, various rooms and halls are covered in this way.

The Summer as it advances is sure to reveal many spots which need recovering. Rough usage during hot and dusty Summer months plays havoc with the carpets and oilcloths. Suggest the removal of these coverings by showing samples of the new patterns. By this means the need will be brought forcibly to the attention of customers. Oilcloths in a house never look half so shabby until new samples are put before a prospective customer. People will forget their need for house furnishings during the Summer months unless they are constantly reminded that such goods are still for sale. Continual driving is sure to be rewarded by sales which have been formerly neglected during the Summer.

Domestic lines of linoleum, floor oilcloth and table oilcloth averaged an advance of from 4 per cent. to 5 per cent. in a new price list sent out to the trade on July 10th by the Dominion Oilcloth Co., Montreal. This advance has been foreshadowed in The Review and is the outcome of the firm conditions existing in all raw material markets, and the high price of labor. The cotton situation has also made it difficult for Canadian manufacturers, but jobbers state deliveries of table oil cloths are fair. The new price list of the Dominion Oil cloth Co. is given. Many lines are unchanged, but the rough advance averages about 5 per cent.

The demand still continues for the better grades, ranging in price from 40c per square yard up. In wholesale circles the feeling has been exceptional for florals and blocks, and in inlaids, which continue in popular favor, wood shades predominate.

Quite a feeling has also been experienced for cork carpets in both plain and printed. These are all stated to represent the highest quality in material and manufacture, and a retailer cannot go wrong in stocking some of these lines.

Wall Paper

With the beginning of July, travelers for wall paper concerns commenced their new season. For months the factories have been busy working out and printing new designs, and preparing their books of samples. From the range inspected by The Review representative, they can go on the road with the full consciousness that they have this year the best that has been ever shown, and that the retailer has very little opening to offer criticisms.

In the new samples there is an attention to purity of color, symmetry of design, suitability of color to design, and to novelties that greatly excel last year's offerings. The developments of the new ideas are shown in crown and panel patterns. Small embossed patterns are also to the fore. Quite a feeling has been expressed among the manufacturers for stripes.

Among the principal colors brought out are brown, in all shades, greys and fawns. Gold and silver will also be seen. Self tones will also be shown to a large extent.

MOOSE JAW.

M. J. McLeod, dry goods, who established in Moose Jaw some twelve or fifteen years ago, and worked up one of the most successful dry goods businesses in the west, has sold to Hamelin Bros. It is currently reported that Hamelin Bros. have in view the establishment of a large distributing house as well as the retail business now carried on by McLeod.

The cement foundations for twelve new stalls in the C.P.R. roundhouse have been completed. The brick work is now in course of erection. This enlargement is found necessary to accommodate the ever-increasing traffic in and out of Moose Jaw. Being a divisional point, locomotives and crews make their home here, running from Moose Jaw to Brandon and back; from Moose Jaw to Portal and return on the Soo line, and from Moose Jaw to Swift Current and return. The new traffic over the St. Paul-Spokane line adds much to the regular traffic.

In order to take care of the rolling stock which centres here, it is found necessary to increase the machine shops in the C.P.R. yards. The heavy concrete basement walls for a new machine shop, 66 x 96 ft. have been laid. The superstructure is being rushed to completion. This, when completed, will give employment to at least thirty or thirty-five more men. The Moose Jaw-Edmonton branch of the C.P.R. now running to Tuxford, fourteen miles out, will have the track graded to the fiftieth mile post by the end of September. Last reports indicate that the track will be laid and the cars running to take out the farmer's crop this year. The only difficulty in the way is the scarcity of railway supplies, chiefly ties.

The new Perry hotel, solid brick, which will accommodate about 100 guests, is nearing completion. The roof is going on, and it is expected that the hotel will be opened in the course of six weeks.

Just opposite this new hotel, is the new solid brick block going up, which will be the finest block in the city, 80 x 90 ft., three-storeys above basement. This will be occupied by four stores, offices on the first floor, and a public hall in the upper storey. It is being erected by Messrs. Ferguson & Matthews, wealthy old timers of Moose Jaw, who will spare nothing in making stores, offices and hall up-to-date in every way.

Since the seed was put in the ground, the oldest settler has never experienced so favorable a season for germination and growth. There has been ample rainfall from time to time, with warm weather, and to-day travelers from all over the Northwest report that the stand and prospects of a crop are more favorable in the Moose Jaw district than in almost any other part of Canada. It is generally admitted, however, that the crop is two weeks later than usual at this date, but the scale of the season has evidently been moved backward two or three weeks, so that farmers expect September to be their busy harvest time without danger of frost.

Business in all lines is reported fair—a good stiff business, nothing panicky. One-half of the citizens of Moose Jaw being wage earners, employed by the C.P.R., their monthly wages are sure. This always holds the business in Moose Jaw in a healthy condition, especially as it is a cash business.

FANCY GOODS AND NOTIONS

In large city stores the fancy goods and notion department is quite active, considering the season of the year. Throughout July, and up to the present writing, all large stores have made special efforts to catch the tourist trade.

The comb trade continues good, cut steel lines are much in demand. Three piece sets are selling very well. They are put up in attractive boxes and this has a good effect. Many new designs are now being brought out for fall and holiday trade.

Among the latest novelties being shown in the comb line is a small barbarrette. It comes in sizes from one-half inch to two and three inches, and can be had from jobbers to retail at from 10 cents to $2 apiece. The merchant who endeavors to keep up with the novelties should stock a few of these.

Sets of two side combs, set with brilliants, and beautifully finished, are popular.

Among the notions, with which the counters are packed, are belt and pad hose supporters, with four straps of fancy frilled elastic. The colors are white, sky blue, rose pink, cardinal and orange.

Hair pads, linen tape measures, twill covered featherbone, mending wool, buttons, are a few of the multitude of articles on display. The notion section draws large crowds, and helps sales in other departments as well.

In the handerchief department varieties are large. Trade runs strong on the Irish linen hand-embroidered variety, in very dainty designs, to retail from 35 cents to 75 cents. Irish linen hand-embroidered initial handkerchiefs with neat wreath, retail at 25 cents each. One large Montreal store recently sold a large lot of handkerchiefs bearing the words, "The thistle, shamrock, rose entwine the maple leaf forever."

Picture post cards are in greater demand than ever, and there seems to be no indication that the trade will fall off. Views and scenes continue in popular favor, but comic and sentimental cards are not up to the mark.

Seeing that washing and lingerie waists are to be good this fall and winter, embroidered washing belts are expected to sell far into the fall season. Because of the unseasonable weather they did not start the season well. When selling did start in, the call became large and insistent, and they have been in big demand during the past three months.

Fancy silk belts, particularly in the shirred girdle styles, have been excellent in the advance orders. Plain silks have done well, but the fancy of the moment is the Dresden effects. A line to sell at a popular price to take the place of a medium priced taffeta belt, is a lined belt of Japanese silk. The lining gives the necessary substance, and the belt has been a big success.

Elastics are big sellers, as the style idea is for a belt to clasp the waist closely. Tinsel effects, both gold and silver, in plain and fancy patterns, are showing. Dresdens are good, and many novelty patterns are included. Steel studded elastics while not new, promise to sell well in the more expensive lines.

There is a big line of leather belts, and in tailored styles in tan browns and patent leather, they are in excellent request. Steel-studded leather belts promise some prominence.

Now that the effect of the hat depends so much upon the way in which the hair is dressed, and the hair must be full and wavy to fill out the space under the hat brim, an easy way to produce the fashionable marcel wave ought to be a good article in the notion department. These wavers do not need any heat to operate them, and will not burn or injure the hair. They are easy to use, and always ready. If the directions are followed they cannot fail. They are of horn and can be sold at a popular price.

WHALE LEATHER.

Newfoundland fishermen are attempting to make whale leather a commercial product, and are said to be meeting with some success. The average whale hide covers a surface of about 1,500 square feet. A square foot of the hide weighs from two to five ounces, and is priced as high as fifty cents. The leather is very tough and is said to have great wearing qualities, and may therefore be adapted to the covering of furniture, buggy tops and seats, and also automobile uses. It is also claimed that it can be used for boots and shoes. Leather made from the intestines of the whale resembles kid, and is very thin and tough. It will take color readily, and is to be offered to glove manufacturers for making the long-sleeved gloves now worn by women.

Canadian National Exhibition

This Great Annual Event Will Be Held at Toronto From August 24 to September 9.

The Canadian National Exhibition will open at Toronto on August 24 and continue until September 9. To justify its title it must make big strides in advance each year, and the preparations that have been made indicate that it will be more worthy than ever to represent this great Canada of ours.

A number of new processes of manufacture will be demonstrated, and in these the keenest interest will centre. The Process Building has at present a strong educational value, which may be increased materially. The Exhibition management recognize the possibilities of this feature, and seek steadily to enlist the co-operation of manufacturers, particularly those who make articles of everyday use, the evolution of which, from the raw material to the finished product, would be interesting to everyone.

It is impossible here to detail the multitude of attractions that will be found at the 1907 Exhibition. Suffice to say that they will be better and more numerous than any that have yet been offered.

Drygoodsmen will visit Toronto at this time in large numbers. Besides attending the Exhibition, they will visit the various Toronto wholesale houses. Thus business may advantageously be combined with pleasure.

When merchants are in the city The Review will be glad to receive a call from them. They may have any correspondence addressed here, and a place will be provided where they can do any writing they desire in a quietude not present in any of the hotels at this time.

The capital of the W. R. Brock Co, has been increased from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000.

I. A. McBurney is the new manager of the staple department of Brophy-Cains, Limited, Montreal. Mr. McBurney comes to his new duty from an extensive and varied experience with the W. R. Brock Company, and has a thorough knowledge of staples.

Thomas May & Co., Limited, Montreal, will occupy their fine new warehouse at 74 St. Helen St. this month. Since the fire in St. Helen St. the end of 1906, this concern has been forced to move twice, but will soon be permanently located in larger and better premises.

Jack Samuel, son of H. Samuel, of the Empire Manufacturing Co., Montreal, died on Wednesday, July 17, after a lingering illness. Mr. Samuel was 28 years of age, and was for some time identified with his father's firm in which connection he made a wide circle of friends.

J. Madill, of Madill Bros., Napanee, Ont., called at the Montreal office of The Review last month. Mr. Mahill sailed on the Empress of Britain for a six weeks' European trip. Mr. Madill is one of the many merchants who has spoken of the helpfulness of the July Special Issue of The Review.

George T. Turner, one of the buyers for Greenshields Western, Limited, Winnipeg, was in the Montreal market last month, along with the large influx of western buyers. Mr. Turner commented upon the fair western crop outlook, and sees no let-up in western expansion, although collections at the moment are slow.

P. W. Lemaistre, manager of the Salem Co., Limited, Montreal, is now showing their Spring line of waists in the larger centres of Ontario, and will work right through to the far western coast. The specialization of this firm is evident in their new samples, which comprise everything wanted in the wash waist line.

A report from Canada's trade agent in Trinidad shows imports for 1906-07 from Canada were $695,000, or $40,000 less than the previous year. He says Canadian boots have come to stay. It is recognized that price for price they are the best. The colony will make an exhibit at Toronto exhibition in August and at Halifax in September.

At Sorel, Quebec, S. M. Pearson and A. Prudhomme, are being tried on a charge of conspiracy to defraud their creditors. The defendants practically controlled the Ideal Manufacturing Co., Sorel, and a good deal of the evidence thus far given treats of the appearing insolvency of that company. A. E. Smith, an accountant, told of inventories in which large discrepencies occurred. It transpires that goods bought on account of the Ideal Manufacturing Co., were turned over to the Sorel Manufacturing Co., a firm conducted by the same men. The Ideal Company had obtained goods on a statement showing a surplus of $26,000 which was sent out as late as March. The enquiry will probably occupy some little time.

Peddlers' License Prohibitive

So Declared Magistrate Houston, of Chatham—Dismissed Case Brought up by the City.

In dry goods lines, July is reported a good month. The spring trade was slow on account of weather conditions, but the summer trade has been very good, and there is an encouraging outlook for the fall. Crops in this vicinity will average fairly well. Though weather conditions will result in a considerable shortage from the usual crops, it is anticipated that higher prices will compensate for this, and that the farmers will, consequently, have pretty nearly as much money to spend as in former years. In the city, factories are running at their full capacity, so that the outlook is good. Warm weather late in the fall may interfere quite a bit with business, holding back the sale of seasonable goods as did the cold weather in the spring. Nevertheless, the merchants who cut heavily into their spring prices, and have to quite an extent, done likewise with their summer offerings, are looking forward to a good fall to recoup them.

The advance in the prices of nearly all lines of goods is likely to curtail buying to a certain extent—unless wages show a corresponding increase, which seems unlikely.

Merchants report that ready-to-wear waists have been hard to get rid of at any price.

E. F. Mann, who has been conducting a tailoring and men's furnishing business at Wheatley since last fall, recently discontinued business. He intends locating elsewhere.

C. W. Powell, of Guelph, formerly connected with the Stratford branch of the Thornton & Douglas store, has been appointed manager of the Chatham branch of the firm. Mr. Powell has been connected with the firm for upwards of six years. He has moved his wife and family to the city.

H. W. Ball & Co. recently introduced the first automobile delivery in Chatham. The rig is a handsome one, and has attracted quite a bit of attention. The firm after several week's trial, report that the auto has proven a great convenience, particularly in facilitating special deliveries in connection with their mid-summer sale. The auto is particularly satisfactory during the summer, when people going away often desire special parcels delivered, and when the hot weather would be hard on a horse. Mr. Ball has also installed a neat, clean drinking fountain, conveniently situated on the ground floor, where thirsty customers can refresh themselves with an ample supply of really cold water—something difficult to secure at the two public fountains. This firm have already found it necessary to make three alterations, with a view to increasing the selling space of the store. They started with one floor and are now using all three. The business has been conducted on a strictly cash basis from the first. Mr. Ball is adding dressmaking and millinery departments for the fall season, and intends to try the experiment of conducting these also on strictly cash lines. While many imerchants claim that a strictly cash business is impossible in connection with dressmaking, Mr. Ball thinks the difficulty can be solved by giving an exact estimate of the cost of the finished dress or hat at the time of the purchase. These estimates will be figured as carefully as possible, and each item recorded in a book of estimates. It is not quite as easy for a dressmaker to give an exact estimate of this kind as for a tailor on a suit of clothes, and the experiment will involve considerable extra trouble in the figuring of estimates ; but Mr. Ball thinks the result will be more satisfactory, and that a lady will prefer to know at the outset that her dress will cost $35, rather than have a quoted figure of $20 at the start and find at the end that the price is $35. He also thinks that this system will facilitate the doing of a strictly cash business, eliminating a great deal of the necessity for the sending out of goods on approval, which often means charge accounts.

C. H. Mills, of Thos. Stone & Sons, recently attended the annual Board of Trade meeting at Berlin, as a delegate from the local Board of Trade, of which he is secretary.

Miss. C. A. Cooksley, who has carried on a millinery business on King street for some time past, is advertising a closing-out sale, preparatory to leaving the city about Aug. 1.

The firm of Masse & Co., who have conducted a men's furnishing business here for a couple of years past, are dissolving partnership. The occasion is signalized by a widely advertised dissolution sale, with liberal price cutting. Jerome J. Masse, the senior partner, leaves for Montreal on Aug. 1., and will probably locate there. The business will be conducted by his brother, Theodore Masse.

The T. H. Taylor Co. have purchased the old Chatham binder twine factory on Colborne street from the M. J. Wilson Cordage Co., the consideration being $14,000. The Taylor Co. intend to convert the property into a woolen mill, and will make considerable alterations and additions.

Geo. Meynell, men's furnisher, is conducting a remodeling sale in all lines, to clear the way for the remodeling of his store, which will be begun about the middle of August. The changes include a double front, instead of one large show window and a side entrance as at present. In addition, other alterations will be made.

The extensions to the premises of C. Austin & Co. are now well under way, the brickwork having reached the second storey throughout. The alterations will make quite an improvement in the appearance of the Market Square, on which this part of the Austin building fronts. The firm's expansion sale is reported to have been liberally patronized.

Geo. A. Gray', of Austin's, accompanied by Mrs. Gray, is taking a trip down the St. Lawrence this month to Montreal and Quebec.

Robt. Killip, of Austin's, has just returned from a two month's tour of the old country. During his trip he visited his native Isle of Man, for the first time in 23 years. He also took in the Dublin Exposition, and several other points of interest.

That the advantages of the Maple City as an excursion centre are beginning to be appreciated, is shown by the fact that during the past month Chatham has been the scene of two large gatherings, the Orange celebration on July 12, and the Pere Marquette picnic on July 20. This is the third time the Pere Marquette employes have picnicked here. The merchants liberally decorated for both occasions.

The local Retail Merchants' Association has succeeded pretty well in eradicating the program advertising evil, of which other correspondents have complained. At one time Chatham was afflicted with this evil to a marked degree ; not a concert in the winter or a social in the summer but had a printed program, in which the merchant had the privilege of inserting his card at $1 and up, with the proviso that if he didn't, the family trade would be taken elsewhere. The R.M.A. last April passed a resolution forbidding this sort of advertising, and the members have, from all accounts, stuck to it. The resolution referred to also prohibited the placing of business signatures upon subscription lists. In this last respect, the churches—more especially the colored churches—were noteworthy offenders.

Anent the transient trader question, an important judgment was recently handed down by Magistrate Houston, in the case of Chatham vs. Brody, an action brought by the city against Benjamin Brody, who peddled rugs and similar articles in the household furnishing line. The magistrate, in a judgment covering upward of five typewritten pages, expressed the opinion that by-law No. 111, imposing a license fee of $100, was intended to make the granting of a license prohibitory, or exclusive to one man. This was done indirectly with the same effect as if it had been done directly. The magistrate adds : "This by-law No. 111 was passed on the 19th day of March, 1907, and not one single license has been taken out under it, and no person has endeavored to take out a license under it. One man only has offered to take out a license—Peter Mitgis—and only on condition that he obtain the exclusive right. That being the case, it is beyond doubt in my mind that the by-law is such that the general public or people in the business of hawkers or peddlars will not take out a license if more than one be granted, and that, I find on the evidence, was the intention when passing the by-law. Under the by-law in force at the time the by-law complained of was passed, the defendant in this case, as he did not use the push cart, or horse and wagon, but carried his rugs, would have been entitled to a license on the payment of $10. Under this by-law he would be obliged to pay $100, and the only evidence I have is that a person in that business could not afford to pay that amount. This is uncontradicted."

His Honor accordingly dismissed the defendant, without costs. The city council, as framers of the by-law, are understood to be by no means pleased with the magistrate's action, and there has been some talk of an appeal being made from his decision.

A DOLLAR FOR NINETY-FIVE CENTS.

Workman, the clothier, McGill and Notre Dame St., Montreal, ended up his July clearing "Skidoo" sale, by the novel attraction of giving away one dollar Canadian bills for 95 cents. Between 9 and 10 a.m. on Saturday, August 3rd this offer held good, and, as is usual with Mr. Workman's unique publicity, a large and enthusiastic crowd was attracted. Mr. Workman believes in getting the notice of people; in fact, in anything to get them into his store, and the volume of his business shows that sales are effected.

DRY GOODS CLERKS' EXCURSION.

The fourth annual excursion of the Union of Dry Goods Clerks, Montreal, was held on Sunday, July 28. The excursion train, consisting of fourteen cars, with five hundred passengers on board, left Bonaventure station, Saturday at midnight, over the Intercolonial Railway for Quebec A lively time was enjoyed on the way to Quebec, which occupied nine hours. The liveliest time was spent in the sleeping car attached to the train, where a team of lacrosse players from Ste. Anne were traveling.

The weather on Sunday could not have been better for sight-seeing. As soon as the train arrived at Levis, the crowd immediately dispersed in all directions in quest of new sights. The committee, for which a special car on the train was provided, were registered at the New Victoria Hotel, in Quebec City, where every attention was paid them. The morning was spent about the city, going through the citadel, while some were religious enough to attend church. The afternoon was spent at Montmorency Falls. The evening up to the time of train departure at 10.45 was spent at the hotel in singing and toast-making. The return train arrived in Montreal early next morning. Everybody was pleased and satisfied.

RETAIL MERCHANTS' OUTING.

The dry goods section of the Retail Merchants' Association of Montreal held their annual picnic at Nut Island on the 18th of July. The outing was a big success and enjoyed by over 400 members and friends. The day was an ideal one for a picnic, and all the events were well contested and successfully conducted under the direction of W. U. Boivin, president of the Dry Goods Association, who was ably assisted by J. A LeCompte and A. Rouleau.

Among the guests were: J. G. Watson, president Retail Merchants' Association; J. O. Gareau, E. M. Trowern, secretary Retail Merchants' Association, Toronto; B. Charbonneau, president City Travelers' Association; J. Jacobs, president Dry Goods Clerks' Association; and J. A. Beaudry, provincial secretary, Retail Merchants' Association.

NEW VANCOUVER STORE.

Gordon Drysdale, Limited, is the style of a "new-in-name-only" concern that will open on September 1st in Vancouver, B.C., a large, new and modern retail establishment in Granville street. The store will have a frontage of 50 feet and depth of 120 feet, and will be four storeys and basement. Mahogany fittings will be used throughout, and display fixtures in every department will be up-to-date in every particular. The lines carried will be general dry goods, house furnishings, ready-to-wear garments and millinery. The store will be a distinct addition to Vancouver retail trade.

Gordon Drysdale, the proprietor, has been identified with Vancouver retail trade since 1893, for 10 years, doing business under the style of Drysdale, Stevens, Limited. Later the firm became David Spencer, Limited, and at the end of January, 1907, Mr. Drysdale retired only to take his present step a few months later.

Mr. Drysdale was in eastern markets last month making purchases for his new store, and while in Montreal commented to The Review upon the decided growth of Vancouver, which has doubled in population during the last five years. The west is very prosperous, and Mr. Drysdale believes in the future of the far western metropolis.

FASHION NEWS.

Debenhams (Canada), Ltd., Montreal, whose Paris house supplies them with weekly fashion hints from that centre, have handed The Review one of the recent letters from which some suggestions are taken:

As regards costumes the feeling will continue largely for tailor-mades, principally in stripes and checks, and, of course, any amount of plain cloths. The colors most in vogue in plains appear to be mole, mordore, violet, vieux bleu, and green. Of course, such old favorites as navy, loutre, bois de rose, reseda, prune, etc., are still very good. For evening dresses all soft materials, such as chiffon, tulle, the various makes of crepe de chene, etc., are all the go in the usual shades, with a tendency to use vieux bleu and vieux rose.

As regards millinery, the shapes will be very large and in many cases oval, in velvet or felt; feather mounts of all descriptions, ostrich, paradise, etc. Roses in silk and velvet are much used, a few pansies and velvets, the latter plentiful; plenty of ribbons, satin and taffetas, principally the latter, and here again, eminence of violet is much to the fore. There is also mole, mordore, greens, vieux bleu and vieux rose.

In the way of laces, although embroideries are still much in demand, there seems a tendency to go in for lighter makes, and many blouses will be made in Calais makes, especially cluny effects. The filet laces, which have gone so well lately, are not yet done with.

Soft plain silks are very good in the above mentioned colors.

For blouses plenty of messaline.

MILLINERY FIRM ASSIGNS.

George D. Harper, carrying on a wholesale millinery business at 227 Notre Dame street west, Montreal, under the style of George D. Harper & Co., has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, on the demand of the Dominion Straw Goods Company, Montreal, creditors to the extent of $1,800. A meeting of creditors will be held early this month, and it is likely a settlement will be effected in time for the Fall openings. Mr. Harper has been in the business about two years, and has steadily extended his connection.

MAINLY ABOUT OURSELVES.

The Laurentian Whitewear Co., Levis, Quebec, and Delforse & Co., Montreal, are among the number of advertisers who have told The Review of direct returns from their announcement in the July special.

In the September issue of The Review the fur department will have special attention, previous to travelers leaving on their sorting trips. This issue will be made valuable alike from the reader's and advertiser's standpoint.

It may not be out of place here to refer to the remarkable expansion of The MacLean Publishing Company's business. Each year sees the plant grow larger and larger and new departments, each of which makes better work possible for those already established.

A site for a modern printing house is now being looked for and in the course of a year or so The MacLean Publishing Company will be in a splendid home of its own with a greatly enlarged plant.

Clearing Out Stock.

Gilmour, Nephew & Co., 366 St. Paul street, Montreal, make the interesting announcement that, owing to their engaging in the agency business, they have decided to clear out their stock of dry goods at attractive prices.

L. Hirshson & Co.

This firm is specializing on hosiery and underwear for the Spring season, and will show early in September a strong line of these goods from the best foreign and domestic makers. A new department this house has lately added is a good showing of shirts, collars and cuffs. Their reputation for linens is well sustained, and they have a big line of table linens, napkins, towels, damasks, etc. Their travelers leave early in September with many new lines. Visiting buyers are invited to call when in the city. They are centrally located at 4 Dollard street, just off Notre Dame.

Gold Medal Silk Waist Co.

This firm has the style of "The Gold Medal Silk Waist Co.," owing to the proprietor, M. Knopf, having been given a gold medal as a token of his successful designing. Mr. Knopf has had 15 active years experience in the silk waist business, and his venture upon his own account some months ago has met with success. His factory is located at 287 Notre Dame street west, Montreal, and is bright and airy, with plenty of machines in operation. This firm claims to be able to produce the right style at the right prices, and their aim is to give satisfaction to every customer.

The Manifest Shirt Co.

The Manifest Shirt Co. is the style of an important new concern in Montreal with office headquarters at 334 Notre Dame St. west, and a Canadian factory at 595 St. Paul St. The principals of this firm have been sent by a representative American factory to look more closely after Canadian trade. The concern in the U. S. has shirt factories in Philadelphia and New York, a color factory in Troy, and a silk waist factory in New York. The Canadian organization shows the full line of the American factories, and will manufacture such lines in Canada where the saving on imported material is appreciable. They claim that the best demonstration of their ability to serve retailers' wants in the way of neglige shirts for Spring and Summer, 1908, is an examination of the line. Pattern and fit are two considerations they lay stress upon. Their lines of cotton hosiery are worth investigation. Their collars are turned out by a thoroughly organized Troy factory, the centre of the industry. Retailers will have an opportunity of seeing the Spring lines in the near future.

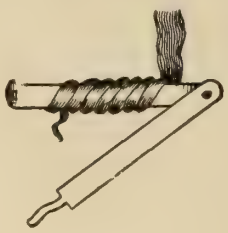
Greenshields, Limited.

Although between seasons, there is plenty of activity in the different departments of Greenshields, Limited Fall shipments have been made in most lines, but there are still some orders which have not been despatched. Repeats, too, add to the hustle and bustle seen in their warehouse.



One of the busiest departments at present is that in which the hosiery stock is found. Here many late orders for wool and cashmere lines are being shipped and new orders filled for immediate delivery. The wise merchant, if his stock is not complete, will make it so as soon as possible, since stocks are none too heavy in the hands of the jobbers. At present Greenshields' stock is complete in lines ranging from $2.25 to $5.25. The above lines are in black principally. They are also showing an extensive range of children's overstockings, in both white and red.

See their fine range of white and grey blankets, also the comforters they are showing for Fall. Special values in white pair blankets. Their stock of all lines in housefurnishing goods is complete. They can ship you goods by return.

Greenshields' ready-to-wear department export business is away ahead of past seasons, with a strong, even demand for all lines of ready-to-wear garments, and a decided tendency toward better class goods. Stock at present is replete with all desirable lines at very interesting prices. They strongly advise early repeats on all lines, as later in the season it will be almost impossible to get delivery of wanted lines, more so in flannelette underwear, etc.; mills are sold up now beyond their capacity and will not promise delivery in most cases, in less than six months. Extra special preparations are being made in this department to show the most complete range of ready-to-wear garments for Spring, 1908 yet offered to the trade. Samples will be in the hands of their travelers in the course of a few weeks and they court comparison.

The Magic Curler.

The fashionable way in which to dress the hair at present is to marcel it. This fashion will become more extended when the new Fall hats begin to be worn. The only way hitherto to have the hair marcelled, has been at the hands of a hair-dresser, and with hot irons. As at least two visits a week had to be made to keep the hair in proper order this was an expensive process. By the use of the Magic Curler a beautiful marcel wave can be accomplished without the application of heat in from 10 to 15 minutes. The curlers are made of fine French horn and can be sold with a good profit at an extremely popular price.

John Macdonald & Co.

In their dress goods department they show broadcloths, Venetians, panamas, voiles, henriettes, tartans and high-class tweed effects. present is large, including forty different numbers.

In their linen department their range of toweling is superior value, considering the number of advances during the past few months. They still have several lines of unbleached damask tabling, which they are showing at former prices. Feeling sure that advances in price were sure to come, they were fortunate in placing large orders early.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, say that seldom has their woolen department been so fully assorted and capable of filling the wants of the trade as it is to-day. Their endless chain system of repeating works like a charm, and assures to their customers just what they want at the time they want it.

Special for the tailoring trade—Black and blue worsteds and serges from $1.25 to $3.50; black and blue vicunas from $1.25 to $3.75; black and blue and grey cheviots from $1.50 to $3; fancy worsted suitings from $1.25 to $3; fancy tweed suitings from 75 cents to $2.50; ¾ worsted trouserings, 50 cents to $1.75; overcoating, Fall and Winter weights, $1. to $6.

Special for the ladies' tailors—Frieze and tweed cloaking, in all the latest colorings; broadcloths, black and colored, from $1.10 to $2.25; beaver coatings, black and colored, from 60 cents to $3; bearskin, in white and ermine, from $1.10 to $3.

Special for the general store—¾ Canadian tweeds from 25 cents to 60 cents; ¾ hairline tweeds from 40 cents to 75 cents; ¾ etoffes, plain and fancy, from 37½ cents to 60 cents; ¾ blue serges and Halifax tweeds, 32½ cents to 45 cents; corduroy and moleskins, 32½ cents to 75 cents.

The carpet department has just passed into stock complete all goods for Fall trade. For this season they have made a speciality of floor rugs and squares, showing a complete range of colorings in sizes and qualities in tapestry, Brussels, Wilton, velvets and Axminsters, parlor, dining-room, and bedroom designs; a splendid range of hall runners of best English Wilton make in Oriental effects; the new English Axminster and Brussels squares in the newest designs and colorings. They ask the trade to inspect. Linoleums and oilcloths—they carry a most complete range in all widths, in tile and floral designs. Lace, tapestry, and chenille curtains, white and colored quilts—ranges are now complete and the department is ready for the full swing of Fall business.

MAKING MONEY FOR THE DRY GOODS TRADE

Incidentally, we make something for ourselves, but this is small compared with what we make and save dry goods merchants and milliners. By our well-tried methods of dyeing and finishing dry goods fabrics, feathers and plumes we turn the old and discarded stock, counted dead, into new and salable goods. Cultivate our acquaintance if you do not already know us.

MEN AND METHODS

Ridiculous Closing Hours in Collingwood — Stores Which Specialize on Ready-to-Wear and Dress Goods Some Sensational Advertising Other Items.

COMMENDABLE INDEPENDENCE.

Although the majority of Collingwood stores remain open, ordinarily, until eight, nine, and even ten o'clock, and on Saturday night till eleven and twelve o'clock, C. Stephens Co. close sharp at six-fifteen, ordinarily, and ten o'clock Saturday night. They have been doing this for nearly a year and a half, and have not found that their business suffered in the slightest degree.

The lines handled are general dry goods, millinery, boots and shoes, groceries and men's wear. Groceries are located in an exclusive store, and a big trade is done in supplying boats, mines and lumber camps.

The store has a frontage of sixty feet, and is one hundred and thirty-two feet in depth.

Business is transacted on both the cash and credit basis.

Millinery has been handled only one season, but the profit was fairly satisfactory.

Two delivery wagons are kept going regularly.

NEVER USES THE TERM "CREDIT."

S. A. Gray & Co., of Meaford, carry a general stock. Dry goods, millinery, groceries, glassware, boots and shoes, carpets, rugs, and wall paper, occupy the main premises, while men's furnishings and clothing are located in an exclusive store. Formerly men's wear was handled in with the other lines, but it was found that the department could never attain to any great importance under such conditions.

Mr. Gray told The Review that, no doubt, the catalogue houses send quite a good deal of stuff into Meaford and the district surrounding. Many people think they can buy goods cheaper and better from Toronto than in their home stores. If they would carefully compare prices and values, they would quickly be undeceived, but the great trouble is that they will not do this. Only occasionally does a local merchant find customers who will admit that they make purchases through catalogue. When he does, he can invite an honest comparison between his goods and those which they have bought in this way. Just a short time ago, a lady went into the store of S. A. Gray & Co., with a sample of dress goods secured from Toronto. Upon asking the price of similar goods she was greatly surprised to learn that she could get exactly the same material at a considerably cheaper price than she had intended paying the mail order concern.

Mr. Gray went to Meaford twenty years ago, and at once determined that he would make his business as nearly cash as possible. The fight to keep away from the credit system was pretty hard for a while. Of course, there were customers, "as good as the wheat," who preferred to settle their accounts periodically, and exception had to be made in their case. Up to the present day, Mr. Gray says that he has lost less than $200 in bad debts, which, under the circumstances, he considers a pretty good record. He does not pretend to give credit to anyone, and no bills are ever marked charged. If a farmer brings in produce to trade for merchandise, and his purchases exceed his sales, he understands that payment of the difference is expected of him the first time he visits town. Sometimes, if the difference be large, it is spoken of as a loan to the farmer; but, under no circumstances is the term "credit" applied to a transaction.

In ready-to-wear garments only mantles, skirts and blouses are carried.

Millinery is a good department. A formal opening is held each season, but Mr. Gray has been much interested in reading of the systems adopted by E. R. Bollert & Co., of Guelph; Madill & Anderson, of St. Catharines; Barry & Co., of Trenton, and others, who have dropped the formal opening, and increased their profits from this department quite materially.

Mr. Gray does not believe in frequent bargain sales, for the reason that they put a store's clientele in an unsettled state. The cut price should be used very little, except as a means of clearing out undesirable stock.

SHOULD HAVE NOTIONS TO FRONT.

J. J. Kerr, of Collingwood, conducts his business in premises that are bright and well equipped. His stock includes general dry goods, millinery, ready-to-wear garments, boots and shoes, trunks, valises, mattings, oilcloths and linoleums. Carpets and rugs are not carried.

The store is 50x150 feet. Men's wear and boots and shoes occupy almost one-half of the main floor. In the latter line, particularly the better class of goods are most active. A big stock of trousers is accommodated in bins, according to size, a system that is found very convenient. A noticeable feature among the store fittings is a big hat case, built specially, across the back of one of the windows. It has paid for itself several times over.

Right at the entrance is a splendid big show case, extending across the front and several feet down each side. One-half of it is devoted to men's furnishings, and the other to blouses, etc. The Review would suggest that the latter section of this case be given over to the showing of collars, belts, and other fancy goods, and that the notion department be enlarged and located right next to it, counter bins being used for display. Mr. Kerr should find this a profitable move. Many precedents could be quoted to prove the solid merit of this suggestion.

Millinery pays a good profit. Formal openings are the rule, and last season two were held, one for spring and the other for summer goods. A first-class milliner is in charge, and to her careful management a large portion of the department's success is due.

In ready-to-wear garments only mantles and skirts are handled.

The dressmaking department sells a lot of the store's dress goods and trimmings. The dressmaker is given workrooms free of charge, and retains whatever profit she is able to make.

Special lines are shown on tables down the centre of the dry goods section. This is a good idea.

Evening shades in dress goods are kept in stock boxes.

Mr. Kerr and a grocer nearby have a delivery wagon between them.

The cash system is followed as closely as possible, and the only items on the books are for goods sent out on approval.

This store's windows are not, as a rule, lighted in the evening. As a consequence, a good deal of cheap advertising is lost. Mr. Kerr has five windows, which he keeps well dressed, and he should give the people who promenade down town in the evening a chance to examine the merchandise shown. That is the time of day when they have most leisure to look at the windows, and the Review has no doubt that some sales are lost through neglect to keep the lights on, until ten o'clock, at any rate.

Only a few mail orders are filled, and, up to the present, no decided attempt has been made to develop this branch of the business.

A good-sized show case toward the rear of the dry goods section is devoted to linens, and it helps sales considerably.

A PIONEER IN CASH SYSTEM.

R. E. Main was the first merchant in Meaford to adopt the cash basis, and when he did—thirty years ago—he was given six weeks to fail. The credit plan was so general that a strictly cash business was considered an impossibility. Mr. Main, however felt confident that he would be successful, and while he had some difficulty at the start off, people recognized the justice and merit of his stand, and he received a fair share of their trade.

This store handles general dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, men's furnishings and clothing.

In discussing mail order business, Mr. Main said: "How would it be if every local merchant in the country closed his store for a month and people were obliged to buy everything from the city concerns? I think they would appreciate the home stores more after such an experience. There are a good many mail orders sent from Meaford, and while I would like an opportunity at any time to compare my prices with those quoted in catalogue, value for value, I make a practice of never mentioning the name of the catalogue houses if it can be helped. I do not propose to give them any free advertising. I adopt the same policy in regard to my local competitors. My plan is to give the people what they want at reasonable prices, and rely on them to judge correctly of my reliability. I have one price only, and mark all goods in plain figures."

SPECIALIZE ON READY-TO-WEAR.

A store specializing on ladies' and children's ready-to-wear goods is rather unique in a town of eight thousand population. There is one in Collingwood, conducted by Qua & Patterson. They carry a stock of between $12,000 and $15,000. Their store, 22x100 feet, is simply crowded with merchandise, which could very readily fill a premises twice as large. Tables run down the centre of the store and over these, and the counters as well, almost every inch of space is used for display. The aisles might almost be compared to tunnels, so closely are the goods hung round them. The stock is too heavy to permit of the proper display in a store of this size.

No goods are kept boxed up ; everything is out where it can be seen and examined, and, consequently, they sell themselves in a great many cases. Each article bears its price on a ticket that can be plainly seen.

At the rear is the mantle and suit department. Formerly a charge was made for alterations, but this practice was discontinued.

A pattern department has been found a fine attractive force. It draws many people to the store, and as it is located at the back, they get a good idea of the stock that is carried. Many have expressed surprise at the range of goods shown, and have been sufficiently impressed to become customers. A fashion sheet is inserted in every parcel leaving the store.

When the firm opened up, four years ago, no piece goods at all were carried. Later, it was found profitable to add a stock of staples, for the reason that everybody buys them, and they would help attract customers to the store.

The lines carried include all kinds of ready-to-wear garments, underwear, corsets, hosiery, belts, neckwear, staples, notions, etc. The notion counter is located at the entrance, and draws an active trade.

Qua & Patterson do some very good advertising, which could be immensely improved by the addition of more descriptive matter. They have thought of this, but concluded that there was a danger of making their ad-matter too heavy. This is a mistake ; description, for which the nature of their goods gives them plenty of scope, would make their publicity much more readable, interesting and impressive. It would indeed become a strong salesman in their interest. The advertising of the large retail houses, and a number of smaller ones, too, has clearly demonstrated the truth of this.

A SENSATIONAL ADVERTISER.

W. G. Begg, of Collingwood, conducts "The People's Bargain Store," and, as may be gathered from the title, holds a great many special sales. Following are some quotations from a newspaper ad. and hand-bill, announcing one that continued for fifteen days, up to August 4 :

"W. G. Begg up against a hard proposition. We must give up the key to J. McIntosh August 4, without fail. That means we are forced to move our $35,000 stock into our big store. It's simply impossible to do so, for the reason that our big store is already packed full, as you all know. There is only one way to get out of this trouble ; that is, to reduce the stock $20,000 in fifteen days. We have decided to throw our entire stock of both stores on the market at what they will bring. $20,000 must be raised in 15 days in order to move. It's easy. The public are looking for dollar bills for fifty cents. We don't blame you ; you can get it for the next fifteen days. Thursday morning, July 18, our both stores will be ablaze with electrifying bargains. We will make this sale a hummer. We will show our appreciation of your most liberal patronage during our gigantic sale by offering you the greatest values ever attempted. $100,000 stock will be thrown on the market—simply slaughtered. Must be disposed of at any cost. 'Tis an impossibility to mention prices. Everything on sale, everything to clear. $25,000 worth of boots and shoes must go. Never in the boot and shoe history such a wholesale slaughter. Boots and shoes will be almost given away ! We carry the largest boot and shoe stock in Ontario. We simply say buy now what boots and shoes you want for a year. Sensational bargains in dress goods, silks and wash goods. When we say dress goods at half price, we mean it. See our muslins at 5c ; our flannelettes at 5c ; our toweling at 5c ; our white cotton at 5c ; our table linen at 17c ; our hosiery at 9c ; our laces at 2c. Our gigantic ten-day sale was a wonder. This sale beats all past records. Our men will have a picnic. An avalanche of bargains for men and boys. Dress goods knifed to clear. During this sale the worst, reckless slashing of prices will be resorted to in order to help to make room. O, what a snap in carpets, rugs and linoleums ! Ladies, buy now ! The greatest price-cutting sale on earth ! Don't miss this chance ! No reserve. Everything must go. Fifteen days only. We will make this sale one never to be forgotten,"

On August 13, Mr. Begg started another sale, this one to last for thirty days. Here are some extracts from his announcement :

"Immense thirty-days' bargains. We are overloaded. Our two stocks now in our one big store. We are packed in like sardines and won't stand for it. Simply impossible to show goods. Must make room at any cost. We have decided to make a desperate 30 days' cutting and slashing of prices. We will sacrifice our entire stock regardless of cost. One hundred thousand dollar stock thrown on the market. One thousand early Fall coats for ladies and children will be cleared at less than half price. Wait ! Wait ! Wait for the opening. Store closed all day Monday to get ready for this great sale. Let nothing keep you away from the greatest thirty-day sale ever attempted. Price goes to pieces in all sections—no mercy to cost marks. Herald the news everywhere so that all may come and share the bargains. It will pay you to prepare your purse and wait for the greatest of all sales. Our last was a wonder, but this will be the big show in earnest. Prices that will make room, and clear the stock, as a storm wave sweeps the deck of an ocean steamer. Bring plenty of money, and you will find one dollar will do the work of two. If money-saving means anything to you, read this and profit. We would like to quote every article in the store, as they are slaughtered beyond recognition. The following will give you some slight idea of the wonderful bargains going for 30 days * * * The biggest plunder of the sale will be in our boots and shoes. We have boots and shoes enough for four stores. We must have the room ; you can have the boots and shoes at prices most ridiculous. Good-bye prices on all Summer goods. Don't forget this marvellous sale starts August 13, and will continue every day red hot for thirty days."

A NEAT STORE.

R. Findley & Son, of Meaford, have an exceedingly neat store, that is well lighted and well fitted-up. Near the entrance are a couple of splendid show cases for the display of fancy goods, blouses, etc. The windows are always tastefully dressed. Down the centre of the store are several display tables, which are found very useful.

The lines carried in this store are general dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes and men's wear.

The business is part credit and part cash.

WILL CUT DOWN CREDITS.

Abbott & Co., of Meaford, carry general lines in a store of good appearance. A millinery department has never been attempted. Mr. Abbott informed The Review that he does both cash and credit business, but purposes cutting down the latter considerably. Special sales are not included in the regular policy of the firm, but when competitors offer big inducements to their customers, Mr. Abbott feels called upon to hold up his end.

TWO GOOD TOWNS.

Collingwood and Meaford are located on Georgian Bay, on the Meaford branch of the Grand Trunk. The former has a population of 8,000, and the latter 3,500. Both adjoin good farming and cattle-raising districts. At Collingwood a shipbuilding yard gives employment to quite a number of hands.

A MISTAKE.

In this department in the July issue a description was given of the store and some methods of the Robinson Co., Napanee. One paragraph began : "In answer to a question by The Review, Mr. Robinson said he believed he did much less business than formerly in Napanee and district surrounding. This store does a mail order business itself," etc. A sentence preceding this, in reference to the mail order houses, was omitted, and in the proof the clause, "they did much less business," etc., was changed to "he did much less business," etc.

SPECIALTY DRESS GOODS STORE.

Frank Cavill, Collingwood, specializes on dress goods and staples, and caters only to the better trade. His store is small, but exceedingly neat and bright. He carries a few blouses.

NOTES.

Guilfoyle Bros., of Collingwood, conduct a general store, with dry goods along one side and groceries on the other. They also carry boots and shoes, glassware, etc.

Deitch & Co., and E. Sewell & Son, of Meaford, both carry general lines.

WOULD LIKE TO CLOSE EARLIER.

P. W. Bell & Son, of Collingwood, keep as close to the cash basis as possible. They carry general dry goods boots and shoes, trunks, valises, men's wear, etc., but no millinery. The store closes at eight or nine o'clock, ordinarily, and eleven or twelve o'clock Saturday. They would like to see the hours fixed at six o'clock and ten o'clock, respectively, but claim that some other merchants refuse to make the change.

R. FORBES COMPANY, LIMITED.

A Dominion charter has been granted R. Forbes Company, Limited, Hespeler, with a capital of $1,000,000, divided into $100 shares. The object of the company is "to acquire and take over as a going concern, the business now carried on at Hespeler by The R. Forbes Company, Limited, and all the property and assets of the said company ; to manufacture wooleo, worsted, cotton, linen goods and material of all kinds, and all descriptions of textile goods and materials, whether spun, woven, knitted or otherwise, and to buy, sell and deal generally in all kinds of spun, woven and knitted goods and materials, whether in a raw state or partly manufactured, and generally to carry on the business of manufacturers of and dealers in the above mentioned classes of goods in all their branches, and to manufacture all descriptions of machinery and appliances and parts of same used or deemed useful in the production of the foregoing goods, etc." The incorporators were : George D. Forbes, manufactuere ; W. H. Weaver, manufacturer, and D. N. Panabaker, bookkeeper, of Hespeler ; Victor H. Hattin, clerk, and Ada Caulfield, bookkeeper, of Guelph.

Good Advertising

How to Produce It

Brief Talks Given Monthly
By T. Johnson Stewart

"If you put as much energy into advertising as the boy does learning to smoke, you've made your point."—Rusty Mike's Diary.

Do you remember your first smoke? I do. Yours truly felt like a king for a minute and a half, and then an indescribable, far-away feeling took possession of my interior and confiscated my breakfast. Billy Jones and I turned up at school one morning plugged full of devilry and feeling like millionaires. I had blown up the bank—a 2 in. x 4 business, I had received as a birthday gift some months previously. Before doing so, I had let Billy in on the ground floor of my anticipations, and, not to be outclassed, my trusty comrade had got up in the middle of the night and made a raid on his father's trousers. It was successful, from a pecuniary standpoint, and so we hiked past the school and our fellows like lords and entered the Dunmore woods. Already it was an unusually hot day, the breeze from the sea had died down, and the shade from those great old trees was just as luring to us as it had been to the soldiers of Edward Bruce on their way to help the Irish overcome the legions of the English King. Bill and I thought little about our warlike ancestors. We sat down under the shade of a mighty tree, which may have sheltered the soldiers of Rome, and pooled our loot. We had seventeen shillings about $4.25, and we carried as many resolutions into oblivion as the United States Government, regarding the way that that money should be spent. Bill was anxious to foot it to Liverpool and emigrate to America for the purpose of decimating still further the decimated ranks of the noble Red Man. I objected, not because the proposition seemed wildly improbable, but because I had a wholesome respect for my father's ability to actually do things. Then Bill grew pathetically poetical and rattled off Tom Campbell's "Gertrude of Wyoming," in a way that made the crows wonder what in thunder was the matter with him.

Poor Bill actually shed tears as he forget Gertrude to remember a little girl called Nancy, who had won his boyish heart by strutting around like an actress in a red garibaldi. I respected his grief; but when he sprung into the air as gaily as if he had swallowed an Ostermoor mattress, and cried, "Hallelujah! let's kidnap Nancy, "I objected again, but Bill was obdurate. Finally diplomacy prevailed o'er the "wild and wandering" cries of my love-sick companion.

"Bill!" I said, "you know darned well that no big chief ever did do anything without hitting the pipe. Let's smoke and we'll know what to do!"

The advice pleased Bill, and in a quarter of an hour we had a new clay filled up with black Irish plug—the manufacturer should be electrocuted.

I wanted to start the seance, but Bill was ten days my senior and insisted on disgusting his inner man first. That tobacco was as hard to set on fire as an Irish bog, but Bill laid back his ears and pulled like a donkey. Finally, when he had her going some, I requested a pull at the pipe. Bill waved his hand disdainfully and continued to blow clouds like the Lusitania on her maiden trip. Presently I noticed a ghastly pallor stealing adown William's beautiful countenance, and at last he said: "Hist, pard! there are about two million redskins askulking around. You keep the pipe going while I circumvent their devilries."

My comrade handed me the pipe and scooted behind a tree. I went on smoking the vilest tobacco between here and Jericho.

"Keep it up, pard and—and—look peaceful——." Bill intended to say something more, but he only groaned. And I kept on puffing pale grey clouds of poisonous vapor like Vesuvius when molten lava rolls spouting about its stomach. I certainly threw both energy and enthusiasm into that smoke. And when I say that it landed the goods, I am clinging to the facts quite piously. I became dizzy, my eyes grew dim, and for a little I thought there was an eclipse of the sun. But when my breakfast started to cavort and buck around like a broncho, I knew that "earthquake" wasn't the proper title for what was going to happen. But I kept on smoking. Gradually the darkness—or apparent darkness—became more dense, and——. We'll let the curtain drop here on the result of energy and enthusiasm unreasonably applied.

There should be energy and enthusiasm in all advertising and when these are awanting it falls flat. But I've seen lots of energy and enthusiasm sadly misdirected. The great desideratum in all advertising is pure and unadulterated common-sense. There are wholesalers and manufacturers who print stuff, and expect results, and it is safe to say that if their salesmen put up such talks to their customers they wouldn't sell a yard of goods in a year, and there are merchants all over this wide Dominion who print a conglomeration of exaggerations and imagine they are advertising. It is with pleasure we turn to the ads. we have reproduced.

Sutcliffe & Sons, Lindsay and Oshawa, have forwarded the best circular ad. we've seen in many a day. These merchants believe that it's up to the local drygoodsmen to do some mail order business, and they go after their share in a clear and forcible manner. The man who designed and drew up this ad. deserves a whole lot of credit. He has a future either as an ad. writer or as a merchant, and, as far as I can judge, he'd be successful in either sphere. The ad. is not only carefully and artitically arranged, but abounds with energy and enthusiasm, and that properly directed. The circular is about the size of a big daily sheet, and so folded that only the firm's name and that of the addressee is visible to the deliverer. I want to emphasize the fact that most town and small city merchants might add easily hundreds and often thousands, a year, to their turn-over by adopting the mail order plan of Sutcliffe & Sons. They say: "Whether you live in town or country, we will follow

When an ad. is so good as this one, I feel that any criticism should be offered in the form of suggestions. I would suggest the curtailing of some introduction in this case and printing more descriptive items. Take "The Right Kind of Clothing for Men," for instance. That's good stuff, every word of it, but I am of the opinion that it is a shade too long. The introduction should have been cut so that there would have been double the space for descriptive matter. Apart from this, I think this cir-you with our free delivery system—the prepaying of freight or express charges on the G.T.R. or C.P.R., on all orders amounting to $25 or over. Club your orders and send them to us." A pretty good scheme, and we are safe in saying that Sutcliffe & Sons' progressiveness will go far towards securing a goodly share of the paying trade.

cular ranks pretty high when it comes to advertising meant to sell goods.

The advertising of the Paquet Co., Quebec, is always of a high order, and the ad. we reproduce is undoubtedly a sample of the finest descriptive matter published in Canada. Paquet's ad-man has a genius for saying the right thing—neither less, nor more. I'm not in favor of taking up much space with cuts, as a general rule, but when a business reaches the limit of Paquet's, a cut can be used impressively every now and then. You will notice that this veteran ad-man doesn't waste much talk until he commands his readers to "Study these prices." He throws enough energy into his introduction in the quietest way imaginable, and betrays extensive knowledge of female human nature. His business is to get the women of Quebec into Paquet's store, and it is pretty widely known that he is mighty successful. "Study these prices and descriptions for a few moments and see if you don't find them unusually interesting." You will, because we repeat what we said some time ago, that Paquet's adman is the best descriptive advertiser in the Dominion of Canada by a great big comfortable margin. He's the Longboat of descriptive advertising, and it will pay most merchants to study his methods.

McCurdy & Co., of Sydney, are doing some pretty successful newspaper advertising. They have their ads. set artistically, but their editorials invariably take up too much space.

Bastedo & Co., of Milton, believe in newspaper advertising, and they very wisely let price talk, and talk effectively, for them. Keep it up. Success lies that way.

* * *

Martin & Co., of Amherst, N.S., have forwarded a circular for criticism. There may be conditions under which such advertising pays, but the people want more than any merchant's mere promise. If you had cut your talk in two and printed some sales-compelling items, we believe it would have paid you better. The circular is pretty, neatly printed, etc., but did it sell goods? If it did, you can be certain that you would have done a great deal more business by writing it as we have suggested.

* * *

Yes, energy and enthusiasm are a salesman's principal stock in trade. But they can be woefully misapplied. All advertising should be enough like a good salesman's talk as to deserve the name "Printed salesmanship." Some men work hard and never accomplish anything. Others are good talkers, but they never say anything. If you merchants print the kind of talks which sell goods your advertising will be successful.

The merchant must now prepare for his Fall advertising. He will speak of new goods and emphasize style and quality. What he says will be more impressive if he insists on some style in the way his ads. are written and set up. His customers will appreciate his story more if it is told in the most attractive form. One point upon which stress should be laid—where a man has the goods to back up his claim—is assortment. In many stores quality, style and assortment come before price, when a new season's goods are just shown.

On June 27, J. F. Cavins, of Saskatoon, inaugurated a plan for stimulating business, which accomplished its object and created a good deal of interest as well. Every cash purchase entitled the purchaser to a numbered coupon. A duplicate of each coupon was placed in a sealed box and left there until August 8. Then the box was publicly opened and a little child drew out ten coupons. The holders of the duplicates of these coupons were entitled to the following gifts: First—Bay driving horse, with driving harness and new rubber-tired buggy, which may be exchanged for goods from any department of the store to the value of $375; second—Malleable steel range, or its equivalent; third—The choice of any lady's costume in our ready-to-wear section; fourth—The choice of any suit or overcoat in stock; fifth—Groceries to the value of $20; sixth—The choice of any dinner set in the crockery section; seventh—The choice of any man's hat in stock; eighth—The choice of any shoe in stock; Ninth—A complete baseball outfit for a boy; tenth—A suit for a little girl, with hat, parasol, gloves and stockings to match.

"But let's get down to descriptions and prices. Here they are."—Paquet's, Quebec.

"We were quite sure that there would be no lack of buyers at the first Saturday night sale. The people came and were pleased with the values. The merchandise was here exactly as we advertised it, and those who were here know that buying began early and continued late. "A stock adjusting sale of dress skirts. A recent inventory of our stock has disclosed a number of dress skirts that we do not wish to carry over to another season, so we decided to place them on special sale at greatly reduced prices."

"Four hours of irresistible bargains. As the weather is very warm, and the climbing of stairs exhausting, everything offered at this sale will be found on the ground floor."

"Distinctive style and excellent qualities have made an era of progress in this store."

"On Saturday afternoon, for one hour only, we will place on sale our entire stock of handsome millinery flowers."

"We would woo you back to town. Don't think that this midsummer stock-taking sale is of no interest to you simply because you are out of the city. Prices have annihilated space—the fare is nothing to the saving. Anyway, if you would come to town a little oftener, you might enjoy the country the more. Remember, the stuff that goes to make up this sale is all just what you want right now. And remember, it's only the good things that we have. From the beginning of the season, we have watched to keep every unworthy thing out of our stocks, so that, when the cleaning-up time should come, as it has this month, we wouldn't have anything to sell that we would be ashamed of."—The John Murphy Co., Montreal.

Good Use of Price Comparison

Local Merchants had Extracts Printed in Home Paper and in Circular Form — The Advantage of Catalogue House from the Advertising Standpoint — A Boycott of Mail Order Customers Projected.

Some Forest, Ontario, retailers made excellent use of The Review's comparison of catalogue prices on fifteen staple lines, with those of a number of local merchants'. They took the list of McKenzie & Meldrum, Thedford, in the same district, as representative of their own rates, and made sure that all of their customers were impressed with the fact that a general store in a village of seven hundred population could sell cheaper than the big mail order concern. This information was first printed prominently in the home paper, and then in circular form, for distribution to everyone entering any of the stores. The introduction from The Review's article was reproduced, and following the prices were these paragraphs :

"Suppose some housekeeper in this locality required ten yards of each of the above-named materials, according to these quotations the lot would cost at the catalogue house $59.95, and at McKenzie & Meldrum's $56.25, a saving of $3.70. Taking into consideration postage, etc., the purchaser would be about $4 out of pocket, if he sent out of town for the goods. What can be saved at McKenzie & Meldrum's, can, no doubt, be saved in Forest and other home towns. There is another very important consideration. There are times when the housekeeper needs a few weeks' credit, which cannot, in any event, be obtained from the catalogue house. It is then that the home merchant is a great convenience—sometimes even a necessity—and it is only fair that he should have the benefit of the cash-down business, especially when money can be saved by dealing with him.

"Another important consideration : The home merchant pays for, and keeps up the price of, butter, eggs, poultry, small fruit, and many other articles, which the catalogue houses will not touch. Without the home merchant these commodities would be practically worthless.

"The catalogue house secures all its business by constantly advertising the prices at which goods are sold, and the home merchant can retain the trade which rightfully belongs to him only by the same means."

This matter could be treated in much the same way by local merchants in many other sections of the country. Admittedly, numbers of their customers believe that the catalogue houses sell much cheaper than the stores at home. Then why should it not have a good effect to point out, by actual reproduction of the figures, that even village stores are able to offer more favorable prices than the mail order concerns? The Review fails to see that its comparison could not be used, with very material advantage, in every town where merchants are honestly trying to meet outside competition.

The disadvantage at which retailers are placed, with respect to advertising, is spoken of by a local merchant as follows

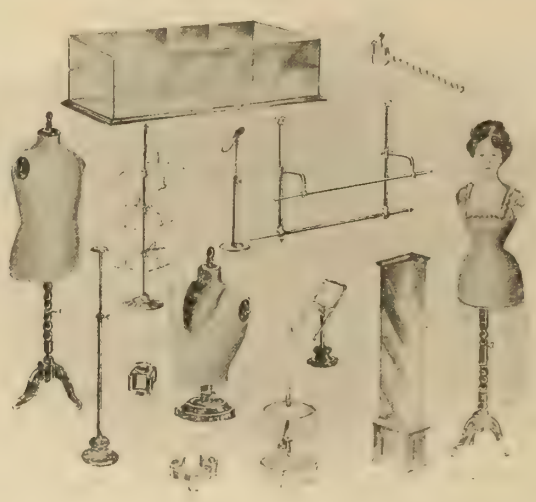
"In the great majority of districts the local papers taken by the public reach them only once a week, and we find, in our district, that nearly every one of our customers takes a Toronto daily paper. You can, therefore, understand the great advantage that the departmental stores have over us, in being able to hammer their supposed advantages into the minds of the public every day, while we can only reach them weekly. The publisher who can develop a scheme by which he can provide a medium for district merchants to reach their customers daily, will strike a good thing, for we feel certain that every live local house would liberally support such a scheme.

"We appreciate the effort you have made in the direction of comparing values offered by the trade through the country, and those of large catalogue houses. All such information is valuable."

On the front page of a Dixon, Ill., newspaper is announced a plan by which the merchants of the town propose to combat the retail mail order houses. This plan is to boycott the customers of the catalogue houses. A list of persons sending their money to the mail order houses will be kept, and when any person on the list applies for credit or favors of any kind at the local stores, he will be "turned down."

The paper says: "The merchant who gave the outline of the plan stated emphatically that this theory was not to end with the telling, but will be given a thorough trial in this city, and he implied that those who have been in the habit of patronizing the 'catch-sucker' houses would receive no warning until they were turned down at the local stores."

The following comment is made by the Chicago Reporter: "Will this boycott produce the results intended? It is doubtful. In the first place it can affect only those people who need credit at the local stores. People who need credit are not, as a rule, the largest patrons of catalogue houses. The farmer who buys for cash at home and away from home will not be influenced by this scheme. The announcement of it in the papers may only give him additional reasons for asserting that 'the home stores can't meet the prices of the catalogue houses.'



"It may be all right to publish arguments in the local paper telling why people should buy goods at home, but any attempt at boycott is dangerous. In this case it would influence, at the best, only the smallest and most undesirable part of the trade now going to the catalogue houses, viz., the credit customers. Many of these would pay cash for goods bought at home, and still send away whenever they thought they could save money.

"The trouble with the plan is that it assumes that the local merchant is weaker than the catalogue houses, and can only hold his trade by resorting to club methods. This is not true."

WINDOW DRESSING

THE ART OF DISPLAY

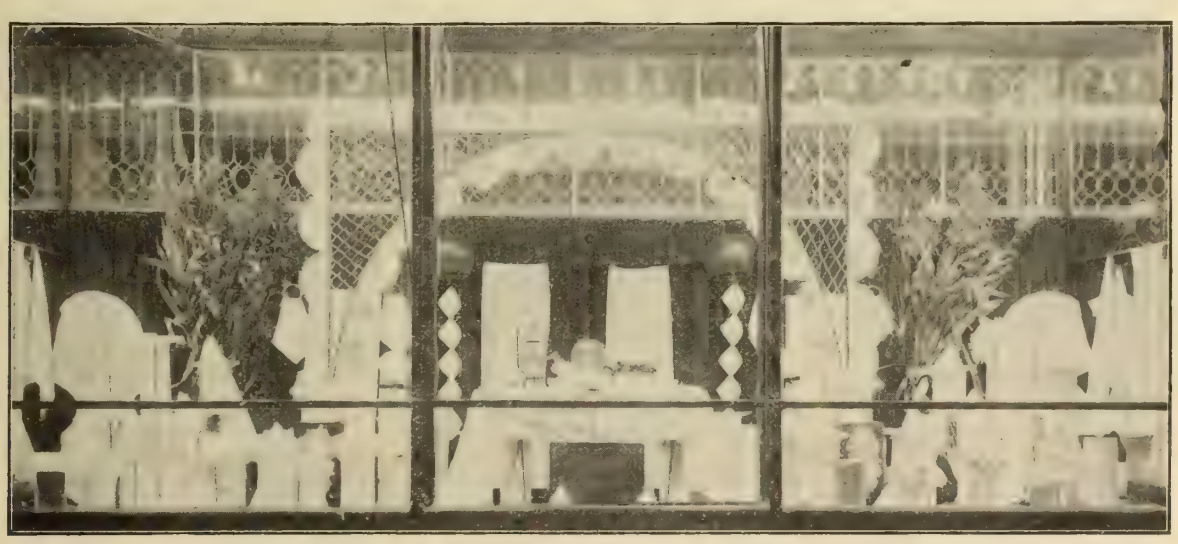
INTERIOR DECORATION

Some Windows We Have Seen

Striking Instance of Lack of Harmony—Overcrowding of Displays the Most General Fault.

A good window display partakes largely of the nature of a picture. It should be as artistic as possible, for that reason, and it is necessary that due attention be given to such essentials as proportion, color, harmony, etc.

In traveling round the country I have seen quite an extensive variety of window displays, some very creditable, indeed, and some that were simply atrocious. One of the latter stamp that I came across a short time ago had as its chief components, night robes and parasols. Imagine the harmony of it! What qualities of a beautiful picture it possessed! To make matters worse, instead of leaving the night robes folded, the trimmer had them hung at full length all along the back of the window. They looked like a lot of shrouds.



Speaking generally, the chief point that we would criticize is the tendency toward overcrowding displays. To show as great a quantity of goods as possible seems to be the aim in many cases, and, as a consequence, nothing that is shown gets a fair chance to commend itself to the passed-by. Sometimes the articles crowded together are of different and conflicting color. Then what a picture the display makes!

Imagine a window, calculated to sell goods, which requires that, in order to see all that it contains, you must look up at the ceiling, from which a number of articles are suspended! The modern window should have the goods as nearly as possible on a level with the eye that looks at them from the street. The display should be such that it will not confuse in the least degree, but rather reveal at once its essential points and allow the beauty of the merchandise to act as the main attractive force. Remember, the first purpose of a window is to sell goods.

If your experience is limited, do not attempt elaborate effects. Aim to produce simple, artistic displays, and the results will be much more satisfactory.

The manner in which some goods are shown makes it harder, I believe, to sell them than if they had never been put in the window at all. For instance, I have seen shirt waists of excellent quality put on busts in such a slovenly way that they scarcely looked half of their real value. A little tissue paper padding would have remedied the difficulty in a few moments, but it was not used.

Most of the larger stores, and many of the smaller ones, have trimmers whose work can be little criticized, judged by ordinary standards. The excellence of some work that is done in Hamilton, Halifax, Peterboro, and other places, has been illustrated in these columns. In most of the smaller stores there is great scope for improvement, and merchants will find it very profitable to devote additional attention to this department.

Thanksgiving Linen Display, by H. C. MacDonald, for Richard Hall & Son, Peterborough.

The Display of Garments

Extra Representation May Be Served by Working Them in With Dress Goods.

As the time when full prices can be obtained in the garment section is, comparatively speaking, short, special efforts must be made in the early part of the season. To carry stock over is a serious matter. Everything must be disposed of, no matter how deep the cut in price has to be. The window trimmer can be of material help in this connection.

Numerous windows will be put in, as a matter of course, but in addition, and without injuring other displays, the trimmer can so arrange matters as to give extra representation to the garment department. There are many windows that can have a handsome suit or coat as a central figure, and this feature will add to their attractiveness. If you cannot procure a wax figure use a stand. Some of the best trimmers prefer the stand, but, where there is any choice in the matter, most will favor the figure.

Even the head of the dress department will not object to the occasional use of a suit or costume in a dress goods window, particularly if it is a monotone display. This style of window is especially useful early in the season, as it helps to emphasize the leading colors and will force their sales in a way that no other method can.

Carpet Display by W. L. Kane & Co., Halifax.

If the trimmer has put in an elaborate background for a millinery window, he will also use it for showing suits, etc. Many of the high-class trimmers are utilizing one or two handsome pieces of furniture when dressing a garment window. In addition to the garments shown on the figures, garments can be effectively shown gracefully thrown over a chair or fancy stand, etc. Gilt furniture is effective, particularly when showing Fall goods.

It should hardly be necessary to say that the skirt or a suit should be put straight on the form, or that a coat should be buttoned evenly. From experience, it may be said that this is not always done, and many a display that ought to be good loses its effectiveness through carelessness in this respect.

Help can be given to other departments by showing such accessories as belts, neckwear, bags, etc., along with garments. Millinery, too, must not be forgotten.

WINDOW TRIMMERS' CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the National Association of Window Trimmers of America, was held at Niagara Falls on August 6, 7, and 8. Part of the business session was held on board the boat going across to Toronto, where the members were met by Harry Hollingsworth, of Simpson's, and A. E. Apted, of Eaton's. They were taken through these stores and then given a tally-ho ride around the city. The next convention will be held at Detroit.

GERMAN DEPARTMENT STORES.

United States Consul Thomas H. Norton, of Chemnitz, states that the spread of department stores has been relatively much slower in Germany than in the United States, and they have awakened a much more bitter animosity on the part of many of the smaller dealers. The consul furnishes these facts :

The number of department stores in the empire increased from eighty-two in 1904 to ninety in 1906, a growth of not quite ten per cent. During the same period, large mercantile concerns (class 1 on the German tax list) have increased in number from 7,000 to 8,000, or fourteen per cent. Smaller concerns (class 2 on the list), have increased from 11,000 to 12,300, or over ten per cent. Department stores are now in sixty-two cities, against sixty in 1904. Not a few are evidently distinctly below the rank of large commercial undertakings, as some eleven pay less than $1,200 tax annually. The growth of the business of department stores is more rapid than the simple increase in number, as these establishments paid twenty-eight per cent. more tax in 1906 than in 1904. Business houses of class 1 show an increase in taxation of twenty-three per cent. for the same period. Evidently the trend is steadily toward proportionately greater power and control of the commercial situation on the part of the larger aggregations of capital.

SHOW CARD WRITING

BY CRAFTSMAN. (Continued from August Number.)

Glue.

For pasting cardboard on frames, joining cards, pasting edging, or embossed ornaments, and for flitter work, use fish glue. Where you do not require large quantities you will find it put up in small tin cans or bottles. It should be thinned with water or vinegar. Apply with a soft bristle brush.

Paste.

Use ordinary flour paste, such as is used by paperhangers, to which you may add a quantity of glue, then thin with water and mix thoroughly. This paste is used for covering plain cardboard with the fancy or plain papers, which cannot be found in make-up sheets of cards.

Card Transparencies.

Card transparencies are made by cutting out the letters of figures that are to appear illuminated, by using a sharp knife, so that clean edges will be cut. At the back of these openings in the cardboard, paste colored tissue paper. The most durable method is to paste on the back some glazed linen, such as is used by the architects for drawing plans. On this can be painted any object not intended to be lit up. Foil paper, in various colors, like fire red, green, yellow, silver and gold, can be used to good advantage for such signs. Flitter ornamentation is also much used for this purpose. The card will, in this manner, be neatly decorated by day, and Show Cards Executed by H. C. MacDonald, with Richard Hall & Son, Peterborough.

The paper receives a liberal supply of paste, which is evenly spread on with a wide brush. It is smoothed down with a soft rag and the palm of the hand. Put weights on the cards until dry.

Cutting Dies.

When large quantities of odd-shaped tickets are required like Nos. 229, 233, 242, 244 and 247, in previous articles, it is advisable to cut them out by using hand or machine dies. A hand die is placed on from ten to twenty pieces of card, which is rested on a flat piece of solid wood or lead, placed on a heavy chopping block, anvil, or in the centre of a barrel of sand. The die, which has a long handle, is vigorously struck with a heavy mallet, which cuts out the shapes.

The machine die is placed under a drop press, which cuts out from 25 to 100 at each stroke.

when placed before a light at night, the linen will be illuminated in a mellow glow, which will be reflected from the foil or flitter ornamentation placed on its surface or around it.

Sample Letters.

Attractive styles of letters can be clipped from the magazines and newspapers during the month. You should have two pages for each letter of the alphabet. At the end of the month paste the letters on their respective papers. Within a year you will have a fine collection of odd styles, which you can readily copy, or transfer if you desire, by tracing. Initials and monograns can often be used to good advantage, and if you gather these for several years you will obtain a valuable collection.

We have refrained from giving the regular fonts of type styles in this series of articles, because all the student need do is to refer to magazines and he can copy them.

Initials.

Our illustrations offer the daintiest examples of scroll work done with the brush. The letter R in gold, with black scrolls, or red, with gold scrolls, makes a pleasing combination. The letter C, if lettered red, or blue, with a black or gold edge-line, and gold scrolls, is very pretty. The F offers a variety of opportunities for embellishment in color combinations. The letter in dark green, the lower outline in gold, and the leaves in bright green, would make a fine appearance in contrast to the other color combinations suggested. The letter P in black, with white edge-line on a red panel, and the scrolls in gold, would prove highly decorative.

The scrolled panel can be photo-engraved and mortised to hold any initial. Our last design, S.H., shows the possibilities for scroll designing in monogram work. Monograms should be simple, but the scroll-work may be quite elaborate.

Photo-Engraving.

We intend, briefly, to explain this process, avoiding technicalities, believing that the average publisher is misguided in casting so much mystery about these matters. If advertisers knew more about the preparation of designs and cuts they would be more reasonable in their expectations, less exacting as regards deliveries and better able to more intelligently place their orders. All the alphabets in this series of articles are photo-engravings, called "line engravings." A photograph is taken on glass from a design, which is usually drawn from two to four times the size required. The design is generally drawn in black on white, or white on black. All the scroll designs in these articles were drawn in white on black. After several processes, the photograph, which is black and white, is transferred or printed onto a piece of flat, smooth zinc.

Let us suppose that the illustrations in this article are being engraved. All of the lines are sticky after they are transferred, and the rest of the surface of the zinc plate is dry. An orange red powder, called dragons'-blood, which is made from a South American vegetable, is then put over the entire plate. The surplus dragons'-blood is shaken off and the plate dried over a gas jet. Then it is brushed over, and the plate is perfectly clean, but all of the lines on the plate are covered with the dragons'-blood. The back and sides of the plate are painted with asphaltum. When this is dry, the plate is immersed and constantly rocked in a solution containing one-ninth part acid. The acid eats away all the polished top surface of the zinc and cannot act on the lines covered with dragons'-blood. This process is repeated several times, and such parts as have not been eaten away are cut out (called routing out) with a rapidly-revolving knife-edged tool. The plate is then mounted on a wooden block, which, combined with the thickness of the zinc, makes it the same height as the printer's type.

The engraving is then ready for the printer. It is the practice, however, to first make an electrotype from the zinc photo-engraving, because, if anything should damage it while on the press, or it becomes worn, it will be necessary to make a new engraving, while the cost of an electrotype is trifling.

Electrotyping.

Electrotyping is generally done in a different establishment. The electrotyper takes a board, on which is spread a layer of wax about one-quarter inch thick. The photo-engraving is placed face down on this wax and pressure applied, so that when the engraving is removed all of the lines will be impressed into the wax. Powdered lead (graphite) is then applied to the entire impression or mold. The wax is then inserted into a chemical solution containing copper, which adheres to the wax and forms a thin shell of copper, containing every detail on the zinc plate. These shells are filled with molten lead and then blocked or backed with wood, ready for the printer.

CAN DUTY BE COLLECTED?

The resident buyer plan has given rise to a difference of opinion between the Canadian wholesalers and the Toronto Customs, with the result that a test case has been submitted to the Ottawa Department. The customs people say that duty should be paid by each firm on a proportionate cost of maintaining an English buyer, inasmuch as when an English commission agent is employed, the amount of the commission appears on his invoice, and is dutiable. The Canadian importer argues that there is no difference between sending a man to England, say, every season, and having a resident buyer in England. No levy was made by the department on the salary and expenses of the man sent from Canada, and the importer holds that no tax should be made on the resident buyer.

THE MARK WORKMAN COMPANY.

A Dominion charter has been granted The Mark Workman Company, Limited, Montreal, with a capital of $100,000, divided into $100 shares. The object of the company is "to manufacture, produce, buy, sell, import and export dry goods, clothing of every description (gentlemen's and ladies'), and housefurnishings of every kind, and raw material used therein, and any machine, tool or appliance used in the manufacture thereof, and any fixture, packing, label and advertising device used or useful in the marketing of any of the above articles, and to deal and trade in the same generally as principal or agent, both wholesale and retail; to acquire and take over as a going concern, including all its assets and liabilities, the business carried on alone by Mark Workman, one of the applicants, in Montreal, as a manufacturing wholesale and retail clothier." The incorporators were: Mark Workman, manufacturer; A. S. Workman, manager; Sol. L. Herman, accountant; C. A. Workman, merchant, and Levy Workman, merchant, all of Montreal.

BIG STORE FOR VANCOUVER.

The contract has been let for an eight-storey and basement brick building, for the retail dry goods firm of David Spencer, Limited, Vancouver. The contract price is $102,000, and work on the building will be started right away.

Canada's Exhibit at Dublin

It is One to Be Proud of—Part of an Advertising Campaign That Has Made Canada Known Throughout the World.

By Harold G. A. Ryan, Guelph.

If there was one time more than another when Canadians were particularly anxious to be asked their nationality, it was at the World's Exposition in Dublin this past Summer.

Among all the exhibits, Provincial, British and Foreign, that of young Canada—the result of Canadian forethought, intelligence and refinement—stood out, like Gibralter, from the surrounding sea.

It is by no means the writer's desire to belittle the efforts of other countries which were represented, but merely to give Canada that which belongs to her, and to other countries that which belongs to them. In doing this—in forming impartial opinions of the representations of all other exhibiting countries—one is bound to determine that the Canadian showing was first and foremost.

To stand inside the Canadian Buildings, with the throngs of people of other lands, was to hear, as the writer had the pleasure of hearing, remarks of good report on all sides, recommendations for Canada as a country, and praise to Canadians as a people.

It would be difficult to conceive of a more profitable advertisement for our land than was, and is, our Canadian exhibit. Our products were put before the people in a thoroughly comprehensive way, and it would be impossible to turn to any square foot of space and feel that it was not utilized to the very best advantage—in a manner calculated to advertise our country as a land of great resources, and to establish a belief in its citizens as an industrious, productive people of refinement, artistic temperament and good taste. All this it did, and did it well.

Concerning our immediate future, we have seen a few lines, in some papers, of a pessimistic nature; we have listened to words of similar tone from few such men—thank goodness there are just a few—but any such thoughts must surely fade in the sunshine of the high opinion of Canada that prevails in almost every country in the world. How can we cope with anything but success when the whole world is sending us men of ambition, equipped with financial and bodily strength? The former class is Canada's greatest need, and it is by no means to go unsatisfied. A wise Government, through an adequate system of advertising, has put the words, "Canada and Opportunity" in the mouths of the peoples of all lands, so that to-day finds us prominently and profitably in the public eye, with millions of outside capital to assist in our development, and there are many more millions on the way.

But a few years ago one could travel all over the British Isles and Europe and find every evidence of the fact that few of the inhabitants knew little of Canada beyond the fact that such a place existed. Almost invariably those who professed a wide knowledge were struggling with antiquated, stupendously-erroneous impressions, such as "Canada, the land of ice and snow," "Canada, inhabited by Indians and barbarians." The writer has been asked if the Indians were a peaceful people in his vicinity.

The dawn of Canada's great to-day portrays a vastly different state of affairs. Everything Canadian, or pertaining to Canada, interests the foreigners, and we travelers are many times asked for information of a class only required by the man who has some thoughts of molding his future in our country.

Wise judgment has enabled Canada and Canadians to be known as:

A people of concentrated ambition.
A land of opportunity.
A Dominion of noble men.
A country to allure and compensate.
A people of determined efforts.
A land where assiduity is rewarded.

To turn again to the Canadian exhibit, it is in point of contrast that the result of our efforts is judged. It is in point of contrast that the Canadian exhibit has been pronounced the exhibit of exhibits at Dublin. It is in point of contrast that Canada is selected above all other countries as a desirable land for the making of the new home, and it is in point of contrast that our advertising leads to a belief in us as a people and in Canada as a country.

Let us advertise wisely. Let us intrust such a momentous responsibility to competent hands, realizing that money—no matter what the amount may be—cannot be wasted, if, combined with good judgment, it succeeds in making others see us in a true light; in unfolding to the world this one and last point:

"Canada, the Land of Opportunity."

A QUESTION RE DISCOUNTS.

Editor Dry Goods Review: In your special Fall number, on page 44, you quote R. Waldron, Kingston, as saying: "Our cash discounts pay all salaries, and we have thirty to thirty-five hands." Kindly ask Mr. Waldron, through your next issue where he buys his dry goods, millinery, etc., to get such large discounts.

FANCY GOODS AND NOTIONS

In spite of the weather conditions, which have held back trade in many lines, this year has been a banner one in the fancy goods section. The Spring and Summer seasons have been most satisfactory. With the best-selling period of the year yet to come, 1907 promises to be a record one in this department. Extensive preparations have been made for the early season, but novelties for the later trade, and for the holiday season, are now being shown.

For the Christmas season every drygoodsman buys a stock of fancy goods and notions. He must do so to accord with the all-pervading spirit of the time and keep the people coming to his store. Gift goods are the thing, and a big demand exists, without cultivation, for everything, from a small toy to an expensive piece of jewelry. No merchant carries so extensive a range, but still all may conveniently and profitably stock quite a wide variety. This department should be brought to the fore for a while, and given all the opportunity possible to show splendid returns.

The merchant has a big field, and often finds his buying a very knotty problem, that is, if he is not following the same course as last year, and wishes to branch out and do something better than ever. A thousand and one articles strike him, but he knows he can only stand about so many. He looks at last year's orders and finds he had so much of this and so much of that. Then the idea occurs to him to buy less of these particular goods and extend his range. This plan is the correct one. Variety should be the keynote in buying, and the reflection of this policy in the stock will be just what is required. To satisfy the Christmas shopper, a store must have gift articles of many kinds.

The quality of each line which should be stocked is a vexed question with many. Our advice is that the greatest number of lines be purchased, each in small quantity. Very often it is advisable to order only one-half, one-quarter, or even one-twelfth dozen. However, variety is the chief point in the laying in of a stock that will attract strongly, and at the same time prove profitable.

In fancy goods warehouses there is a bewildering array of articles from which a merchant might well have some difficulty in choosing. He cannot go far astray, however, if he sticks to the plan outlined above.

A Japanese Department.

To the merchant who is in search of a novel attraction for Christmas trade, for his fancy goods section, the suggestion is made that he install a Japanese department. It will not be expensive to do this, as there are so many useful articles available. Prices, as a rule, are very reasonable, and with a little management this department could be made a decided success.

Just now travelers are starting out on their Fall trips and are displaying all the latest novelties in Japanese fancy goods for Christmas trade. A few of the lines shown are: Antimony ware, all kinds of baskets, to retail at five cents up, toys and screens, as well as silk and cotton kimonos, table centre-pieces, linen and silk handkerchiefs, embroidered silk handkerchiefs, and Japanese silk in all widths and qualities.

Customers can rely on good deliveries, if orders are placed early.

The Comb Trade.

Combs continue their enormous vogue. The tendency is now entirely in favor of the highback or Spanish variety. Handsome novelties are showing, and they touch both extremes. There is the back that is studded solid with brilliants, and, newer than all the highback comb of plain, unornamented shell. The latter are at present being shown chiefly in high-grade goods, but cheaper lines are also expected.

Jeweled effects are very prominent, and, particularly, in Christmas novelties, are very handsome. Many of course, are high-priced, but there seems to be no particular anxiety as to their sale. Ball and oval effects, mounted high, are very popular. Big balls and ovals of brilliants, or brilliants and other jewels, in striking designs, are shown. Cut and pressed steel trimmings promise great popularity, and there is expected to be a good demand for jet.

Barrettes are in greater demand than ever, owing to the very loose modes of dressing the hair that the new millinery styles impose. The favorite barrettes are of jeweled shell. This is not wonderful, as they are pretty and very becoming.

Bags and Purses.

Shopping bags, vanity bags, opera bags, etc., are out in big variety. Though those of leather are the useful choice the ultra taste is favoring those of metal mesh. These come in gilt, silver gray, silver, and nickel and silver. The mash work is very fine, and the novelty idea is to have it shirred onto the mount. The latest opera bags are of tapestry, and the range is particularly rich in dainty and artistic color blendings.

Manufacturers of bags and purses, etc., are finding trade satisfactory in all lines. At present the twin-handle bag is quite a favorite. This is procurable in all leathers and in suitable colors. It is sold to the retailers at from $4.50 per dozen up. In the purse trade, quite a feeling is being experienced for the twin-handle fancy purses. These are prettily decorated, and when the holiday trade opens up at retail, ought to secure a fair share of the business. The soft squaw bag will also prove a valuable acquisition to the notion department, as it is entirely new. This bag has sold exceptionally well in the United States, and has only been taken hold of here.

Belt Lines Active.

The belt question is a big one, and as in the Spring, no one kind is supreme. There is a distinct return to narrower fashions, and elastics, both steel studded and in fancy patterns, will be, perhaps, the leading line. Tinsels, in silver and gold, both solid and in patterns, on white or colored grounds, especially in popular priced lines, have a big lead. Though these beltings can be retailed at a low price, there is nothing cheap about their appearance, and they promise, from their attractiveness, to be among the big features of the season. Tinsel is just as high in fashionable favor as ever it has been in the past two or three years. The latest Pari trimming schemes all make a free but judicious use of tinsel. It is partly to this restrained use, and also to the fact that gold, silver and other metal effects, play a prominent part in the present styles, that tinsel owes its long period of favor.

As The Review has been predicting for the past two or three months, there is a strong return to silk belts. The best liked styles are shirred effects, and there is nothing particularly new about the models. White and black—the leading Fall colors, and Dresdens, are all selling.

There is a tendency to have the buckle match the color of the belt, or to harmonize in some manner, and buckles are steel-studded, jeweled and enameled. Handsome enameled and jeweled buckles are used upon the higher grade belts. Back ornaments promise to be a factor as the season progresses, and many styles of belts can be fastened either at the back or front, at pleasure.

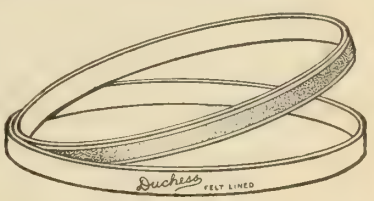
Many styles of leather belts are selling, ranging from inexpensive crush belts to handsome and high-priced models, elaborately trimmed and studded with steel. For the time being, golden brown and tans have the lead, but white and patent leather belts are also selling.

The Magic Curler.

Fancy Jewelry.

The taste for wearing fancy jewelry that is pretty rather than expensive is growing, and a separate section devoted to this class of goods should prove attractive and very profitable, particularly for the holiday season. In this line may be included pearl and jet dog-collars, higher-priced back combs, barrettes, brooches, neck chains, La Vallieres pendants, hatpins, stickpins, buckles, etc., as well as bags—mesh vanity bags, opera bags, etc. These would all make useful and highly ornamental presents.

Hatpins a Big Factor.



Hatpins are to be a big factor this Fall, as they will be necessary from both a useful and ornamental point of view. The big hats require an extra number of pins to fasten them securely in place. No matter what the shape of the head of the pin size is its most prominent feature. The big ball heads are just as popular as ever, but big disc or mushroom shaped heads promise to be good as well. This mushroom shape is most seen in expensive pins, or silver, gun-metal and rolled gold. These pins are also set with turquoises, coral and other semi-precious stones. Handsome shell cameo pins in empire settings are shown.

A Marcel Waver.

Perhaps the notion buyer will not be much interested in the fact that hats are large this Fall, or that the hair must be waved and fluffed out to make them becoming to their wearers. He will, however, be interested in the fact that he can sell with good profit, a curler that will make the popular Marcel wave. This ingenious little article does perfectly, and with little trouble, what heretofore has required a visit to the hair-dresser. The way of the Magic Curler has been carefully prepared by extensive advertising in such widely read publications as Vogue, Ladies' Home Journal, Dress, Delineator and others of the same class and standing. This curler is not an experiment, as it has made a big selling success in the United States.

Additional dry goods stores are, day by day, putting in a stock of picture post cards. These cards are not only profitable, but serve to attract customers, and in numerous cases other sales result. The business is increasing at an enormous rate, and many new firms are constantly appearing, while the older-established concerns are taxed to meet the demand. Local cards, such as views of prominent buildings, etc., are meeting with popular favor. Post card albums continue to prove a valuable acquisition to the trade. Very fine albums can be had from the jobber at from $7 to $21 per dozen.

Belts, handkerchiefs, beaded bags, dolls, combs, mechanical toys, china, calendars, cushions, etc.—it would be useless for us to attempt enumeration of the multitude of fancies that are to be picked from. But we would again emphasize the desirability of great variety, and small quantity of each line.

COLONIAL CRAVAT COMPANY.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Colonial Cravat Company, Limited, Toronto, with a capital of $40,000, divided into $50 shares. The object of the company is "to acquire and take over the men's furnishing business of G. W. Nixon & Company, and to carry on business, both wholesale and retail, of general dry goods merchants, drapers, haberdashers, milliners, dressmakers, tailors, dealers, furriers, clothiers, hosiers, gloves and general outfiters." The incorporators were: G. W. Nixon, merchant; E. C. Berkinshaw, manufacturers' agent; J. M. Wilson, civil engineer; E. S. Brown, salesman, and W. D. Earngey, barrister-at-law, all of Toronto.

A GREAT ADVERTISER'S VIEWS.

Talleyrand's famous axiom, "Nothing succeeds like success," does not convey much comfort to those who are still struggling along the uphill road, and have not yet sighted the crowning point, beyond which it is easy running. Each success, however, carries its own lesson with it, and it is always interesting and informing to hear a successful man talk of his achievements and relate his experiences. A representative of the "Magazine of Commerce" recently interviewed Thomas J. Barratt, chairman and managing director of Messrs. A. and F. Pears, Limited, manufacturers of Pears soap, for the purpose of eliciting his views on advertising methods generally. As one of the most conspicuous embodiments of modern advertising success, Mr. Barratt can say something illuminating on the matter. A man who has spent nearly three millions sterling in advertising, and spent it so well that the business of which he has had, and has, the advertising control has grown from modest to gigantic dimensions, may fairly be regarded as an authority on advertising publicity in all its branches. Here are a few of Mr. Barratt's hints on advertising:

"There is one all-important point that an advertiser has, or ought, to settle with himself and his own conscience before he begins to advertise at all: Is the article he wants to advertise worthy of having its praises sung and its name flourished far and wide?"

"Just captivate the public with it. When the public are captivated they are captured—that is, if the article is all right."

"There is much reckless advertising and much decidedly inartistic advertising nowadays."

"In advertising you have to try for 'bull's-eyes' every time. You have to be making your mark year in and year out, and advertising the marks as they are made."

"If you blow the trumpet too hard you make discord, and people turn away; whereas, if you blow skilfully and gracefully, they listen."

"In the large methods of advertising we have adopted, the formulation of a new campaign means as much expenditure of thought as is devoted to the production of a new opera or play, and often costs far more to carry out."

"The more successful your advertising is, the cheaper is your production, the increased demand putting it into your power to effect economies that to the small producer would be impossible."

NOTORIOUS SHOP-LIFTERS.

A Hamilton detective warned the dry goods merchants one day recently, that two Buffalo women, notorious shtp-lifters were in the city. He says that they operated in Toronto at exhibition time last year, and were, evidently, going to try the same field again. After exhibition they "worked" same plans through Ontario. They go by the names of "Sadie" and "Annie," the former being a married woman, and the latter her husband's sister. Sadie is very tall; Annie quite short, and both dress well. The mode of operating is for the tall one to go into a store, alone, to look at goods. While thus engaged, the short one saunters along, apparently just looking at things, and not recogizing her companion. When the opportunity comes, Sadie slips a parcel to Annie, who quietly saunters out, and, if the parcel is missed, Sadie is safe, as no stolen goods can be found on her.

SPLENDID SMALLWARES DEPARTMENT.

The W. R. Brock Company have given over the en tire second floor of their Toronto warehouse to the s allwares department, the ladies' ready-to-wear section being moved into the large wing. The change has been a splendid one for both, giving room for much more stock and infinitely better facilities for display. In the smallwares department, which now occupies 11,200 square feet, the aisles have been widened and the stock arranged most attractively. Better light has also been secured, a feature that is of material importance. We have already described the ready-to-wear section. W. R. Smallpiece, one of the directors of the firm, is manager and buyer of the smallwares

Spring Sample Lines About Ready—Prices High—Stocks Clear and Prospects Excellent—Better Goods Will Lead.

Samples of knitted underwear for the Spring and Summer of 1908 are now about ready. Travelers are starting out on their routes in high feather as they consider there is every prospect for an excellent season. Retailers are bare of stock, in this department, on account of the weather conditions that have prevailed. The long-continued cold spell in the Spring cleared the shelves, both in jobbing houses and retail stores, of heavy goods. This same condition retarded, for a while, the sale of Spring and Summer goods, and cut heavily into the repeat trade. However, when the warm days did come, Summer stocks were cleared, and with little or no sacrifice of profit. Therefore, this section is in good shape, and orders for 1908 should be heavy.

While the cold Spring, certainly, cut into the volume of the Summer trade, by almost eliminating repeat orders, it also lessened the troubles of both manufacturer and jobber. Had there been an extra call for goods, a good deal of friction would have ensued, and the chances are that many orders would only have been filled with difficulty, or would have not been filled at all. The absence of Summer repeats also enabled the manufacturer to place himself in better shape.

Coming down to the price question, which is always important at the entering in of a new buying season, prices are high, and, as at present figured out, prospects of any change in this respect appear to be remote. All classes of manufacturers who are heavy users of cotton fabrics have placed big orders far in advance, and the demand for raw cotton, from the mills, is large. Though there is a considerable quantity of the old season's crop of cotton yet on hand, the quality is poor. The size of the new crop is as yet uncertain, but a doubtful note has been sounded.

Prospects are that deliveries will not be up to the mark, and that a scarcity will develop. In view of these conditions, the retailer should be careful with whom he places his order, and he should not be easily tempted by apparent price concessions into turning down old business friends and connections. The chances are that he will find a long buying connection an excellent stand-by, in the coming season, and one that it will be worth paying a few cents more on some lines to retain. He will then feel sure of having the goods in the department when wanted.

It is altogether likely, that there will be less buying of cheap grade goods than usual. Nor is the manufacturer making so much play, as in previous seasons, to this class of trade. With the raw material high, and the demand on his machinery so great, he is not going to waste time in producing goods that will net only a few cents profit for himself and for the retailer when sold. Merchants who insist upon having these cheap goods can find them, but they will also find that they fully look their price—so much so, that when shown to the buying public the few cents between the low grade and the better garment, will be cheerfully paid.

Many merchants, who have been heavy buyers of low-grade goods will now only stock a few dozens, so that they will have them on hand to make a sale in the few cases where price is the sole factor considered. They will, however, not be pushed.

Golfers, Sweaters and Fancy Lines

Brighter Outlook for These Goods This Fall—Great Interest Taken in Fancy Lines.

There is more interest manifested in this class of goods than for some seasons past, and exceedingly good business is looked for. Even at this early date there is a brisk retail demand, wherever a showing of these goods have been made. This interest, on the part of the buying public, is giving buyers confidence, and larger orders are now coming in. Blouse models show no new feature, but are selling freely, and may be put down as the staple end of the line. Novelties come in the smart, trig coat styles, in pony, Norfolk and comfortable and convenient coat

Seasons Bring Changes

We are now entering on another season and while some manufacturers' experience leads them to improve their production season after season, Paton's Alloa Knitting Yarn remains the same, no alteration whatever—and the only reason for this is that

It cannot be made better

If it were possible to improve it, it would be improved—but it cannot be improved—it cannot be made better. It has stood the test for one hundred years for being smooth, evenly made, giving warmth and good wear. If the yarn you keep has not such a record as this kindly write to Montreal branch.

sweaters. The latter is exactly the same shape as those for men's wear, and is safe to be popular, as it is right in line with the mannish tailored fashions, the vogue this Fall. These coats come in numerous fancy stitches and white is the big seller. There is a growing feeling for scarlet, and navy is, as usual, in good demand.

From now on, and up to the end of the holiday season, there is always a good sale for fancy knitted goods —infants' wool jackets, boottees, gaiters, etc. There is rarely much that is new in these goods, but dainty effects and combinations are shown. These are always in demand, and realize handsome profits. Knit and crochet bedroom slippers are also good holiday sellers. Fancy shawls and scarves, in light, lacy patterns, knitted from fancy wools, and in silk, and silk and wool mixture, promise to be well taken.

Hosiery

A Call for Tans and Browns Likely for the Early Season —Another Good White Hosiery Season Expected.

There is little change in the market situation. Prices continue firm, and possibilities are that further advances will be made. Fall selling at retail has scarcely opened, and there is little to note as yet. There is every indication of a strong call for tans and browns developing in the early days of the coming season. This is expected to give way to black, for general wear, when cold and stormy weather arrives. The fancy end of the trade promises to be a heavier factor than for many years, and more colored hosiery than ever will sell for dressy wear. Embroidered hose remains the big favorite, both in self colors and in contrasting effects.

Those retailers who order direct, and the large jobbing houses, placed orders for Spring, 1908, unusually early this year. This was done to be sure of deliveries, and to have stocks on hand when the selling season opens. Even though orders have been placed so much earlier than usual, buyers are none too sure of the goods being delivered according to promise.

Another feature that is significant also is the exceptionally heavy ordering of goods in the gray, so that they can be dyed up later, when the color tendency develops. Deep tans and browns are sure of a heavy season. Trade promises to open up early in these shades, and the chances are that they will be retired only for a brief period during the most inclement part of the Winter. The selling of tan and brown footwear was pronounced in the early days of February in New York, and other American cities, and it is more than possible that the demand will come in the Canadian cities almost equally as early in 1908.

Some buyers expect blue hosiery to do well next Spring. It is certain that various shades of blue will sell extensively in dress fabrics and wash materials. As there is a tendency for the hose to match the gown rather than the shoe, should this develop, blue hosiery should be well worn next Spring. White has the confidence of the buyer for Summer selling, and extensive orders have been placed for 1908. Colors promise to sell even better than in the Summer now passing. and should this fashion of matching the gown extend, in many departments the colored line will be an important one. Embroidered goods take precedence over laces, except in children's goods. Children's hose, in colors, follows much the same lines as those of their elders.

"CEETEE"

is one of the few underwears you ought to sell, because it gives the highest degree of comfort and satisfaction to the wearer. Besides, "CEETEE" is velvety, fits perfectly, cannot shrink and pays well.

Perfect-Fitting Elastic-Ribbed Underwear

is a particular favorite with women and children. Mothers insist on it for their babes, because it is as soft and comfy as underwear can be made.

☞ The margin of profit on both these brands is more than reasonable.

"There's a reason for our success."

KNITTED CLOTH IN GERMANY.

U. S. Consul, Thomas H. Norton, reports that knitted cloth is manufactured on a large scale in Chemnitz and the adjacent region from both silk and mercerized cotton yarns, the methods being as fololws:

Special forms of chain frames are used for the purpose. Frames of German make produce goods up to 75 inches in length; those of English makes attain 120 inches. These knitted fabrics are made in a great variety of grades and colors and are used extensively in glove manufacture. Apart from the direct use of the material for gloves, there is a large demand for the finer silk products as a lining for the heavier varieties of gloves. When used as a lining for kid gloves the tissue is pasted into place. In the case of woolen and cotton gloves it is attached by sewing.

Less extensive is the use of these knitted cloths for underwear, and for this purpose the mercerized product is chiefly employed. The bulk of the knitted cloth made in Saxony is used by the manufacturers themselves as described, or is sold to near-by glove and underewear factories. Very little is exported. France is the best customer among European countries. At present it is exceedingly difficult for foreign buyers to secure knitted cloth at any price. The entire output is contracted for months ahead to meet the needs of Saxony glove makers.

CHINESE LACE MANUFACTURE.

The subjoined report regarding the manufacture of lace in Amoy is made by U. S. Consul H. L. Paddock:

The lace is made at the Amoy Lace Guild, a charitable organization having as its purpose the providing of a source of income to indigent Chinese women and children. The guild was founded by a Mrs. Broadbent in 1885, and has always been under the management of some foreign lady. Prior to the establishment of the guild the art of lace making was unknown among local Chinese, and the present industry is due solely to the fact that Mrs. Broadbent educated a few Chinese women and children in the art at the time she founded the guild.

Under the patronage of the Honk Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation and the able management of its present secretary, Miss Frances Randell, the lace guild has been progressing and its capacity has been quadrupled, which puts it in the field as a lace-making institution capable of meeting the competition from lace centres in other parts of the world.

The lace made is in its general character very similar to torchon lace and to Irish bobbin lace. In its manufacture practically the same method is used as in bobbin lace. Patterns are drawn on a stiff paper, and the design is pricked over by a special set of workers. The pricked design is then placed upon a cushion, and in each of the holes outlining the pattern a small pin is placed. About these pins, linen thread is twisted and woven, entirely by hand, until the entire design is produced.

A knowledge of drawing is necessary to design the patterns. As the Chinese do not possess a knowledge of art that renders them competent to design the necessary patterns, the guild is compelled to import its patterns from England and Ireland. The linen thread used is pure Irish linen imported directly by the guild.

Samples, Prices, and Supply.

The high grade of work done can be appreciated by a comparison of the samples forwarded (and on exhibit at the Bureau of Manufacturers) with the work from other lace centres, and it is worth mentioning that the Amoy Lace Guild received a silver medal and diploma at the St. Louis exposition in 1904 and the silver medal at the Hong Kong exposition in 1906. The samples sent are taken at random from the stock of yard lace at the guild. Attached to each of the samples are small tags giving prices per yard or piece in local Amoy currency, which is approximately of the same value as Mexican currency. Prices are also given in United States currency.

The great aptitude of the Chinese for work of the character that lace making requires and their manual dexterity make the possibilities of this local industry enormous. Foreign firms are becoming interested, and the guild is now shipping lace to European and Canadian cities. I believe that American dealers should look into this local industry as to the possibility of its becoming a source from which to obtain a high-grade hand-made lace at exceedingly low prices.

Many of the designs made here would not be profitable for American dealers to handle, as they would come into competition with machine-made laces of similar design, which serve the purposes for which they are intended equally as well and at prices far below what hand-made lace could be sold for. But there are numerous other designs which can not be duplicated in machine-made goods, and for which there is a great demand in the United States. It is this latter class that American dealers should consider.

The Draper: "Did you find out what the gentleman wanted?"

The Assistant: "No, but I found out what he didn't want."

The Draper: "What? How dare you?"

The Assistant: "And I sold it to him."

8 MACHINES
instead of 7,000 WOMEN

In the Stanfield mills at Truro there are 8 machines that do the work of 7,000 women with spinning wheels. These machines—being machines—do their work in the same way, day in and day out.
When they convert the wool into yarn, it is always the same.
Naturally, the saving in labor of the modern machine over the old-fashioned spinning wheel, is enormous.
This saving in cost reduces the selling price.
That is why Stanfield's Underwear is so good, yet costs so little.
If you want the Underwear that builds business—and makes good profits for all the year round—you certainly ought to stock Stanfield's. Write for samples.

At the Advanced Openings

A Highly-attractive Showing—Plain Clothes Predominate —Evique and Peacock the Ultra Colors.

There has been more than usual buying from open stocks this Fall, and therefore, the big influx of buyers to the openings has made things busy in the jobbing houses. Jobbers have made the most complete preparations for the openings. Shipments have been hurried forward, in order that goods might be actually in stock. At least they will leave the jobbing houses promptly, but what the forwarding companies will do with them is another matter. Especially when goods have to be forwarded west, great complaint is made of the length of time they are in transit.

The big city stores have been holding their advance openings during the past two weeks. In the dress department there is as yet nothing in the nature of the unexpected showing. Though there are well defined ideas as to the standing of materials and colors, they lack as yet the test of actual selling. One fact clearly brought out, is the big lead of plain materials over fancies, and the deep, soft, rich shades of the new colorings. This certainly is to be a big season for novelty shades, and for colors that are a little out of the ordinary and that are deep and rich in tone. Judging from the displays now made, this is a season when dress fabrics are to be extra attractive.
